SUGAR MILL FINISHES CAMPAIGN THIS WEEK

Two Fires Here Within Two Days Last Week

Schooler Residence Catches Fire On Tuesday Night; Griesy Hardware Store Ablaze On Thursday.

FIRE TRUCK PROVES WORTH

Belmond was visited by two fires within two days last week, when the house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schooler, on east Spruce street, caught fire late Tuesday night, or rather on Wednesday morning, and the Griesy hardware store was discovered ablaze Thursday noon.

The Schooler residence was found on fire about half past two Wednesday morning. The siren was sounded—and it was enough to wake the dead—and the fire company was on the scene in short order. The blaze was confined to the interior of the dwelling, little damage being done to the outside of the building. The interior, however, was pretty well destroyed, and a large part of the furniture was ruined by the fire and water. Some of the furniture was carried out, and stored in the office of the Belmond Lumber cmpany and the Klemme Lumber company. The loss to the Schooler family, however, was heavy and was covered partially by insurance.

Mr. and Mrs. Schooler appear to be running in hard luck when it comes to fires, as this is the second fire that has visited them within the past year or two. They lost a large part of their household goods by fire while residing in the H. C. Thompson residence on south Filbert street.

The luckiest fire that has occurred here in a long time was that of the Griesy hardware store, on Thursday, about the noon hour. Cato Griesy turned in the alarm when he discovered the rear room of his store on fire. There were three barrels of oil and gasoline stored there, and when discovered the fire was eating up the sides of the barrels and with but a few minutes more would have caused an explosion. The fire company was on the job in short order, and their prompt work with the chemical truck was all that saved everything in the block as far as Bohning's store from being destroyed, as the fire could never have been stopped had it once got started. The chemical truck proved its worth at this fire when chemicals were used on the oil blaze, which water would only have spread.

Damage was slight, the blaze being under control before it had much of a chance to spread.

The siren, sounding so close to the noon hour, fooled a great many people who thought that the 12:00 o'clock signal was being sounded, and was the source of considerable comment regarding the advisability of sounding the siren at noon. Some were of the opinion that the siren should not be sounded except in case of an alarm, believing that in such a case as the fire Thursday, it resulted in lost time in determining whether there was a fire or not. Others were of the opinion that it was a good thing to sound the siren at the noon hour, as in doing it they would know if the siren was working good or not. It was the universal opinion, however, that the fire company or the authorities should make public directions on how to turn in an alarm of fire, and that the various stations about town be made a matter of common knowledge. Few people know that there are to be such stations, and only a few know where any of them are located. A public statement by the city authorities or the fire company regarding the positions of the stations and the way to sound the alarm would seem in order, and likely to result in much benefit to all concerned.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH YEARLY REPORT FINE

The family dinner and congregational meeting on last Tuesday was well attended. There were about one hundred that were present to enjoy the excellent dinner and to take part in the business meeting. The reports from the different auxiliaries as well as of the church treasurer shows the church to be in good condition financially. The good feeling that was manifest at the meeting as well as during the year gives good evidence of a good spirit among the whole family. The report of the treasuries of the church showed that on January 1, 1920 the account overdrawn to the amount of $67.21, and that there was received during the year the sum of $4,004.30 and that he paid out $3633.22, which left on hand Dec. 28, 2920, $301.87.

The Ladies Aid Society had on hand according to the treasurer's report the first of the year $698.86, and they received during the year $596.70 and paid out $650.14, which left them on hand $645.42.

The report for the Ladies Missionary society is for the six months beginning July 1, 1920. Cash on hand $27.43; receipts to Dec. 28, $50.40, paid out $36.17, leaving a balance on hand Dec. 28, 1920 of $41.66. This is the first year that the missionary society has co-operated fully with the Iowa Womans Board.

The report of the Sunday school superintendent showed an average increase in attendance over the previous year of thirty. The financial report is not before me so will give that part next week.

We start into the new year with a clean slate upon which we hope to be able to write a better record this year than we did last. If we do we must have the help of every member and friend of the church. Will you help by being present upon every service of the Sabbath that it is possible for you to attend and will you try to bring with you your friends who do not go to any church? Start next Sunday to Sabbath school at 10-00 a. m.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

In memory of comrade George L. Cutler.

Commander: It is our sad duty to report to you that Comrade George L. Cutler, a late member of company F. of the 2nd Iowa Cavalry during the war of the Rebellion, and who was a tried, true and faithful member of Whited Post No. 247, Department of Iowa G. A. R., was on December 26, 1920, called by our Great Commander to the Grand Army above.

Wherefore, we, your committee, in testimony of his loyalty to his country when her glorious principles of freedom were assailed, of his private character as a citizen, and as a true and loyal member of the Grand Army of the Republic, recommend that a copy of these expressions of our regard for the fallen comrade be sent to his family.

John P. Byers, Chaplain,
G. W. Cram, Adjutant,
Committee.
D. L. Cuppett, Commander.

WRIGHT COUNTY FAIR GROUNDS ARE SOLD AT AUCTION

The following dispatch appeared in the Des Moines Register Monday:

CLARION, Jan. 2—The Wright county fair grounds were sold at sheriff's sale this morning to satisfy a mortgage for $6,650. The mortgage was held by J. B. Uhl of Des Moines. A second claim for lumber in the sum of $2,400 was held by the Farmers Elevator company, and in order to protect their interests the president, Thomas Shillington, bid in the grounds at $9,407. Several hundred dollars in other claims will be cancelled by the sale.

The grounds comprise forty acres and located as they are within the city limits, are easily worth $300 an acre and there is no doubt but what the fair association will redeem the property within the year allowed by law.

It is also understood that a movement is already under way to hold the usual annual fair next fall.

Community Club Meeting Is Much Enjoyed

Interesting Meeting Held Last Friday With Lesson on The Great American Poets.

IMPROVEMENTS ARE PLANNED

The meeting of the Community Welfare Club last Friday was enjoyed very much by those present.

The chairman, Mrs. R. H. Klemme, being absent, the business meeting was conducted by Mrs. W. R. Ramsay, vice president. The committees investigating the plans for civic improvements reported what had been done so far. Many improvements are being planned but nothing definite has been decided upon.

The program was led by Mrs. W. C. Tyrrell, the subject being American Poets. It was very interesting and instructive as well.

Mrs. Amy Peterson gave a talk on Longfellow and Whittier, both poets of the Civil War period. Mrs. McBurney talked about Lowell and Holmes, who were also poets of the same period. Miss Hazel Tomas gave a talk on the southern poets, Edgar Allen Poe, Sidney Lanier and Henry Timrod. Mrs. H. F. Luick told about Ella Wheeler Wilcox and Henry Van Dyke, both western poets. Mrs. H. L. Gowdy told about Eugene Fields and James Riley, who were also western poets. Mrs. C. O. Fitts sang the song, by Riley, "There, Little Girl, Don't Cry."

Mrs. C. O. Fitts and Miss Maud Newgord sang a very pleasing duet. Miss Elizabeth Leinbach gave the reading, "The First Christmas Roses." Miss Carol Tyrrell entertained the club with a pretty piano solo.

A good social time was spent while the serving committee with Mrs. Flynn as chairman served dough nuts and coffee.

CHRISTMAS FAMILY REUNION

A family reunion and big Christmas dinner was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wolle Those present were Wm C., C. J. and wife and children, H. J., H. R. and Miss Bernice. There were twelve seated at the dinner table, a few personal friends being invited. They all pronounced the occasion and the dinner one of the most enjoyable of their experience. Howard Wolle is now residing at Fort Dodge where he is employed with the Monarch Telephone company, Will is connected with Morningside College at Sioux City, and Carl resides at Nevada, Iowa.

OBITUARY

G. L. CUTLER

G. L. Cutler pioneer resident of Wright county and long a familiar figure on the streets of this city, departed this life last Sunday, being a patient at the Sams hospital Mr. Cutler underwent an operation a few days previous, following a brief but severe illness at his home. Some hopes were entertained for his recovery, the patient himself being very courageous and cheerful, but his span of life had been reached and death terminated a long and useful career.

Geo. L. Cutler was a native of Ohio, born at Cleveland, April 23,

1843. His parents lived at Freeport, Illinois, a few years but while George was yet a boy they came west and located at Belmond, this county. For thirty-two years this community was his home, and all the older residents here knew and respected him for his fine traits of character.

At the age of twenty-one he enlisted in the second Iowa cavalry and served nine months in the Civil War. He experienced the privations of the pioneer, but met such difficulties with a cheerful and sturdy spirit. He was not of the roving and adventurous type, but the sort of man who is useful in building up a stable community life.

For some years he was engaged in agriculture, and some years were given to the work of carpentering in Belmond. He was also a partner in the merchandising business for a period.

August 30th., 1868, Mr. Cutler was married to Martha J. Morse of Belmond, whose father was Judge John L. Morse. The fiftieth anniversary of this union was happily celebrated less than three years ago. Two sons, Ora and Claire, were laid away in their young manhood in the family burying ground at Belmond. A faithful wife and beloved daughter, Mrs. Susan M. Lockwood of this city, also four grandchildren and two great grandchildren survive.

Mr. Cutler was a hale looking man and youthful in spirits, so that many did not realize he had passed his 77th milestone. He was a man of many friends, being fair minded and congenial.

The Cutler family has lived in Clarion since 1887, when Mr. Cutler took up the duties of county recorder. He served six years in this capacity and afterwards engaged in the grocery business. Since retiring from active pursuits he has still served the county as a member of the collaterial inheritance tax commission and has been active in various relationships in the community life. He had been identified with the local I. O. O. F. for many years, transferring his membership from Belmond.

Mr. Cutler has been all his life the kind of citizen who is an asset to any community, honest, friendly, intelligent, stable and forward-looking. His personality made an impress upon two towns and in both he will be greatly missed by many friends.

A funeral service was held at the family home at eleven o'clock yesterday (Tuesday), conducted by Rev. J. F. Jamieson of the United Presbyterian church. The Congregational quartet furnished the music. The pall-

HAS TURNED OUT APPROXIMATELY 80,000 BAGS

Sugar Factory Shut Down For Few Days Until All Beets Arrive At Factory.

EXPECT TO FINISH THIS WEEK

Besides 80,000 Bags Of Sugar Mill Has Turned Out Approximately 2,000 Tons of Pulp.

The mill of the Iowa Valley Sugar company, Belmond's greatest industry will close the campaign sometime this week it is expected.

The mill was shut down temporarily for a few days this week, until the remainder of the beets arrive at the factory. There are about 500 tons of beets yet to be delivered to the factory, and it is estimated that they will require about two days to cut. Normally 500 tons would be only a day's run, but owing to the condition of the beets and the slow way in which they have to be handled it requires a little longer time.

During the campaign the mill has turned out approximately 80,000 bags of sugar, one hundred pounds to the bag, or in the neighborhood of 8,000,000 pounds of sugar.

Besides this, they have turned out a by-product of approximately 2,000 tons of pulp, used in feeding stock.

To make this amount of sugar required in the neighborhood of thirty-five thousand tons of beets. A very much larger tonnage than this was harvested, but a considerable part of them were shipped to another factory during the harvest season to avoid excessive accumulation and consequent loss.

For these beets the farmers in the vicinity of Belmond and the other stations where beets were secured, received in the neighborhood of five hundred thousand dollars.

It required around one hundred thousand dollars for the wages of the operating force alone during the campaign.

It took seventy-five thousand dollars worth of coal to make steam and keep the wheels turning, and ten thousand dollars worth of limestone to purify the beet juice.

The average number of employees during the campaign was two hundred and ten.

These figures give a faint estimate of what the sugar factory has meant to Belmond in the way of employment and money spent in the community.

At the close of the campaign the factory will be closed until about the first or fifteenth of March, when the work will begin in overhauling the tremendous amount of machinery in the plant. A certain number of employees will be retained for this and other work, the exact number not being known yet.

Belmond has derived an immense benefit from the operation of the factory, the largest industry in the county and one of the largest in the state. It has released money in the community when nothing else was being moved, the cash paid farmers for the beets was nearly the only ready money flowing, and it kept a steady circulation of cash in the town when other communities were scratching for money with which to do business with last fall. The employment furnished has been of immense benefit to th community, the work was steady and the wages good, and it was employment during months when labor is not greatly in demand. The hundred thousand dollars paid out by the company in wages during the campaign has almost all been local, has remained here and been placed in circulation here, which has meant a great deal to Belmond business as well as to Belmond people.

John Huyck of Kanawha was in town last week Wednesday on his way to Garner to visit at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank Hanson and family.

Court House News

Marriage licenses for Christmas week: Andrew Scott and Mary Severtson, Hans Olsen and Susan Severtson, Harvey E. Bohler and Edith Forestal.

J. C. Peterson, supervisor from this district, is the only retiring member of the board of supervisors with the new year. He will be succeeded by Geo. R. Grattidge of Clarion. Mr Peterson has been an honest and conscientious member of the board and retires with the best wishes of a host of constituents.

Miss Mildred Humphrey, who retires from the office of county recorder, has served six years in that capacity and is thus one of the "old timers" on the court house roll. Miss Humphrey gave the tax payers good service and made many friends over the county during her term of office, who now become her well wishers for the future.

D. H. Eyler, the retiring county auditor, will be "at home" after January 1st at his old office in the Crowe block. In addition to real estate he will sell both life and property insurance and write surety bonds for some of the best companjes. Mr. Eyler has long been one of the county's most obliging officials and for that reason made many friends.

The grand jury at the next term of court, which convenes at Clarion on Monday, January 31st., will be called upon to investigate the case of the two women captured in the Ozark mountains by Sheriff Fisher. They were taken before Justice Brown last week and each placed under $3,000 bonds. Being unable to procure same they were returned to the county jail, where they will remain until court convenes. It is more than likely that one or more Wright county women will be selected as members of the grand jury to determine the innocence or guilt of the prisoners. In case an indictment is returned against them the prisoners will be confronted with additional members of the gentler sex at the court trial when the petit jury is called. This will be the first case of its kind on record in this county and the outcome will be awaited with considerable interest.

FAMILY DINNER

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Sorenson held a family reunion and dinner at their home on Christmas day. Those who were present were: Mrs. Colenski and brother Davis Sorenson from Clear Lake, Mrs. Clair Meacham and daughter Mildred of Titonka. Mrs. Meacham brought a large goose to the family home for the occasion and the family had a very happy gathering. Mr. and Mrs. Sorenson spent New Years at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Coleneski at Clear Lake.

COURT PAROLES WOMEN THURSDAY

Malisa White and Naomi Purvis, the woman and girl who were recently arrested in Missouri and brot to Clarion, charged with being members of the gang which broke into the Wheeler store at Woolstock and the Charlson store at Goldfield, were arraigned in district court today, Thursday, and after pleading guilty were sentenced to the reformatory at Rockwell City for not more than ten years. They were then paroled to Sheriff Bert Fisher, pending good behavior.

That these robberies were their first offense induced the Court to give them another chance.—Clipper.

MARRIAGE LICENSES

To Harvey Elmer Boller, of Goodell and Edith Ross Forristall, of Belmond.

To Hans Severev Olson, of Newark, Illinois and Susan Severtson, of Belmond.

To Andreas Skarveland, also known as Andrew Scott, of Belmond, and Mary Severtson, of Belmond.

To Allen J. Cole, of Iowa Falls and Hazel Mudale, of Dows. Groom will not be of age until February and had a letter from parents giving consent to his marriage.

PROGRAM OF WORK COMPLETE

In spite of the unfavorable weather and poor road conditions the County Agent has succeeded in completing the program of work for Wright County for the coming year.

An organization has been placed in each township in the county at which time the officers for the coming year were elected and the program of work was outlined by the members present. An interesting program of work has been arranged for the farmers of Wright county and judging from the projects which are included in the schedule for the year the farmers are surely getting value received from their membership fees.

In outlining the work special attention has been given to the ladies department of the Farm Bureau work. Since Wright county will not be fortunate enough to have a Home Demonstration Agent. Next year all lines of work which are offered to the ladies through the Extension Staff at Ames have been included in the schedule of work for 1921. The ladies of the county are assured that the most hearty cooperation will be given by the Home Demonstration Agent Department at the College.

A complete list of officers for each township will be published in the county papers some time later.

COUNTY AGENTS VISIT SUGAR FACTORY

Our local County Agent accompanied by Clarence Pickard, County Agent for Humboldt county, visited the Sugar Beet Factory last week. hrough the kindness of Mr. Fenton, President of the organization, Mr. Pickard and Mr. Edwards were shown through the entire factory, each department and each process being explained in turn, by one of the officers at the factory.

The County Agents were favorably impressed with the Sugar Factory and the system in its operation, they report that the whole factory in all its departments is working like clockwork. The factory is surely organized for working on good business principles and has an efficient corps of officers directing its activities.

LIVESTOCK SHIPPING ASSOCIATION AT GALT

A mass meeting was held in the town hall in Galt uesday evening for the purpose of organizinz a livestock shipping association.

The farmers in the vicinity of Galt have felt the matter of a livestock shipping association for some time and on last Tuesday evening organized an association which promises to be a live organization in the county.

Livestock shipping associations are becoming very popular throughout the state of Iowa. Most every county in the state has already organized or is organizing at present livestock shipping associations to provide for a more direct dealing between the producer and consumer.

A great advantage for the farmers, shipping direct to the terminal market through their shipping Association.

A board of directors was elected at this meeting to take charge of the additions of the organization as the work progresses.Five directors were elected and the executive officers of the organization were selected from this number.

EXPERIMENTS IN ADDITIONAL FEED FOR PIGS

The results of an experiment in giving additional feeds to pigs while in the corn field, show that tankage is the best. This experiment was conducted by the animal husbandry department of the South Dakota state college.

The lot receiving tankage from a self-feeder consumed five-tenths of a pound a day, and made an average gain per head daily of 2.21 pounds. The lot receiving rape pasture with their corn made an average of 1.73 pounds. The lot receiving oilmeal from a self feeder averaged 1.73 pounds and the check lot not receiving any additional feed made an average gain per head of 1.41 pounds.

The fattest pigs were those receiving tankage, but tankage was the most expensive feed.

Whether a man should feed these high priced by-products depends on the market. If the herd is purebred and the market is for breeding stock, early maturity is a feature sought after by all up to date breeders, in fact it commands a premium in the sale ring. However, it would be unwise to put our breeding stock in this condition and for this reason I believe the rape pasture would be better for the development of the pigs while in the cornfield. During the forty-five days feeding period the pigs receiving tankage and corn became fat while those receiving the rape and also those receiving the oilmeal did not become excessively fat. The pigs did not seem to like the oilmeal from the self-feeder and probably would have consumed more and made larger gains if it had been given them in the form of a slop.

Clipper:—Down in Old Missouri, where the chief diversions of the people are politics and coonhunting, with an occasional flurry in profitable farming, they seem to think that Iowa has "blown up" and that from one end of the state to the other the people are wringing their hands and plunging headlong into the slough of bankruptcy. Hark to the tale that two travelers told after a short sojourn in his great state: Here it is, verbatim et punctuatim:

Lamar (Mo) Democrat: "Draws Gloomy Picture of Iowa. Chas E. Jones Says This Most Productive State In the Union Is Badly In the Hole.—Victim of High Land Values and High Stock Values.—Renters Moving Off Farms Leaving Whole Crops To Landlords—Men Losing Their High-Priced Farms.

Messrs. Chas. E. Jones and Harry Jones drove in, Friday, from a six weeks' trip to the country around Farragut, Iowa. In this part of the country, Iowa is regarded as a land, flowing with milk and honey. But while he didn't try to detract anything from its reputation as the finest of all the agricultural states. Mr. Chas. E. Jones told us Friday evening, that things, just now, were not very promising in Iowa.

The state is blown up, on the high values, that they obtained during the period of big prices.

They simply went wild, Mr. Jones said. The farmers bought ten thousand dollar thoroughbred bulls and two thousand dollar boars. Today these bulls and boars are being put up and sold for beef and hog meat.

Up in that part of the state, a country banker, some time ago, paid forty-six thousand dollars for a thoroughbred bull. That bull busted its owner, and when he broke the bank went under with him.

The head of Chicago's Reserve bank, with fifteen prominent Iowa bankers held meetings in our part of the state when we were up there, around Farragut. They said that Iowa had already borrowed ninety one per cent of her available loan quota from the Federal Reserve, while Kansas had borrowed only forty-five per cent and Missouri thirty-six per cent.

Banks are closing, because the only way the farmers could pay their notes, would be to sell their corn, and they refuse to sell at present prices. Merchants are going to the wall for the same reason. The farmers tell them they can't pay their bills until they sell their corn, and they won't sell a bushel of it, for what they can get today.

Here is a typical illustration of the man who has bought Iowa land in the last few years, and paid four hundred dollars for it:

A man in the neighborhood where we were, bought a hundred and twenty acres of land. He paid forty eight thousand dollars for it. He had saved ten thousand dollars, living on a rented farm. He paid this money down; and gave a mortgage for the remaining thirty eight thousand. He is going to move off the farm, in the spring, and let the mortgage take it.

Up around Silver Creek, the corn is making eighty and ninety bushels to the acre, In that neighborhood, tenants were paying a rent of half the crop and ten dollars an acre. They're moving off the farms, today leaving the whole crop to the landlord, who has to go and have it gathered.

Charlie says corn's going to go to thirty-five cents, and there's simply no help for it.

He and Harry went to Iowa, making the drive in their car, thinking seriously of locating. They figured they'd stay through the husking season, shuck corn, get acquainted with the country, and probably get hold of a farm. But Charlie says this is not the time to either buy or rent an Iowa farm.

A CASE FOR THE AMERICAN LEGION

An ex-service man, who won the Distinguished Service Medal in the war, was recently sentenced by a judge at Clinton to ten years at Ft. Madison. He stole a pair of shoes in order that he might continue his work and support his family with his wages. This was his first crime. His army record was without a blemish. After his return, strikes and other misfortunes kept him from working regularly. Then a baby came with its attendant costs for nurses, doctors, medicines, etc. The chance to take a pair of shoes, not his own, came and he yielded. He could have wrecked a bank and robbed hundreds of widows and dependant children and gotten off for many years less. There is something wrong somewhere and it should be corrected. The punishment for stealing one hundred thousand dollars should be just as great as for stealing a ten dollar pair of shoes to enable a father to continue working to support his family. If bolshevism is not to continue in this country and flourish, there should be no repetition of the Clinton sentence. The government this young man protected when he went to war, should protect him NOW in his hour of need. He should be released and restored to his family AT ONCE. It would be a most commendable act for the American Legion to take up this young man's case and see that he gets a square deal. Instances of this kind are too frequent. We have one in our own county. We insist that it should be just as great a crime to steal $100,000 as $10.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

A FARMER'S SOLILOQUOY

Chris Sebert, who farms one of the Crowe farms out toward Lake Cornelia, says that he raised an extra good corn crop this year and raised it on a grain rental basis, but that any price short of 75c per bushel would cause him to lose money on the crop. He figures the same with his oats. Mr. Sebert believes that the farmer would be better off with conditions as they were last fall, or even as they were in "them good old days" when hogs sold for three cents a pound or less and farm hands got $15 a month, and other things were in proportion. Essentially folks might have been as well off then as now, but they didn't have the money to spend they do now nor live quite as well.

FARMING THAT DOES PAY

Who says beet growing does not pay? C. B. Gray planted 14 acres of sugar beets last spring, and they averaged 12 tons to the acre, for which he received $12 per ton, or $144 per acre. After deducting expenses for seed, fertilizer, cultivation, and harvesting, they netted him $100 per acre, or a total of $1400. How does this compare with the proceeds from corn at present prices? While Mr. Gray's corn averaged 86 bushels per acre, at present prices it would not bring anything for the work of tending the corn and harvesting it.

JUST FOR INSTANCE

One of the Livermore farmers took in a triple wagon box of oats and two crates f chickens to market last Monday. The oats weighed out 82.6 bushels and that day they were selling for 37 cents a bushel, bringing $30.40. The two crates of chickens brought $35.38 which was a trifle over 208 pounds, and were worth that day 17 cents per pound. One would never stop to think that two crates of chickens would bring in more than a triple box of oats but in this case it is true nevertheless. This certainly is not very encouraging for our farmers to farm their land as it should be when the produce is practically given away.

HOW TO INCREASE PROFITS ON THE FARMS

How to produce farm crops and live stock more economically and market them more profitably—that will be the keynote of Iowa's annual winter short course at Ames this week, January 3 to 8. That is the big question that farmers everywhere are asking, and every resource of Iowa State College and the experiment stations, every worth-while result of their years of investigation, will be put into the short course program and its hundred and more daily lectures and demonstrations, in an effort to answer it.

Besides, the short course will take up important home problems, especially those dealing with the care, feeding and clothing of the children, because recent investigations show that a large portion of school boys and girls thruout Iowa are below the normal in nourishment and health. A rural life program will take up the questions of a more satisfactory rural life.

Out of the thousands of experiment and field tests of the experiment station has come much new information about crops and their management and that will be fully presented. A good many years of notable work in feeding has culminated in new methods of handling cattle, hogs and sheep, and they will be demonstrated. Extensive soil surveys in many counties in Iowa have shown what must be done to keep Iowa soils economically productive and they will be explained. A thoro study of farm management and marketing has made possible the way to more profitable agriculture. The farm power question and problem of labor saving equipment, the horse question, the question of profitable orchards and gardens, the securing of larger profits from dairy herd and poultry flock—all these things and many others will be considered in the course of the week.

In connection with the program, many speakers of note have been secured to give assistance. Among them are Wayne Dismore, secretary of the Horse Association of America; E. D. Hall, assistant secretary of agriculture and one of the best known authorities on plant pest; A. H. Carhart, recreational engineer with the United States forestry service; Frank I, Mann, soils expert and known as the "best farmer in Illinois;" John Gosling, veteran of nearly twenty years of Iowa short courses as a meat demonstrator; G. N. Hoffer, Purdue University, considered the best authority on corn root rot; E. L. Morris, of the Kansas City grain standardization service; W. F. Priebe, formerly with the Hoover food administration as a poultry and egg expert, and W. A. Lippincott, Kansas' noted poultry authority; A. C. Arney, Minnesota experiment station seed expert; E. V. Wilcox, bureau of farm management, department of agriculture; W. G. Kaiser, of the Portland Cement association, who will talk on concrete construction for the farm; J. W. Coverdale, secretary American Farm Bureau Federation. Besides, many of the breed associations and the Iowa Corn Growers Association and other organizations will have separate programs with prominent speakers.

With these features will come the annual Iowa corn and small grain show, for some years the greatest show of its kind on earth, and also a ham and bacon show. The Iowa conservtion association is scheduled to hold its annual meeting also.

Over 500 boys and girls are expected for the meeting of the boys and girls clubs, which will have a five day program of their own.

Added to these attractions will be an opportunity to see the college and study its experimental work.

Where Were You When the Telephone Rang?

Subscribers report that they failed to receive certain telephone calls and yet were "at home all the time."

They forgot the trips to the basement, the attic, the garden or elsewere out of hearing of the telephone bell.

It is less work for the operator to complete call than to report "They don't answer."

A Useless Weapon

The man without a reserve or bank account is a good deal like a soldier without ammunition.

He is without power in time of need.

Everyone will need a reserve to draw against, just as every soldier will need ammunition,and a bank account is within the reach of all who take the trouble to get it.

WOULD SELL ALL AT 50c CENTS A BUSHEL

A well known land owner living in Belmond this week offered to contract his entire crop of corn this year to the Farmers Elevator Co., at 50c. The elevator company would agree to contract at that price, we understood, but some of the corn was out of its territory and the stipulation that cars should be sent to a siding to accomodate the seller could not be met very satisfactorily, so the deal was not concluded. The landowner figured that while corn might go above fifty cents later on, there was an equal possibility of it going lower—possibly down to a quarter a bushel, tho hardly expecting any such figure. He figured that when the farmers all over the corn belt started shelling and selling the market would be glutted, and a gutted market doesn't do a thing to prices!—Clipper.

Taking Desperate Chances

It is true that many contract severe colds and recover from them without taking any precaution or treatment, and a knowledge of this fact leads others to take their chances instead of giving their colds the needed attention. It should be borne in mind that every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality, makes the system less able to wthstanu each succeeding attck and paves the way for the more serious diseases. Can you afford to take such desperate chances when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of bad colds may be had for a trifle?—For sale at Adams Pharmacy.

PRIMARY ROAD GUIDE NOW READY FOR DISTRIBUTION

Compiled from Records At Office of State Highway Commission. Is Valuable To Auto Drivers.

A primary road guide for Iowa, compiled and published from the official records in the office of the state highway commission, is now ready for distribution. It will be on sale at news stands and garages but may be secured direct from the bulletin department of the state highway commission by remitting the amount.

The guide is unique in form, being a distinct departure in makeup and arrangement from any automobile guide so far published. The guide is bound in a folder which carries an envelope pocket for a large 24x36 map showing in two colors all primary roads and their numbers. In the guide proper the entire state is covered again by eight sectional maps with an additional one, No. 9, covering Des Moines as far north as Fort Dodge, south to Chariton, east to Oskaloosa and west to a line south of Fort Dodge. A tenth map shows the routings of the more popular of the painted pole tourist trails.

An alphabetical list of all towns and cities in the state appear first in the book, giving the county in which the town is located, primary road or roads upon which it is located, and sectional map upon which it will be found. This index is followed by a numerical index of all roads in the state, giving the names of all towns on every road from its northernmost or easternmost terminal at the end of the road. The mileage of every town from the north or east terminal of the road is given following the plan of the railroad time table folder. All road intersections, if there are any, are given for each town, the county in which the town is located, appears and the population follows.

In the center of the book is a key map of the state indicating the portion of the state covered by each of the first eight sectional maps. All are indexed for easy finding. Beside each sectional map appears a duplication of the matter from the roads passing through the section of the state covered by the sectional map.

The guide folds into shape 4x9 and fits the average pocket easily. It is printed on light paper and is not too bulky for the pocket.

The guide is believed to contain all the essential information needed by those traveling the Iowa primary roads to enable them to intelligently plan routings and to keep track of the route after it is selected. The commission will sell single copies at the regular retail price but prefers that purchase be made from news stands and garages. All orders for the guide should be addressed to the Iowa Highway Commission, Ames, Iowa, Bulletin Department.

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals — makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration — makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly —and have great wearing quality.

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes — oils and greases.

JUSTICE IN THE LAW

Down at Clinton, Iowa, recently, a man was sentenced to ten years in the pentitentiary. He had stolen a pair of shoes.

This man was an ex-soldier. His record in this country's army during the world was was absolutely O. K. He had been awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for his exceptional conduct. He had been honorably discharged from his country's service after a perfect record in its defense.

This man was married. A baby was born, with its expenses for doctors, nurse, medicines, etc. He himself had been injured and had been sick. His family was in desperate straits, dependent upon him for their food, clothing and shelter.

This man could work—he was wild to work that his family, his wife and tiny babe, might not suffer want—but he had no shoes and he had to have shoes to work. So he took a pair that he might work for his wife and his newborn babe.

And the judge gave him ten years.

If the reports of this sentence are true, there is no telephone pole in the state of Iowa tall enough to stretch this judge and whoever prosecuted this man, too. There is no insult too great, no words too harsh, to apply to them. They are heathens, heartless, cold-blooded, black-hearted savages, a disgrace to their state and country, an insult to their Maker. They ought to be tarred and feathered, ridden on a rail, and kicked so far it would take them six months and ten days to light.

That a judge, supposed to deal justice, to represent civilized people, to temper justice with mercy, could sentence a man of this kind under these circumstances to ten years at hard labor for a pair of shoes which at the most were not worth over $25, is a shame and a disgrace to every citizen of the state of Iowa. It is a blot on the nation's honor, an insult to the country the man fought to save. And it is an utter disgrace to the law.

All over the state, the newspapers are taking up this case with the demand that the doomed man be freed and returned to his dependent family and his job. The Independent takes the greatest pleasure in joining this demand, and it recommends the case to the Belmond American Legion for immediate and positive attention.

And the Independent along with many others, demands that this judge be removed from the bench, that he be retired to the most private life that can be found—preferably the cell which he sentenced this ex-soldier to occupy for ten years.

And it demands that whoever prosecuted the case, be shown to the public eye in his true colors, published the country over for a skunk and a polecat and a heartless heathen.

Just such "justice" as this is what is making American law courts the butt of ridicule, the joke of the country. It is what Bolshevism feeds upon, plays upon in its attempts to break down the foundations of America. An example of far-reaching respect can be returned to the law. And this is a mighty good place to start.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m

Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m.

Are you beginning the new year right by giving God and His church a larger place in your life and plans? "The Lord hath need of thee." Are you measuring up to His expectations of you? And most certainly the world needs God in these days. Roger Babson, president of the Babson Statistical Organization, in his new book "Religion and Business," just from the press, says: "A most intimate relation exists between religion and business. Future business conditions can be foretold with wonderful accuracy by a study of the religious conditions of the time. Religion is both the anchor and rudder of prosperity." If this be true, what does your manifest interest in religion and business indicate for the future?

If without a church home, or a stranger in the community, you will find a welcome at any of the services of the church.

The Epworth League will hold a New Year's social in the basement of the church Friday evening of this week, January 7. Come and have a good time. The party who meets you at the door with a yard stick will inform you as to the price of admission.

"Miss Hobbs"

A Realart picture featuring

Wanda Hawley

A delightful comedy. A modern young woman with ideas 50 years ahead of time... But love came. The young man takes it on himself to tame her, to make her a regular girl. How he does it is told in five reels of action that sparkle with comedy and rare sentiment.

SATURDAY, JAN. 8

"An Adventure in Hearts"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Robert Warwick

Pity poor Robert Warwick! Now that he's back from France and into "cits" he has to go right on fighting. He served on Gen. Pershing's staff overseas and his duties took him to practically every front. And now that he has returned to his pre-war occupation of starring in motion pictures, the producers seem to have conspired to keep him in fighting trim. In his first release, "Secret Service," he played the role of a secret service agent for the Northern army during the civil war.

"Old Dad"

A First National picture featuring

Mildred Harris Chaplin

True, is has not been so much of a moot question as "why girls leave home" but there is a variety of "whys" for the expulsion of quite a few girls from our schools nowadays. One of the common reasons is set forth in "Old Dad."

TUESDAY, JAN. 11

"All of a Sudden Peggy"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Marguerite Clark

It would be difficult to name a star of the silver sheet who is better equipped to win success than this one. Her sunny disposition is not assumed for screen purposes only; it is natural. A better all-round "good scout" never lived. Morever, by reason of her extensive experience in pictures she has the technique of screen acting down to a science. Her expressive, mobile features register every nuance of emotion.

HAMPTON MAN STARTS FIRE WITH KEROSENE

Hampton Man Does Old rick, But Gets By Without Fatal Results

James Estep, one of the popular tonsorial artists in the Bailey Barber Shop, was in a hurry to make the kitchen fire at his home the other morning when it was a dozen or fiteen below, and while hurrying around in his pajamas, he apologized to his wife for being such a chump to think it was necessary to use kerosene. He grabbed a gallon jug, which he spied in the corner of the pantry, and when he had filled the stove with some choice kindling he began to pour, then lighted match after match, and poured some more, only to see the fire burn the match stem to the end, but distributed no fire to the kindling wood.

After pouring out the contents of the jug, nearly a full gallon, the air began to smell strong, and members of the famiy were aroused to help locate the trouble. Jim thought someone from Canada with a flying machine had visited his house during the night and deposited one of those jugs which we read about these days as coming from Canada.

It would have been apalling, if it proved true that he had wasted a gallon of the real stuff, but it was not of the Canadian brand. It had the smell anyway, but it was a fresh gallon of vinegar which the delivery boy from the grocery store had left at the Estep house the night previous. Jim says that the only damage was the loss of the price of a gallon of vinegar, several boxes of matches, fifty cents of kindling wood, and $2.00 worth of extra heat it took to warm him up after he finally succeeded in getting a fire started.

WEBSTER —MAN'S MAN

by Peter B. Kyne

Author of "Cappy Ricks," "The Valley of the Giants," Etc.

Copyright by Peter B. Kyne

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—John Stuart Webster, mining engineer, after cleaning up a fortune in Death Valley, Calif., boards a train for the East. He befriends a young lady annoyed by a masher, thoroughly trouncing the "pest."

CHAPTER II.—At Denver Webster receives a letter from Billy Geary, his closest friend. Geary urges him to come to Sobrante, Central America, to finance and develop a mining claim. He decides to go.

CHAPTER III.—Dolores Ruey, the young woman Webster befriended, and who has made a deep impression on him, as he has on her, is also on the way to Sobrante.

CHAPTER IV.—At Buenaventura, capital of Sobrante, Billy Geary, ill and penniless, is living on the charity of "Mother Jenks," keeper of a dramshop. She receives a cablegram from Dolores, telling of her coming.

CHAPTER V.—Dolores' father, Ricardo Ruey, president of Sobrante, had been killed in a revolution led by Sarros, the present executive. Dolores, a child of eight, was smuggled out of the country by Mother Jenks and supported by her in the United States. The old woman, ashamed of her occupation and habits of life, fears to meet Dolores, and sends Geary to the boat to say she has gone to the United States.

CHAPTER VI.—Webster, on his way to Sobrante, is taken ill on the train, and is in a hospital at New Orleans two weeks. Geary bungles his mission, Dolores easily seeing through his story. She greets Mother Jenks as her friend and benefactor. Geary falls desperately in love with the girl.

CHAPTER VII.—At New Orleans, while waiting for the steamer to Buenaventura, Webster saves the life of a young man who is attacked by two assassins. The youth leaves Webster without disclosing his identity.

CHAPTER VIII.—On the steamer Webster finds his stateroom occupied by a stranger who declares his intention of being his guest to Buenaventura. At first angered, Webster and the stranger, after a somewhat forcible argument, reach an amicable agreement. Webster recognizes him as the youth whose life he had saved the day before, though the other does not know Webster.

IX.—Arriving at Sobrante, ...es Webster and is instru- ...iping his friend's "guest" ...atter is known to Webster ...owers." Geary houses him ...nks'. Webster gets the idea ...and Dolores are in love, and ...tention of giving Geary every ...smilingly contradicts the girl's ...that they have met before.

...ER X.—Webster receives a ...rning conveyed by "Don Juan Cafetero," really John J. Cafferty, Irishman of good qualities fallen through overindulgence in liquor, that there is a plot to assassinate him. Webster makes a firm friend of Cafferty. Later, the American is insulted by a Sobrantean army officer and publicly ridicules him. A challenge to a duel is accepted under such stern conditions that the Sobranteans withdraw it.

CHAPTER XI.—Webster secretly visits "Andrew Bowers" at Mother Jenks'. He learns that "Bowers" is Ricardo Ruey, son of the assassinated president, brother of Dolores (whom he believes dead), and that a revolution is contemplated. Next morning he tells Dolores that her brother, of whom she has no recollection, is in the country, projecting the overthrow of President Sarros. Very much in love with the girl, but believing that her affection has been bestowed on Geary, Webster leaves to investigate the mine which he has come to finance.

CHAPTER XII.—Webster, after looking it over, decides to put his whole fortune into the mine. He sends Billy Geary to the United States to purchase the necessary equipment, advising him to marry Dolores in Buenaventura before he leaves. Knowing that unless Ruey can overthrow Sarros his mine will be confiscated, Webster agrees to finance the venture. Returning to Buenaventura, he is astonished to find Dolores still there and Geary on his way to the United States.

CHAPTER XIII.—Dolores tells Webster that Billy Geary had asked her to marry him and that she had refused. Amazed, but entirely misunderstanding the situation, he accepts the explanation. He explains to Dolores how her brother has laid his plans for the overthrow of Sarros. Webster and Ricardo have a final understanding.

CHAPTER XIV.—The morning of the revolution Webster takes Dolores aboard the American steamer Estrellita, where she can remain in safety. As an American citizen he believes it his duty to take no part in the conflict. Cafferty, after being in the thick of it, returns to the ship to tell Webster of the progress of the revolution, which presages an early victory for the forces of Ricardo Ruey.

CHAPTER XV.—Dolores and Webster, with Cafferty, return to the city. Dolores meets Mother Jenks and the two proceed to succor the wounded. On their way to the president's palace Webster and Cafferty meet a party of President Sarros' guards, and in the fight Webster is wounded and Cafferty dies saving the life of the man he loved. Webster is found and ministered to by Dolores and Mother Jenks.

CHAPTER XVI.—The bodies of Webster and Cafferty are taken into the palace, Dolores and Mother Jenks following. Examination proves Webster to be stunned but in no way seriously injured. Sarros is captured and the revolution everywhere triumphant. Ricardo meets the sister whom he had mourned as dead at Webster's bedside.

"If you'd cared to play a gentleman's game, you blighter, you might 'ave lived for your bally country," Mother Jenks reminded him in English. "Wonder if the beggar'll wilt or will 'e go through smilin' like my sainted 'Enery on the syme spot."

She need not have worried. It requires a strong man to be dictator of a roman candle republic for 15 years, and whatever his sins of omission or commission, Sarros did not lack animal courage. Alone and unattended he limped away among the graves to the wall on the other side of the cemetery and placed his back against it, negligently, in the attitude of a devil-may-care fellow without a worry in life. The sergeant waited respectfully until Sarros had finished his cigarette; when he tossed it away and straightened to attention, the sergeant knew he was ready to die. At his command there was a sudden rattle of bolts as the cartridges slid from the magazines into the breeches; there followed a momentary halt, another command; the squad was aiming when Ricardo Ruey called sharply:

"Sergeant, do not give the order to fire."

The rifles were lowered and the men gazed wonderingly at Ricardo. "He's too brave," Ricardo complained. "D—— him, I can't kill him as I would a mad dog. I've got to give him a chance."

The sergeant raised his brows expressively. Ah, the ley fuga, that popular form of execution where the prisoner is given a running chance, and the firing squad practices wing shooting. If the prisoner manages, miraculously, to escape, he is not pursued!

A doubt, however, crossed the sergeant's mind. "But my general," he expostulated, "Senor Sarros cannot accept the ley fuga. He is very lame. That is not giving him the chance your Excellency desires he should have."

"I wasn't thinking of that," Ricardo replied. "I was thinking I'm killing him without a fair trial for the reason that he's so infernally ripe for the gallows that a trial would have been a joke. Nevertheless, I am really killing him because he killed my father—and that is scarcely fair. My father was a gentleman. Sergeant, is your pistol loaded?"

"Yes, General."

"Give it to Senor Sarros."

As the sergeant started forward to comply Ricardo drew his own service revolver and then motioned Mother Jenks and the firing squad to stand aside while he crossed to the center of the cemetery. "Sarros," he called, "I am going to let God decide which one of us shall live. When the sergeant gives the command to fire, I shall open fire on you, and you are free to do the same to me. Sergeant, if he kills me and escapes unhurt, my orders are to escort him to the bay in my carriage and put him safely aboard the steamer."

Mother Jenks sat down on a tombstone. "Gord's truth!" she gasped, "but there's a rare plucked 'un." Aloud she croaked: "Don't be a bally ass, sir."

"Silence!" he commanded.

The sergeant handed Sarros the revolver. "You heard what I said?" Ricardo called.

Sarros bowed gravely.

"You understand your orders, Sergeant?"

"Yes, General."

"Very well. Proceed. If this prisoner fires before you give the word, have your squad riddle him."

The sergeant backed away and gazed owlishly from the prisoner to his captor. "Ready!" he called. Both revolvers came up. "Fire!" he shouted, and the two shots were discharged simultaneously. Ricardo's cap flew off his head, but he remained standing, while Sarros staggered back against the wall and there recovering himself gamely, fired again. He scored a clean miss, and Ricardo's gun barked three times; Sarros sprawled on his face, rose to his knees, raised his pistol halfway, fired into the sky and slid forward on his face. Ricardo stood beside the body until the sergeant approached and stood to attention, his attitude saying:

"It is over. What next, General?"

"Take the squad back to the arsenal, Sergeant," Ricardo ordered him coolly, and walked back to recover his uniform cap. He was smiling as he ran his finger through a gaping hole in the upper half of the crown.

"Well, Mrs. Jenks," he announced when he rejoined the old lady, "that was better than executing him with a firing squad. I gave him a square deal. Now his friends can never say that I murdered him."

He extended his hand to help Mother Jenks to her feet. She stood erect and felt again that queer swelling of the heart, the old feeling of suffocation.

"Steady, lass!" she mumbled. "'Old on to me, sir. It's my bally haneurism. Gor'—I'm—chokin'——"

He caught her in his arms as she lurched toward him. Her face was purple, and in her eyes there was a queer fierce light that went out suddenly, leaving them dull and glazed. When she commenced to sag in his arms, he eased her gently to the ground and laid her on her back in the grass.

"The nipper's safe, 'Enery," he heard her murmur. "I've raised 'er a lydy, s'elp me—she's back where—you found 'er—'Enery——"

She quivered, and the light came creeping back into her eyes before it faded forever. "Comin', 'Enery—darlin'," she whispered; and then the soul of Mother Jenks, who had a code and lived up to it (which is more than the majority of us do), had departed upon the ultimate journey. Ricardo gazed down on the hard old mouth, softened now by a little half-smile of mingled yearning and gladness: "What a wonderful soul you had," he murmured, and kissed her.

In the end she slept in the niche in the wall of the Catedral de la Vera Cruz, beside her sainted 'Enery.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Three days passed. Don Juan Cafetero had been buried with all the pomp and circumstance of a national hero; Mother Jenks, too, had gone to her appointed resting place, and El Buen Amigo had been closed forever. Ricardo had issued a proclamation announcing himself provisional president of Sobrante; a convention of revolutionary leaders had been held, and a provisional cabinet selected. A day for the national elections had been named; the wreckage of the brief revolution had been cleared away, and the wheels of government were once more revolving freely and noiselessly. And while all of this had been going on, John Stuart Webster had lain on his back, staring at the palace ceiling and absolutely forbidden to receive visitors. He was still engaged in this mild form of gymnastics on the third day when the door of his room opened and Dolores looked in on him.

"Good evening, Caliph," she called. "Aren't you dead yet?"

It was exactly the tone she should have adopted to get the best results, for Webster had been mentally and physically ill since she had seen him last, and needed some such pleasantry as this to lift him out of his gloomy mood. He grinned at her boyishly.

"No, I'm not dead. On the contrary, I'm feeling real chirpy. Won't you come in and visit for a while, Miss Ruey?"

"Well, since you've invited me, I shall accept." Entering, she stood beside his bed and took the hand he extended toward her. "This is the first opportunity I've had, Miss Ruey," he began, "to apologize for the shock I gave you the other day. I should have come back to you as I promised, instead of getting into a fight and scaring you half to death. I hope you'll forgive me, because I'm paying for my fun now—with interest."

"Very well, Caliph. I'll forgive you—on one condition."

"Who am I to resist having a condition imposed upon me? Name your terms. I shall obey."

"I'm weary of being called Miss Ruey. I want to be Dolores—to you."

"By the toe nails of Moses," he reflected, "there is no escape. She's determined to rock the boat." Aloud he said: "All right, Dolores. I guess Bill won't mind."

"Billy hasn't a word to say about it," she retorted, regarding him with that calm, impersonal, yet vitally interested look that always drove him frantic with the desire for her.

"Well, of course, I understand that," he countered. "Naturally, since Bill is only a man, you'll have to manage him and he'll have to take orders."

"Caliph, you're a singularly persistent man, once you get an idea into your head. Please understand me, once for all; Billy Geary is a dear, and it's a mystery to me why every girl in the world isn't perfectly crazy about him, but every rule has its exceptions—and Billy and I are just good friends. I'd like to know where you got the idea we're engaged to be married."

"Why—why—well, aren't you?"

"Certainly not."

"Well, you—er—you ought to be. I expected—that is, I planned—I mean Bill told me and—and—and—er—it never occurred to me you could possibly have the—er—crust—to refuse him. Of course, you're going to marry him when he asks you?"

"Of course I am not."

"Ah-h-h-h!" John Stuart Webster gazed at her in frank amazement. "Not going to marry Bill Geary!" he cried, highly scandalized.

"I know you think I ought to, and I suppose it will appear quite incomprehensible to you when I do not——"

"Why Dolores, my dear girl! This is most amazing. Didn't Bill ask you to marry him before he left?"

"Yes, he did me that honor, and I declined him."

"You what!"

She smiled at him so maternally that his hand itched to drag her down to him and kiss her curving lips.

"Do you mind telling me just why you took this extraordinary attitude?"

"You have no right to ask, but I'll tell you. I refused Billy because I didn't love him enough—that way. What's more, I never could."

He rolled his head to one side and softly, very softly, whistled two bars of "The Spanish Cavalier" through his teeth. He was properly thunderstruck—so much so, in fact, that for a moment he actually forgot her presence the while he pondered this most incredible state of affairs.

"I see it all now. It's as clear as mud," he announced finally. "You refused poor old Bill and broke his heart, and so he went away and hasn't had the courage to write me since. I'm afraid Bill and I both regarded this fight as practically won—all over but the wedding march, as one might put it. I might as well confess I hustled the boy down from the mine just so you two could get married and light out on your honeymoon. I figured Bill could kill two birds with one stone—have his honeymoon and get rid of his malaria, and return here in three or four months to relieve me, after I had the mine in operation. Poor boy. That was a frightful song-and-dance you gave him."

"I suspected you were the match-maker in this case. I must say I think you're old enough to know better, Caliph John."

"You did, eh? Well, what made you think so?"

She chuckled. "Oh, you're very obvious—to a woman."

"I forgot that you reveal the past and foretell the future."

"You are really very clumsy, Caliph. You should never try to direct the destiny of any woman."

"I'm on the sick list," he pleaded, "and it isn't sporting of you to discuss me. You're healthy—so let us discuss you. Dolores, do you figure Bill's case to be absolutely hopeless?"

"Absolutely, Caliph."

"Hum-m-m!"

Again Webster had recourse to meditation, seeing which, Dolores walked to the pier glass in the corner, satisfied herself that her coiffure was just so and returned to his side, singing softly a little song that had floated out over the transom of Webster's room door into the hall one night:

> A Spanish cavalier
> Went out to rope a steer,
> Along with his paper cigar-r-rol
> "Caramba!" said he.
> "Manana you will be > Mucho bueno carne por mio!"

He turned his head and looked up at her suddenly, searchingly. "Is there anybody else in Bill's way?" he demanded. "I admit it's none of my business, but——"

"Yes, Caliph, there is some one else."

"I thought so." This rather viciously. "I'm willing to gamble 100 to 1, sight unseen, that whoever he is, he isn't half the man Bill is."

"That," she replied coldly, "is a matter of personal opinion."

"And Bill's clock is fixed for keeps?"

"Yes, Caliph. And he never had a chance from the start."

"Why not?"

"Well, I met the other man first, Caliph."

"Oh! Do you mind telling me what this other man does for a living?"

"He's a mining man, like Billy."

"All right! Has the son of a horse thief got a mine like Bill's? That's something to consider, Dolores."

"He has a mine fully as good as Billy's. Like Billy, he owns a half interest in it, too."

"Hum-m-m! How long have you known him?"

"Not very long."

"Be sure you're right—then go ahead," John Stuart Webster warned her. "Don't marry in haste and repent at leisure, Dolores. Know your man before you let him buy the wedding ring. There's a heap of difference, my dear, between sentiment and sentimentality."

"I'm sure of my man, Caliph."

He was silent again, thinking rapidly. "Well, of course," he began again presently, "while there was the slightest possibility of Bill winning you, I would have died before saying that which I am about to say to you now Dolores, because Bill is my friend, and I'd never double cross him. With reference to this other man, however, I have no such code to consider. I'm pretty well convinced I'm out of the running, but I'll give that lad a race if it's the last act of my life. He's a stranger to me, and he isn't on the job to protect his claim, so why shouldn't I stake it if I can? But are you quite certain you aren't making a grave mistake in refusing Billy? He's quite a boy, my dear. I know him from soul to suspenders, and he'd be awfully good to you. He's kind and gentle and considerate, and he's not a mollycoddle, either."

"I can't help it, Caliph. Please don't talk about him any more. I know somebody who is kinder and nobler and gentler." She ceased abruptly, fearful of breaking down her reserve and saying too much.

"Well, if Bill's case is hopeless"—his hand came groping for hers, while he held her with his searching, wistful glance—"I wonder what mine looks like. That is, Dolores, I—I——"

"Yes, John?"

"I've played fair with my friend," he whispered eagerly. "I'm not going to ask you to marry me, but I want to tell you that to me you're such a very wonderful woman I can't help loving you with my whole heart and soul."

"I have suspected this, John," she replied gravely.

"I suppose so. I'm such an obvious old fool. I've had my dream, and I've put it behind me, but I—I just want you to know I love you; so long as I live, I shall want to serve you. When you're married to this other man, and things do not break just right for you both—if I have something he wants, in order to make you happy, I want you to know it's yours to give to him. I—I—I—guess that's all, Dolores."

"Thank you, John. Would you like to know this man I'm going to marry?"

"Yes, I think I'd like to congratulate the scoundrel."

"Then I'll introduce you to him, John. I first met him on a train in Death valley, California. He was a shaggy old dear, all whiskers and rags, but his whiskers couldn't hide his smile, and his rags couldn't hide his manhood, and when he thrashed a drummer because the man annoyed me, I just couldn't help falling in love with him. Even when he fibbed to me and disputed my assertion that we had met before——"

"Good land of love—and the calves get loose!" he almost shouted as he held up his one sound arm to her. "My dear, my dear——"

"Oh, sweetheart," she whispered laying her hot cheek against his. "it's taken you so long to say it, but I love you all the more for the dear thoughts that made you hesitate."

He was silent a few moments, digesting his amazement, speechless with the great happiness that was his—and then Dolores was kissing the back of the hand of that helpless, bandaged arm lying across his breast. He had a tightening in his throat, for he had not expected love; and that sweet, benignant, humble little kiss spelled adoration and eternal surrender; when she looked at him again the mists of joy were in his eyes.

"Dear old Caliph John!" she crooned. "He's never had a woman to understand his funny ways and appreciate them and take care of him, has he?" She patted his cheek. "And bless his simple old heart, he would rather give up his love than be false to his friend. Yes, indeed. Johnny Webster respects 'No Shooting' signs when he sees them, but he tells fibs and pretends to be very stupid when he really isn't. So you wouldn't be false to Billy—eh, dear? I'm glad to know that, because the man who cannot be false to his friend can never be false to his wife."

He crushed her down to him and held her there for a long time. "My dear," he said presently, "isn't there something you have to say to me?"

"I love you, John," she whispered, and sealed the sweet confession with a true lover's kiss.

"All's well with the world," John Stuart Webster announced when he could use his lips once more for conversation. "And," he added, "owing to the fact that I started a trifle late in life, I believe I could stand a little more of the same."

The door opened and Ricardo looked in on them.

"Killjoy!" Webster growled. "Old Killjoy the Thirteenth, King of Sobrante. Is this a surprise to you?"

"Not a bit of it, Jack. I knew it was due."

"Am I welcome in the Ruey family?"

Ricardo came over and kissed his sister. "Don't be a lobster, Jack," he protested. "I dislike foolish questions." And he pressed his friend's hand with a fervor that testified to his pleasure.

"I'm sorry to crowd in at a time like this, Jack," he continued, with a hug for Dolores, "but Mr. What-you-may-call-him, the American consul, has called to pay his respects. As a fellow citizen of yours, he is vitally interested in your welfare. Would you care to receive him for a few minutes?"

"One minute will do," Webster declared with emphasis. "Show the human slug up, Rick."

Mr. Lemuel Tolliver tripped breezily in with outstretched hand. "My dear Mr. Webster," he began, but Webster cut him short with a peremptory gesture.

"Listen, friend Tolliver," he said. "The only reason I received you was to tell you I'm going to remain in this country awhile and help develop it. I may even conclude to grow up with it. I shall not, of course, renounce my American citizenship; and of course, as an American citizen, I am naturally interested in the man my country sends to Sobrante to represent it. I might as well be frank and tell you that you won't do. I called on you once to do your duty, and you weren't there; I told you then I might have something to say about your job later on, and now I'm due to say it. Mr. Tolliver, I'm the power behind the throne in this little Jim-crow country, and to quote your own elegant phraseology, you, as American consul, are nux vomica to the Sobrantean government. Moreover, as soon as the Sobrantean ambassador reaches Washington, he's going to tell the president that you are, and then the president will be courteous enough to remove you. In the meantime, fare thee well, Mr. Consul."

"But, Mr. Webster—"

"Vaya!"

Mr. Tolliver, appreciating the utter futility of argument, bowed and departed.

"Verily, life grows sweeter with each passing day," Webster murmured whimsically. "Rick, old man, I think you had better escort the consul to the front door. Your presence is nux vomica to me also. See that you back me up and dispose of that fellow Tolliver, or you can't come to our wedding—can he, sweetheart?"

When Ricardo had taken his departure John Stuart Webster looked up quite seriously at his wife-to-be. "Can you explain to me, Dolores," he asked, "how it happened that your relatives and your father's old friends here in Sobrante, whom you met shortly after your arrival, never informed you that Ricardo was living?"

"They didn't know any more about him than I did, and he left here as a mere boy. He was scarcely acquainted with his relatives, all of whom bowed quite submissively to the Sarros yoke. Indeed, my father's half-brother, Antonio Ruey, actually accepted a portfolio under the Sarros regime and held it up to his death. Ricardo has a wholesome contempt for his relatives, and as for his father's old friends, none of them knew anything about his plans. Apparently his identity was known only to the Sarros intelligence bureau, and it did not permit the information to leak out."

"Funny mix up," he commented. "And by the way, where did you get all the inside dope about Neddy Jerome?"

She laughed and related to him the details of Neddy's perfidy.

"And you actually agreed to deliver me, hog-tied and helpless, to that old schemer, Dolores?"

"Why not, dear. I loved you; I always meant to marry you, if you'd let me; and $10,000 would have lasted me for pin money a long time."

"Well, you and Neddy have both lost out. Better send the old pelican a cable and wake him out of his day dream."

"I sent the cable yesterday, John dear."

"Extraordinary woman!"

"I've just received an answer. Neddy has spent nearly $50 telling me by cable what a fine man you are and how thankful I ought to be to the good Lord for permitting you to marry me."

"Dolores, you are perfectly amazing. I only proposed to you a minute ago."

"I know you did, slow-poke, but that is not your fault. You would have proposed to me yesterday, only I thought best not to disturb you until you were a little stronger. This evening, however, I made up my mind to settle the matter, and so I——"

"But suppose I hadn't proposed to you, after all?"

"Then, John, I should have proposed to you, I fear."

"But you were running an awful risk, sending that telegram to Neddy Jerome."

She took one large red ear in each little hand and shook his head lovingly. "Silly," she whispered, "don't be a goose. I knew you loved me; I would have known it, even if Neddy Jerome hadn't told me so. So I played a safe game all the way through, and oh, dear Caliph John, I'm so happy I could cry."

"God bless my mildewed soul," John Stuart Webster murmured helplessly. The entire matter was quite beyond his comprehension!

[THE END.]

OIL WELLS ARE VERY COSTLY

Eagle Grove Eagle: Herbert Halsey, formerly of this city and son of our Mr. and Mrs. W. Halsey, has spent the last five months in the very heart of the Texas oil belt with headquarters at Ranger, Texas. Most of the big oil companies of the south have large interests in and around Ranger. Three years ago Ranger was but a small station, unknown and of no importance. Now it is one of the richest cities in the world, its size considered. It now has sixteen thousand people, and several five and six story buildings, main street paved, all in three years.

Mr. Halsey, who has been working for a new railroad which has built to serve the oil industry, says people talk, breath, dream, in fact everything but drink oil—and some even drink it in modified form. An oil well costs from $60,000 to $75,000. The big oil companies use every possible means known to man to make sure there is a chance of striking oil before they start digging. They employ geologists, soil experts, chemists and other experts to make exhaustive surveys before starting a well. And often after favorable reports from their experts they fail to strike oil. The Sinclaire Oil Company is the Standard Oil of the south. They own and hold leases on most of the valuable oil land. Oil was first discovered on farms adjoining Ranger. Wells have been dug and are in process of construction all over the town and in the surrounding coutry. There are people there from all over the world. Fortunes are made and lost in short periods of time. There are all kinds of blue sky promoters, selling stock in alleged gushers, gas holes and dead holes. Usually in digging a well the first symptom of oil is gas. Usually the gas is burned out and then after digging the oil comes to the surface. All the buildings and residences in Ranger are heated with natural gas. The streets are not lighted in the residence district yet. People get around in the night by means of flash lights and lanterns. The Texas Rangers have a company of men there to maintain order and to fight the liquor traffic. There is no snow there, in fact Mr. Halsey stated that in coming north, the first snow he saw was just a little south of Kansas City. In Kansas City he visited a few hours.

HE WOULD HAVE FOUND THAT ADVERTISING PAYS!

Garner Signal: We try to keep errors out of the Signal as much as possible, and we always read all the ads in our efforts along this line. Last week we had one advertiser who brought in copy that we changed before putting it in type. We have no complaint from him, so we take it he had made an error. Had we set the ad as he brought it in, there is no doubt that he would have had many calls for the articles advertised. Here is what his copy said: "Our showing of ladies is complete We have about 50 dozen in all colors and prices."

PAGING MR. DOE

A Philadelphia clubman dreamed that he died and went to heaven. While sitting in a beautiful palace a cherub came thru paging him.

"Call for Mr. Doe! Call for Mr. Doe!"

"Here you are, my boy," the clubman said, beckoning to the page. I'm Mr. Doe. What is it?"

"Your wife wants you on the oulja board, sir."

ROWAN

E. R. Ballou has purchased a fine sire for his Ayrshire herd from the Kansas Agricultural College at Manhattan, Kansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kerchival entertained the following guests to dinner Friday evening in honor of their son, Clint's birthday: Mr. and Mrs. Clint Kerchival and sons, James and Charles; Mr. and Mrs. E. Bingham and Fred Kerchival.

Congregational Church

The Sunday services, January 2nd at the Congregational church were interesting and inspiring. Special music was furnished by a Male Quartette which sang "Faith of Our Fathers" at the morning service and "Where Will You Spend Eternity?" in the evening. At the morning service thirteen were received into the church membership and following the sermon the Sacrament of the Lord's supper was celebrated.

Sunday, January 9th, 1921 at the Congregational church in the morning Rev. Ada S. Anderson will speak particularly to the Junior members of the Congregation, using for her theme "The House That Jack Built." This will be illustrated with crayon sketches. Parents are urged to have their children present. In the evening "The Wordless Book" will be shown and read and interpreted.

Special revival services are being conducted in the Methodist Episcopal church during this week, the speakers being Rev. W. Webb, of Garner, and Rev. J. Walker, of Clarion. The meetings commence at seven thirty each evening and are opened with special gospel songs. Come and help make the services a success.

The pulpit of the Methodist Episcopal church next Sunday, January 9th, will be supplied by the Rev. W. Webb, of Garner. Mr. Webb is one of the best preachers in the Northwest Iowa Conference, and the people of Rowan will do well to avail themselves of hearing this talented speaker.

Packing Stock Noted Case

A case of general interest to be tried at the January term of court is that of the Northwestern Land & Investment Co., of Minneapolis vs. J. G. Freese of Dows. On May 14, 1919, defendant gave the Midland Packing Co., of Sioux City his note for $3,000 for purchase of stock in that concern. The plaintiffs allege that they are the owners of said note and acquired the same in due course of business in good faith and for value. The defendant admits singing the note in question, but alleges same was procured by fraudulent representations. He states that an agent and the treasurer of the Midland Packing Co. solicited the defendant to purchase stock in said company and represented and guaranteed it was in active operation of a packing plant and as a result was making a large income and large profits; that said earnings would pay all interest on said note and eventually the profits would be so large as to wipe out the entire note. Defendant further alleges that all of said statements were false and were known to be false by the above agents at the time they were made, that in fact such dividends as declared were paid out of the capital stock of the company; that in fact there was a deficit of many hundreds of thousand dollars in the capital of the company; that large sums were expended to the personal profit of the officers, their relatives and friends; and lastly defendant denies plaintiff is a purchaser in good faith or for value of said note and for all of above reasons asks the court to dismiss this action.

Mrs. Maude Falsey departed Monday for Rockwell City to assist the new county clerk, A. J. Hunter, in getting the run of his office. The old deputy promised to stay and at the last moment changed her mind.

Treasurer Allen's office has been one of the busiest places in Wright county during the past week. With four or five extra assistants to the regular force, all have been stepping lively for several days. The new aut plates arrived Wednesday and Thursday in two express shipments which aggregated over two and one-fourth tons. Since that time that office has been sending out number plates to auto owners in various parts of the county at the rate of several hundred per day. Up to January 1st a total of 2070 pairs of numbers had been mailed. The total number of cars registered in this county is about 3400. It is impossible to estimate the number of delinquents at this time for the reason that upwards of a hundred letters on hand and unanswered at the close of business on December 31st. Each of these contained from one to a dozen applications for licenses and it will require most of the week to take care of these requests.

Sheriff Fisher sold the Wright county fair grounds at public sale on December 31st to satisfy a mortgage for $6650. A second claim amounting to $2400 and held by the Farmers' Elevator made it necessary for that company to protect its right and their representative, Thos. Shillington bid in the property at $9407. It is expected the usual fair will be held this fall and that a new association will be formed and redeem the grounds before the year allowed by law expires.

Mrs. Malisa White and her sister Naomi Pervis plead guilty to the charge of breaking and entering the stores at Goldfield and Woolstock some weeks ago. Judge Wright sentenced each to the woman's reformatory at Rockwell City for ten years, but paroled them to Sheriff Fisher, to whom they are to report the first of each month regarding their residence and conduct. The men in the case will have their trial at the coming term of court.

Marriage licenses for the holidays: B. C. Clark and Mildred Humphrey, L. B. Sheldon and Esther Birdsall, Allen Cole and Hazel Madole, Edward Larson and Gertrude Schlader, Andrias Sharvelana and Mary Severtson, Hans Olson and Susan Severtson, Harvey E. Bollar and Edith Fornstall.

D. W. Stewart has been appointed by the court to succeed the late G. L. Cutler as a member of the collateral inheritance tax commission for Wright county.

ROBBED OF TWO HUNDRED

Homer Reed, a foreman at the sugar factory, suffered the loss of about two hundred dollars on last week Wednesday night. That day was pay day at the plant, and Mr. Reed had his entire wages in his room. No trace has been found as to the guilty parties.

School Started After Christmas Vacation

Professor Fyler Says A Few Words To Local Merchants About Selling Minors Cigarettes.

SECOND LECTURE ON FRIDAY

School opened last Wednesday after the holiday vacation, with about forty pupils absent from the grades with scarlet fever, measles and bad colds.

All students are busy this week reviewing the semester's work, preparatory to the semester examinations which will be held January 19 to 21.

Howard Luick of the class of 1920, has entered the Commercial Course and will do post graduate work the rest of this year.

Thru the courtesy of Mr. Adams a number of the teachers were conducted thru the sugar factory Sunday afternoon and the process of making sugar from beets explained to them.

This week the basket ball teams will play Dows at Dows. The debating team will debate Storm Lake at Storm Lake, and all others may attend the second number of the lecture course Friday night.

There will be no meeting of the Normal Training club until the 2nd semester.

I wish some of our merchants would read the Iowa law concerning the sale of cigarettes to minors, since it was necessary to relieve some pupils in the lower grades of the cigarettes they had brought to school. I trust that nothng further need be said concerning the sale of cigarettes to school pupils.—E. S. Fyler, Supt.

LECTURE COURSE JANUARY 14

BONNIE BROOK COMPANY

The students are hard at work preparing for the home declamatory contest which will be held in the auditorium Wednesday evening, January 26. Remember the date and plan to attend the contest.

THIRD GRADE

The following pupils were neither absent nor tardy during the month: Donald Buchanan, Whitney Bayliss, Merlin Dipple, Max Elder, Robt. Petrow, Muriel Luick, Madonna McNulty, Vinta Packard, Marie Groen, Hazel Francis, Ronald Purcell, Glenn Russell, Arthur Rierson, Raymond Treese, Ruth Leavy, Jan Norby, Francis Quinlin.

Kent Young has moved to his new home in Hampton.

Miss Beatrice Barry spent Friday in visiting the different grades.

DEBATE

On Friday night at Storm Lake Belmond high school debates Storm Lake high school in the first round of the state debating series. This is the first time for several years that Belmond has had a debating team and a great deal of interest is being shown.

The first debate will be a hard one as we understand that the Storm Lake team is an experienced one. The members of the team who will go to Storm Lake are: William Chase, Teddy Johnson, Olive Butts.

TWO MESERVEY PEOPLE MEET WITH ACCIDENTS

Meservey Register: Herman Fischer., Jr., was quite badly burned about the face while starting a fire n the furnace at the Fscher home on Monday evening. He poured kerosene on the fire to make it blaze quickly with the foregoing painful result.

Thursday Clifford E. Brogan had the misfortune of getting his eye injured. Mr. Brogan was driving a spike into a hard board in a box car when the spike flew up, hitting him in the eye. He went to the Park hospital at Mason City on the afternoon train, where he will receive attention. It is not certain as yet whether he will lose the faculty of sight in the injured member.

NIGHT SHIFT AT FACTORY GIVES SUPT. APPRECIATION

Superintendent George Chamberlain, who has charge of the night shift at the sugar factory, is well liked by the night shift, and as a token of their esteem and appreciation the force presented him last week with a fine imported Meerschaum pipe and case. On the case was a silver plate, on which the shift had engraved their appreciation.

Elmer L. Spear Alleged Bigamist Arrested Again

Alleged Bigamist Who Formerly Worked Here And Married Belmond Girl Taken At Mitchell.

MASON CITY UNCLE GETS HIM

Elmer L. Spear, well known to the citizens of this community for the furor he created last spring when he married a local girl while he already had a family, was arrested at Mitchell, South Dakota, last week by his uncle, a Mr Lepper, of Mason City, who had been deputized by the sheriff for the occasion.

Spear was working in a printing office at that place, where he had been for two or three months. He was living with wife number two, a former Belmond girl, who it is understood has been with him for several months. Spear, when he left Mason City last summer, went to Oklahoma, it is said, where he was employed in a printing office. He then went to Nebraska and from that state to South Dakota, where he was arrested.

Spear, while in Oklahoma, applied for membership in a printers association, leaving before his application could be granted. He applied again in South Dakota, and it was thru these applications that he was traced down and finally arrested.

Spear was seen at Mitchell last month by Elmer Reed, a Belmond boy who is employed in that city. Elmer knew nothing about the alleged case of bigamy, but recognized the girl as being from Belmond and in that way came to know Spear.

The alleged bigamist was employed in the Independent office last spring, coming from Laurens, Iowa. He passed himself off as a single man, and after a short courtship was married to Miss Elsie Lee. They went to Oklahoma for a honeymoon, and the girl's relatives, being notified of another wife, started the law to working, Spear being arrested in Oklahoma. He was brought back to Garner, where he was married, and let out on one thousand dollar bonds put up by his uncle at Mason City. He was to stand trial at the October term of court in Hancock county, but skipped his bonds before the court set. The uncle has been tracing him for several months.

It is alleged that at the time he married Miss Lee of this city, he had a wife and two children residing at Laurens, and that he had not secured a divorce.

JOHN KIPLINGER IS THROWN FROM A HORSE AND KILLED

Was Racing With Two Companions On Way To Sugar Factory When Horse Stumbles.

BASE OF SKULL IS FRACTURED

Horse Falls On Him—Lives But Few Minutes After Being Rushed To The Hospital.

John Kiplinger, nineteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Kiplinger, met a tragic death last week Saturday afternoon, when the horse which he was riding threw him to the hard road and then fell on him.

Young Kiplinger was on his way to the sugar factory with two companions, Oscar and Harley Thayer, to seek for employment during the few remaining days of the sugar-making campaign. The three boys were riding horseback, and were going at a good gait. They started racing with each other as they neared the factory, and were almost at the factory grounds when the accident occured.

Oscar Thayer's horse bumped into the horse ridden by Kiplinger, the crash throwing both of the boys off their mounts to the icy road.

John Thompson, who happened to be near the scene at the time, at once placed Kiplinger in his car and started for the hospital at top speed.

When he arrived at the hospital, Doctor Steele stated that the boy was not breathing, tho there was a movement of the pulse. He pronounced it a fracture at the base of the skull, and stated that the lad had lived but a few minutes after the accident.

John Kiplinger was well known in this community, where he had lived most of his life. His parents reside on north Market street, and are retired farmers. They have the sympathy of the entire community in the tragic death of their youngest son.

Oscar and Harley Thayer, the companions of the young man at the time of the accident, are sons of Mr. and Mrs. James Thayer, the former being sixteen years of age and the latter twelve.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon, at the Congregational church, the Rev. S. U. Leinbach officiating, and interment was made in the Franklin Grove cemetery.

John Edward Kiplinger was born on the farm west of town, on May 20, 1902, and died at Belmond on January 8, 1921. He moved to town with his parents about eleven years ago, where he attended the public schools and where he has since made his home.

Strange glory streams thru Life's wild rents,
And thru the open door of Death
We see the haven that beckoneth
To the beloved going hence.

God's ichor fills the hearts that bleed;
The best fruit loads the broken
bough;
And in the wounds our sufferings plow,
Immortal Love sows sovereign seed.
—Gerald Massey.

The out of town relatives who attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Roy Halfpop of Goodell, Mr. and Mrs. Sanford McCallum of Dundee, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Wolf of Holmes, and Mr. and Mrs. Justin Lowenberg of Goodell.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express to our friends and neighbors our deep appreciation and thanks for their many acts of kindness and their help in the death of our son and brother, John, and for the many beautiful floral offerings.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Kiplinger and family.

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Jenison entertained a party of young folks at their home north of Belmond last Friday evening. The evening was spent in games and dancing. Dainty refreshments were served. An enjoyable evening was spent by everyone present.

Pleasant township holds the banner for having the largest number of pupils enrolled in the rural schools of the county last year.

Farm Bureau Notes

ANNUAL MEETING OF FARM BUREAU JANUARY 13

C. W. Hunt, president of the Farm Bureau Federation and Miss Neale S. Knowles, state leader home demonstration agents principle speakers.

Music by Meeker's orchestra.

The annual meeting of the Wright County Farm Bureau will be held at the courthouse building all day Thursday, January 13.

All Farm Bureau officers, co-operators and members are urged to attend this meeting to hear the splendid messages which will be brought by the speakers of the occasion and to take active part in the election of the county officers and assist in outlining the policies of the county farm bureau for the coming year.

It is hoped that every Farm Bureau member will turn out to this meeting regardless of the weather conditions because problems which are of vital interest to everyone will be brought before the meeting at this time. The day of the annual meeting is the Red Letter day in the Farm Bureau work and it is hoped that the attendance this year will be a record breaker. The attendance at the annual meeting last year was about 130.

Following is a tenative program of the day:

10:00 a. m.—Board of Directors' meeting, nomination for county officers.

11:00 a. m.—General session.
1—Opening address by president.
2—Minutes of last meeting.
3—Reports by secretary, auditing committee and county agent.

12:00—Dinner at one of the local churches.

1:00 p. m.—Address by Neale S. Knowles, state leader home demonstration agents.
2—Reading of communication, including message from E. H. Cunningham, secretary Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.
3—Election of officers.
4—Address by C. W. Hunt, president Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.
5—Report of Resolution Committee
6—Unfinished business.
7—New business.
8—Adjournment.

GRANT TOWNSHIP MEETING JANUARY 20TH

Mr. C. L. Hall, township chairman of Grant township farm bureau announcements the regular meeting of the township farm bureau for the evening of Thursday, January 20th. The program committee is arranging a very interesting program for the evening all tho no definite program has been announced as yet. Arrangements are being made to secure an outside speaker and we understand that a school program is to be given in connection with the evening's entertainment. Among those who will appear on the program of the evening will be A. L. Middleton, president of the Wright County Farm Bureau, Miss Blanche Bock, county superintendent and Miss Kate Liddle, county health nurse, and the county agent. An effort is being made to secure a speaker from the extension department for the occasion.

GALT LIVESTOCK SHIPPING ASSOCIATION ACTIVE

The Galt Livestock Shipping Association which was organized in that community during the latter part of December is shipping regularly and doing a lively business, according to a report received from the manager of the association. This association is shipping several carloads of livestock each week and members of the organization are well pleased with the results which they are receiving thru this organization.

FARM BUREAU FEDERATION CONVENTION GREAT SUCCESS

The Iowa State Farm Bureau Federation which was held at the Auditorium at Des Moines January 5th and 6th proved to be a great success by taking action on some of the problems of vital interest to Iowa farmers.

President C. W. Hunt was unanimously re-elected president and Chas E. Hurst, of Cedar Falls, vice president and Mr. E. H. Cunningham who has given such a splendid account of himself during the past year was re-elected secretary to the Federation. The outstanding resolutions which were adopted at the convention were as follows

First—Indorsement of feasible plans for affiliation between co-operative organizations, with the establishment of a bureau of research for collecting and interpreting facts and figures relative to the production of farm crops and livestock conditions which influence supply and demand.

Second—That the accumulation of large campaign funds of political parties and the extravagant expenditures of private money by candidates for public office is contrary to public policy and detrimental to the best ideals of citizenship and that the practice should be prevented by law.

Third—Reccomendation to the state legislature to make liberal appropriations for the eradication of tuberculosis from the livestock of the state.

Fourth—A request to congress for the enactment of such laws as will protect the country against the undesirable immigrant and recommendations of an embargo against all immigration until more stability in industry has been established.

Fifth—The indorsement of the resolution adopted by the American Farm Bureau Federation at Indianapolis that women shall be admitted o membership.

The following statements were taken from Mr. Cunningham's address:

"The farm federation has come to stay." There were days in its infancy when we doubted, perhaps, that it could survive, but today with the completion of this second successful convention we have not a doubt that the bureau will be an economic factor in perpetuating farm ideals and getting legislation thru congress which will be beneficial to the farmers.

"We are going into the year with real farmers' organizations and we have our hearts and souls in the work. Farming is a business and as such we are going to put it on a businesslike basis. During the last year the farmers of the country have been under high tension and at many times despair faced the producer, but the farmer feels his obligation to the world and the world is beginning to see the farmer in a different light, and realize that his problems should have the co-operation of all mankind for the world depends on the American farmer."

"We believe in constructive policies" It is not our purpose to destroy any organization but to assist, and we are not going to advise any new methods and laws until we earnestly believe that by their adoption mankind will be benefited.

Wright county was well represented at the convention, and those who attended from our county were Harry Sumners, Dayton township, Joe Abernathy, Boone township, Evan Patton, Blaine township.

WRIGHT COUNTY TO HAVE ORCHARD SPECIALIST

During the organization meetings which were held for the purpose of outlining the year's work, a number calls were made by various township for assistance from the extension department in organizing spray rings and in answer to this call the Farm Bureau has secured the services of W. J. Kocken who is a specialist in orchard work

Mr. Kocken will be in Wright county Friday and Saturday January 21 and 22 for the purpose of organizing spray rings in the different townships which asked for these organizations.

Those who attend the dual orchard and poultry demonstrations last spring will remember Mr. Kocken and the splendid work which he put on at that time in connection with the orchard and poultry and lecture work.

FARMERS SHOULD ADOPT INVENTORY PLAN OF REPORTING INCOMES

Most farms are showing losses this year, and there is not much concern about income taxes. However, one point is generally overlooked. That is that this is a very favorable time for farmers to change to the inventory plan of reporting.

Most farmers have been reporting their incomes on the cash basis, a plan which is used by very few other businesses. The cash basis does not show the true farm profit, and usually a farmer will pay more income tax over a period of years than he will on the inventory plan. For example, a rancher may buy a bunch of steers, feed them for two years, and then sell at $10,000 increase over the cost price. Under the cash plan, this will all be reported as profit for the year of sale, and he will have a tax of $750. Under the inventory plan, this will be divided and figured as an income of around $5,000 for each of the two years, which will result in a total tax for the two years of $480, or $270 less than if figured on the cash basis. Both methods of reporting are legally correct.

When a change from the cash basis to the inventory basis is made, the livestock and crops accumulated since 1915 must be reported as income in the year of change. Therefore, it is best to make this change in a year when the farm is taking a loss rather than in a year of large profits. This is not tax-dodging. It is simply putting farming onto the same business that other business concerns use.

"KNOW YOUR COW" FIRST REQUISITE OF DAIRY SUCCESS

If it were possible to limit the number of requisites of success in dairydom to one, that one would be "Know your cows," says the instructor in dairy husbandry at the South Dakota state college.

Heavy feeding, or feeding a balanced ration does not assure success, altho it will increase somewhat the production of the dairy herd. Purebred dairy cows do not guarantee success, not even purebred cows from high producing ancestry. Expensive dairy barns and equipment will probably make dairy more interesting, and increase somewhat the total production, but it is not a requisite for success. Many great dairy cows have been developed and have produced a wonderful record in barns that would not measure up to the standard so far as up-to-date dairy barns go.

No dairy cow has ever produced her maximum unless her feeder knew her. Knowing her means more than simply calling her by name and reciting the names of her ancestors. It means understanding her every need, desire and condition. For, after all, the dairy cow is an individual, and as such possesses individuality.

It seems well nigh unbelievable that dairymen will continue groping in the dark on this all-important matter, when by means of a pair of scales, a Babcock testing outfit and a little work every dairyman could know what each cow in his herd produced, and thus have a sound basis on which to feed and judge te individual merits of each cow in his herd.

SELL CORN AT $1.30

Webster City, Ia., Jan. 12.—John R. Brown, of the Webster City Elevator Company has just written the largest check he ever wrote for a single purchase of corn.

It was for $7,430 and went to Buscom Huddlestun.

Mr. Huddlestun, last July, sold to the Webster City Elevator Company the corn output of his farm southeast of the city, estimated at 6,000 bushels, for December delivery. The price at that time was $1.30 per bushel, to be paid upon delivery of the corn.

For almost a week Mr. Huddlestun has had motor trucks hauling corn to the Webster City company's elevator. He was oblbiged to make delivery this month and, having started so late, used the trucks in order to get it here within the time limit. With the local corn market around 53 cents just now, Mr. Huddleston's foresight in selling last July was certainly a good streak of business judgment.

Mr. Brown has been in the grain buying business a good many years but never before has he written a check so large for a single purchase of corn.

BOARDER COW MAKES INROAD ON DAIRYMAN'S PROFITS

Many dairymen still resort to the guessing method of feedingg their herds, selecting their breeding stock and selling their surplus. This guessing is hazardous. The whole operation is a guess, and the success or failure is as accurate—a fifty-fifty chance.

Before a cow can be fed what she needs and no more, and that is the only sane and economical way of feeding, the feeder must know how many pounds of milk she produced and how much butter fat was in the milk.

It would not provoke profound thinking to see the fallacy of feeding a cow which produces 50 pounds of 4 per cent milk the same amount and kind of grain as a cow which produces 20 pounds of 3 per cent milk, yet that is being done among too many dairymen. Dairymen should burn these sentences indelibly on their minds: Milk is produced from the feed and water a cow consumes. If the feed is inadequate the milk flow will be likewise. "Know your cows" and if you have the dairy spirit lurking in your make-up, you will follow the path that leads to success. No understanding heart would withhold feed from a cow if he knew by feeding it the milk flow would be increased threefold. Neither would the true dairyman give feed to a cow which he knew was eating the profits made by his other cows.

One of the greatest inroads on the profit of the dairyman is the boarder cow. She not only does not produce milk at a profit but literally eats the profit made by the profitable cows. Up-to-date the only sure means of detecting the boarder cow is weighing and testing her mik. The dairyman who guesses at the production of his cows is no nearer the facts than the man who guesses on any other proposition Success can never come to the guesser, for he has neglected to abide by the fundamentals of dairying the necessity for knowing the individual cows.

NEW BLUE SKY LAW WITH TEETH PLAN OF RAMSAY.

Farmers of Iowa, and other persons who have been regarded as game for stock salesmen, will be guarded against such failures as that of the Associated Packing company if a "blue sky" law to be reccomended to the legislature by Secretary of State Walter C. Ramsay is adopted, according to the author of the bill.

Corporations who have been hiding behind the clause in the present law exempting Iowa companies from examination whether they paid commissions or not, will have to come out in the open, Mr. Ramsay said yesterday.

If the law is passed, the secretary of state will immediately start examinations of all companies that are on the edge of the abyss.

Semiannual statements from all corporations will be required. The old law asks for but one yearly statement.

An outstanding feature of the law, Mr. Ramsay believes, will be the clause making violations of it a felony instead of a misdemeanor, as at present. The old law has permitted fradulent stock salesmen the opportunityl of getting out of the state after their depredations, and has left authorities no means of bringing them back.

Corporations oranized under the proposed law will receive thoro examinations before authority is granted them to organize. After these companies are formed the state department will continue constant supervision of them.

The provision for commission for sale of stock has nt been completely worked out in the proposed bill. However, a maximum commission between 10 per cent and 15 per cent will be set. Also, the bill will set a maximum amount for organization expenses, for lawyers fees and the like. If the cost of organization runs over this limit, the extra must come out of the agents' commissions.

This will make impossible the setting of entirely ficticious charges designed to eat up a large part of the capital of the companies.

All agents of such companies under the new law will be bonded. Heretofore, the dealer who hired these agents was the only one required to furnish a bond.

One of the principal difficulties with the old law according to authoritie has been the vagueness of many of its provisions. Common law companies have insisted that they did not come under its jurisdiction, for the reason that they are not mentioned in it.

The secretary of state has had the power to examine these corporations, but no provision was made for the payment of examiners for the purpose. Examiners were not willing to spend their time and efforts in supervision of Iowa corporations when payment of ther fees was problematical.

Very few litigations in Iowa have been about corporations organized outside the state, he said. These are well covered under the old law. Iowa corporations, the most deadly from the standpoint of their being next . . . . . of the eople, have caused most of the trouble, Mr. Ramsay stated.

The proposed law was drafted by Secretary Ramsay and Col. Lloyd D. Ross, superintendent of the securities department.—Des Moines Register.

THE CHOKING HAND OF CREDIT

We can supply Wall Street with billions for gambling; we can use more than a billion in government funds to support a broken down trans port system; we can supply millions and billions of credit to Europe; we can and are financing the profiteering sugar farmers of Cuba during their market crisis, but we cannot help the American farmer to help himself and sidestep the bankruptcy which threatens him in a similar crisis here at home, not even when he is feeding the American nation at prices far below the cost of production.

To save American farmers from an estimated loss of two and one-half billions of dollars, thru being compelled to sell, or to dump by contract, 20 billion dollars worth of farm products on demoralized markets unable immediately to assimilate a fraction of such quanity—these farmers need approximately 250 billion dollars of short-time credit and they cannot get it.

Neither the secretary of the treasury—the same treasury which advanced the railroads $1,031,899.451—nor the Federal Reserve system which has an unused lending power of 750 million dollars that could be raised to two and one-half billions, can provide a few millions, it appears, for an 80-billion dollar industry which supplies us each year with 20 billions of new business and furnishes the breath of life to national prosperity.

I recite these facts merely to show how faulty is a credit and banking system which cannot finance an American industry so fundamentally important that it produces 20 billions of new wealth every year in the form of food, as well as raw materials for manufacturers; but which can and which did provide New York and Wall Street with loans aggregating two and one-half billion dollars for gambling and speculating on 42 different days last year, as recently reported by the comptroller of the currency, Mr. Williams.

While our wool growers, our livestock producers, our wheat raisers, our cotton farmers are facing ruin because they cannot borrow money—"bank credit being overstrained"— it is curious to read in the day's news of the tremendous amount of foreign financing now being done in the United States. Four issues of foreign securities, aggregating 42 million dollars, were quickly sold in this country last week.

It is equally novel to learn from the Wall Street Journal that "the decision of American bankers to extend fiinancia aid to Cuba has been a favorable influence" on the sugar market.

The Cuban sugar crop, it seems, was nearing harvest. Cuban plantation owners needed financial support, because the price of sugar was dropping. They appealed to American bankers, and we have the spectacle of American financial support promptly forthcoming to the Cuban farmer, but not in a greater crisis to the men who farm in the United States, the men who produce the food on which we live.

We can finance a 26-billion-dollar war, we can finance European governments to the extent of another 10 billions, we can supply more than a billion of funds to American railways and we can furnish month after month other billions of credit for wild and woolly speculation. But we've no money to lend to the hard-pressed young farm family struggling to pay for a home, nor to save from bankruptcy the men who have all their worth in wool, cotton, livestock or grain, tied up by a car-shortage on one hand and by demoralized, no-bottom markets on the other.

It is true the Federal Reserve Board denies that credit has been withheld in agricultural sections, but if that credit is wholly inadequate as we know it is, what does that denial amount to? The Federal Reserve bank at Kansas City has charged as high interest as 20 percent per annum this year.

What we do know and what the fact is, is that the farmers of the United States, for lack of sufficient credit to enable them to market their products in an orderly manner, now face loss of two and one-half billion dollars, a matter of greatest importance to the American people, for if our farmers are to be so terribly crippled financially, how are they to produce another 20 billions of food and prosperity for the American people next year?

This is the welfare of welfare questions, for the life blood of business, the employment of millions of wage earners, depend directly and solely upon the tide of prosperity which flows annually from the farms of America.

It is this prosperity, which on June 30, last, made it possible for the assets of American banks to exceed the combined assets of all other leading nations—a total of more than 53 billions of dollars—our biggest financial watermark.

Under our present system, this wealth, actually produced for the most part on the farms of the agricultural west, flows to the big banks in Chicago and New York, then much of it to Europe, where it is lost to us for years, when a great part of it should immediately be employed in making possible the farm production on which this nation depends for its most vital needs and in safeguarding the prosperous continuance of that process of production.

As remedial measures for our prostrated farming industry, immediate and future, we might well re-establish the War Finance Corporation to assist in the financing of exports. This government has got to devise some plan to open foreign markets immediately to our grain and meat products. And the Federal Farm Loan Board should have authoritity to issue and sell in the open market short time securities based on warehouse receipts, also on an adequate pledge where the title must remain with the producer, until his products are marketed; these securities to be acceptable for rediscount by the Federal Reserve banks.

Whatever the outcome of this credit crisis, in which American farmers face bankruptcy, the value of the present lesson must not be lost. It is that the spring from which all the wealth of this nation arises, shall not be choked; that the agricultural industry shall be and must be as well and as adequately financed and fortified as any other industry; that we cannot neglect it with impunity.—Senator Capper in Capper's Weekly for January, 1921.

FARMERS ARE MARKETING CORN NOW AT RAPID RATE

Station Agent Champlin, of the Rock Island at Homes, was in the city Wednesday morning and reported that the corn was going out of the Holmes station now four to five car loads a day—the heaviest shipments from that station many months. The farmers of that vicinity are shelling and many are marketing, believing there is no likelihood of getting a much better price for this year's crop and preferring to cash in now and relieve their own financial stringency. Four or five carloads of corn a day, over a period of a few weeks, will bring considerable money to a community and will help wonderfully.—Clipper.

BEN GREIMAN MAKES A MOTOR SLED

Ben Greiman, living near Klemme, has the real thing when it comes to getting over the ice and snow at real speed. Ben has converted his flivver into a regular motor sled by putting some quick detachable runners under the front wheels and putting chains on the rear wheels to supply the power. The thing will hit twenty-five or thirty like a dream and no snow is too deep for this contraption to go thru. To make it real light Ben took everything off that could be amputated from the flivver and still make it run. A fine feature of the machine is that the runners can be removed or put on in a very few minutes.—Klemme Times.

Taking Desperate Chances

It is true that many contract severe colds and recover from them without taking any precaution or treatment, and a knowledge of this fact leads others to take their chances instead of giving their colds the needed attention. It should be borne in mind that every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality, makes the system less able to wthstanu each succeeding attck and paves the way for the more serious diseases. Can you afford to take such desperate chances when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of bad colds may be had for a trifle?—For sale at Adams Pharmacy.

BARRING THE BOLSHEVIKS

There is now in congress, or will be presented to that honorable body, a bill limiting immigration to this country for a certain specified period.

It should be passed by all means. Not that the United States does not want citizens of foreign birth, or that it has too many now, but that under the present conditions of this country and of the old countries, immigration should be restricted for the benefit of both. The United States already has felt the effects of indiscriminate and unrestricted immigration. We have a labor market at the present time that is glutted with cheap and easily procured help. There is not a city of any size but what has its thousand of idle labor to deal with, that have their centers of foreign-born residents who have not assimilated American ideals or ideas and in consequence live a miniture life of the old country. An ever-increasing unrest and dissatisfaction, disrespect for the law and open disavowal of any adherance to American institutions fill the papers every day.

It is time we digested what we have already swallowed before we eat any more.

America may be the "melting pot" of the world, but the pot should be given a rest and a chance to skim off the skum, that the future product may be up to standard.

Immigration should be restricted, with fairness to both sides, and a stronger and stiffer requirement be exacted from foreigners upon entering this country. Those who are permitted to enter this land of opportunity should be only the kind who will appreciate the blessings so freely bestowed, and not those who do not and never will care for anything this country may provide but what they want, without work or without effort on heir own part. The foreigners should not be permitted to segregate themselves into colonies of their own, living their own lives independently of the rest of the nation, following the old country customs and traditions. If a man is to come here from another country, let him live up to our customes and ideas, measure his living by our standards. If he will not, then he is an unwelcome guest.

Under no circumstances should any foreigner, regardless of his station in life, his ability or his wealth, be permitted to enter our gates if he has in any form Bolshevik ideas. We have had enough of these parasites of civilization; they have stirred up too much discontent already in this country.

When a person has overeaten, the first thing the doctor orders is a diet: America has attempted to digest too big a meal—let's cut down on the supply a while until our system clears up.

LET'S HAVE SOME SERVICE

As it is with individuals, so is it with a town: You'll get just what you go after and no more.

If you don't go, you won't get.

Belmond needs two things, and it needs them badly: Better express and telegraph service.

The protests by Belmond firms in the past have gone unheeded, and it is time a definite action was taken to show the express and telegraph companies that Belmond means business. The Chamber of Commerce it is understood has endeavored in the past to obtain better service, and has been put off. The business men as individuals have protested to no avail.

We now have one-way express service every 24 hours. It has resulted in delay and serious inconvenience to every business firm here who gets express over the Great Western. The Motor carries only perishable express; why can it not carry express of limited size and a suitable nature?

Why can not the trains at night carry express? It might increase expenses for the company by five or ten dollars a month. D. K. Brown, superintendent of the American Railway Express company, at Des Moines in a letter dated Nov. 30, 1920, regarding the matter said

"It will not be possible for us to have service on trains No. 11 and 12 at Belmond for by so doing we would find our expenses increased."

The company wants the trade, however.

Belmond needs an up-town telegraph office, open until nine or ten at night. Many firms who want quick work, and must have quick work, in long distance business, have found themselves badly handicaped thru this one thing. All operators here are willing and anxious to give service, but they cannot give more than their companies allow.

Why not combine the express offices into one, and locate an up-town telegraph office at the same place? The express companies like any company wants to save. Why not put all offices into one, thereby cutting down the overhead, have their own delivery within certain limits, and give more and better service? Clarion has it—why not here?

We understand that the various expressmen of the city are agreed on the centering of the offices; why then does the company hold back?

Put some life into it! When Belmond wakes up and says in no uncertain terms that it wants what it wants, then Belmond will get it. It is a cinch that the companies are not going to do anything until they see that the TOWN is after it, and that the TOWN means business. A public utility such as the express and telegrahp company depends upon the public for its support; and that public has a right to service.

All efforts will be fruitless unless a united demand is made. Show them that we mean business, and we will get service. As it is, right now about all we are getting is stung.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m.

It was encouraging last Sunday morning to note the largest attendance we have had at any morning service in over four months. There was also a large attendance at Sunday school, with three new scholars enrolled. Vice president elect Coolidge is reported as having recently said: "The Sunday school gave me famliarity with the scriptures. No words can praise too much the worth of the teaching of he Bible. Upon it rests those convictions which are vital to individual character and to government. To be familiar with the scriptures is of inestimable value to anyone!"

Are there some children in your home who are not enrolled in any Sunday school? Why not start them next Sunday, or better still, as parents come with them?

The Epworth League devotional meeting next Sunday evening will be led by Mrs. E. S. Fyler. New officers of the League for the next six months were elected Sunday evening. The are Merrill Stapley, Bernetas Wolle, Alpha Bayliss, Alma Stapley, Doris Bailey, Leona Smith, Ralph Hedges, and Dorothy Purcell.

A welcome awaits you at all the services of the church.

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The Ladies Aid Society will hold a business meeting in the parlors of the church on Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The officers of the church will meet on Thursday evening in the office of the superintendent of the Telephone company, at 8:00 o'clock.

We are now getting a good start in the new year. Last Sunday the Sabbath school was reorganized and we are now well able to take care of all who come. The superintendent Mr. Hinman, has set as our standard for this year an average attendance of 100. This will not be as large an increase as we made last year and if all will help we can surpass it. There were 87 present last Sunday.

Remember the Sabbath school meets at 10:00 and the morning worship is at 11:00. We would like to see just a few more at the evening services at 7:30.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 12

"What Would You Do?"

A Fox picture featuring

Madelaine Traverss

Also a Comicclassic-1500 comedy—500 scenery.

11c and 25c

THURSDAY, JAN. 13

"The Square Shooter"

A Fox picture featuring

Buck Jones

Also a two-reel Sunshine comedy.

11c and 25c

FRIDAY, JAN. 14

"The Texan"

Featuring

Tom Mix

"The Texan" is an unusual story about a cowpuncher who was different from other kinds of cowpunchers. Tom Mix, of course, is Tex Benton, the Texan—wilder, and a whole lot more skillful than the others. Otherwise he wouldn't have won the championships at the big rodeo.

The story keeps gathering speed as it goes along and it runs into the last reel like a bullet from Tex's six gun.

If you like the west, and like Tom Mix, you'll like this play.

Also a one-reel comedy.

11c and 25c

SATURDAY, JAN. 15

"Hawthorne of the U. S. A."

A paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Wallace Reid

Wallace Reid considers himself one of he luckiest film stars in the business. Not only is he happily married, the father of a budding youngster, and one of the most popular and highest paid luminaries of the screen, but he has packed several times as many accidents into his youthful career as the ordinary mortal hopes to encounter.

Also a Toonerville Comedy. These comedies are taken from the Fontane Fox cartoons but are acted by real people.

11c and 25c

MONDAY, JAN. 17

"Dice of Destiny"

A Pathe picture featuring

H. B. Warner

H. B. Warner has come thru with another good picture in Dice of Destiny. This picture follows along the lines of the play which made Warner so popular a few years ago: Alias Jimmy Valentine.

The story opens with a bang. Its chief asset lies in the many novel sequences. For instance, in the opening sequence the legs of the star are shown as he approaches a workman eating his lunch. This man is a detective planted to watch Warner. Warner gives him a doped cigarette, steals his badge and then—!! Don't you miss it.

TUESDAY, JAN. 18

"The Amateur Wife"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Irene Castle

The romantic tale of an "ugly duckling" who was bred in a convent and went to bed at nine. Till she reached New York and learned to grow fine feathers. Then Husband found he had married a wife who could fly!

Edge, pastor of the Methodist church at Belmond, and A. D. Mohr, pastor of the Congregational church here. A cordial welcome to be present is extended to all the members of this community.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Kieslich entertained at their home Thursday evening a party of young folks in honor of Mr. Cornwell, the evening being spent in playing numerous games in which all took part. Great fun was in order when the hour came to chose partners for supper and great was the astonishment of most of them when they found they had guessed wrong. Mrs. Kieslich then served a very delicious luncheon and in the wee hours of the morning many of the inhabitants living along the wayside were aroused from their peaceful slumber by the party's laugh ter and rumbling of the wheels. Among those present were Harold Cornwell, Lillie Cornwell, Bertha Gartz, Hazel Hendrickson, Herbert Mallory, Arthur Winwood, Jessie Bell Nellie Bell, Vivian Meierbachtol, Cornelius Stoffer, Addie Larsen, Alma Scheideman, Theodore Beenen, Ray Richards and Bert Kieslich.

Prologue.

If one can just lie close enough to the breast of the wilderness, he can't help but be imbued with some of the life that pulses therein.—From a Frontiersman's Diary.

Long ago, when the great city of Gitcheapolis was a rather small, untidy hamlet in the middle of a plain, it used to be that a pool of water, possibly two hundred feet square, gathered every spring immediately back of the courthouse. The snow falls thick and heavy in Gitcheapolis in winter; and the pond was nothing more than snow water that the inefficient drainage system of the city did not quite absorb. Besides being the despair of the plumbers and the city engineer, it was a severe strain on the beauty-loving instincts of every inhabitant in the town who had any such instincts. It was muddy and murky and generally distasteful.

A little boy played at the edge of the water, this spring day of long ago. Except for his interest in the pond, it would have been scarcely worth while to go to the trouble of explaining that it contained no fish. He, however, bitterly regretted the fact. In truth, he sometimes liked to believe that it did contain fish, very sleepy fish that never made a ripple, and as he had an uncommon imagination he was sometimes able to convince himself that this was so. But he never took hook and line and played at fishing. He was too much afraid of the laughter of his boy friends. His mother probably wouldn't object if he fished here, he thought, particularly if he were careful not to get his shoes covered with mud. But she wouldn't let him go down to Gitcheapolis creek to fish with the other boys for mud cat. He was not very strong, she thought, and it was a rough sport anyway, and besides—she didn't think he wanted to go very badly. As mothers are usually particularly understanding, this was a curious thing.

The truth was that little Dan Failing wanted to fish almost as much as he wanted to live. He would dream about it of nights. His blood would glow with the thought of it in the springtime. Women the world over will have a hard time believing what an intense, heart-devouring passion the love of the chase can be, whether it is for fishing or hunting or merely knocking golf balls into a little hole upon a green. Sometimes they don't remember that this instinct is just as much a part of most men, and thus most boys, as their hands or their lips. It was acquired by just as laborious a process—the lives of uncounted thousands of ancestors who fished and hunted for a living.

It was true that little Dan didn't look the part. Even then he showed signs of physical frailty. His eyes looked rather large, and his cheeks were not the color of fresh sirloin, as they should have been. In fact, one would have had to look very hard to see any color in them at all. These facts are interesting from the light they throw upon the next glimpse of Dan, fully twenty years later.

Except for the fact that it was the background for the earliest picture of little Dan, the pool back of the courthouse has very little importance in his story. It did, however, afford an illustration to him of one of the really astonishing truths of life. He saw a shadow in the water that he pretended he thought might be a fish. He threw a stone at it.

The only thing that happened was a splash, and then a slowly widening ripple. The circumference of the ripple grew ever larger, extended and widened, and finally died at the edge of the shore. It set little Dan to thinking. He wondered if, had the pool been larger, the ripple still would have spread; and if the pool had been eternity, whether the ripple would have gone on forever. At the time he did not know the laws of cause and effect. Later, when Gitcheapolis was great and prosperous and no longer untidy, he was going to find out that a cause is nothing but a rock thrown into a pond of infinity, and the ripple that is its effect keeps growing and growing forever.

The little incident that is the real beginning of this story was of no more importance than a pebble thrown into the snow-water pond; but its effect was to remove the life of Dan Failing, since grown up, far out of the realms of the ordinary.

And that brings all matters down to 1919, in the last days of a particularly sleepy summer. You would hardly know Gitcheapolis now. The business district has increased tenfold. And the place where used to be the pool and the playground of Dan Failing is now laid off in as green and pretty a city park as one could wish to see.

Some day, when the city becomes more prosperous, a pair of swans and a herd of deer are going to be introduced, to restore some of the natural wild life of the park. But in the summer of 1919, a few small birds and possibly half a dozen pairs of squirrels were the extent and limit of the wild creatures. And at the moment this story opens, one of these squirrels was perched on a wide-spreading limb overarching a gravel path that slanted through the sunlit park. The squirrel was hungry. He wished that some one would come along with a nut.

There was a bench beneath the tree. If there had not been, the life of Dan Failing would have been entirely different. If the squirrel had been on any other tree, if he hadn't been hungry, if any one of a dozen other things hadn't been as they were, Dan Failing would have never gone back to the land of his people. The little bushy-tailed fellow on the tree limb was the squirrel of Destiny!

BOOK ONE

Repatriation.

CHAPTER I.

Dan Failing stepped out of the elevator and was at once absorbed in the crowd that ever surged up and down Broad street. He was just one of the ordinary drops of water, not an interesting, elaborate, physical and chemical combination to be studied on the slide of a microscope. He wore fairly passable clothes, neither rich nor shabby. He was a tall man, but gave no impression of strength because of the exceeding spareness of his frame. As long as he remained in the crowd, he wasn't important enough to be studied. But soon he turned off, through the park, and straightway found himself alone.

The noise and bustle of the crowd—never loud or startling, but so continuous that the senses are scarcely more aware of them than of the beating of one's own heart—suddenly and utterly died almost at the very border of the park. The noise from the street seemed wholly unable to penetrate the thick branches of the trees. He could even hear the leaves whisking and flicking together, and when a man can discern this, he can hear the cushions of a mountain lion on a trail at night. Of course Dan Failing had never heard a mountain lion. Except on the railroad tracks between, he had never really been away from cities in his life.

At once his thought went back to the doctor's words. They were still repeating themselves over and over in his ears, and the doctor's face was still before his eyes. It had been a kind face; the lips had even curled in a little smile of encouragement. But the doctor had been perfectly frank, entirely straightforward. There had been no evasion in his verdict.

"I've made every test," he said. "They're pretty well shot. Of course, you can go to some sanitarium, if you've got the money. If you haven't—enjoy yourself all you can for about six months."

Dan's voice had been perfectly cool and sure when he replied. He had smiled a little, too. He was still rather proud of that smile. "Six months? Isn't that rather short?"

"Maybe a whole lot shorter. I think that's the limit."

There was the situation: Dan Failing had but six months to live. He began to wonder whether his mother had been entirely wise in her effort to keep him from the "rough games" of the boys of his own age. He realized now that he had been an underweight all his life—that the frailty that had thrust him to the edge of the grave had begun in his earliest boyhood. But it wasn't that he was born with physical handicaps. He had weighed a full ten pounds; and the doctor had told his father that a sturdier little chap was not to be found in any maternity bed in the whole city. But his mother was convinced that the child was delicate and must be sheltered. Never in all the history of his family, so far as Dan knew, had there been a death from the malady that afflicted him. Yet his sentence was signed and sealed.

But he harbored no resentment against his mother. It was all in the game. She had done what she thought was best. And he began to wonder in what way he could get the greatest pleasure from his last six months of life.

"Good Lord!" he suddenly breathed. "I may not be here to see the snows come!" Dan had always been partial to the winter season. When the snow lay all over the farm lands and bowed down the limbs of the trees, it had always wakened a curious flood of feelings in the wasted man. It seemed to him that he could remember other winters, wherein the snow lay for endless miles over an endless wilderness, and here and there were strange, many-toed tracks that could be followed in the icy dawns. But of course it was just a fancy. He wasn't in the least misled about it. He knew that he had never, in his lifetime, seen the wilderness. Of course his grandfather had been a frontiersman of the first order, and all his ancestors before him—a rangy, hardy breed whose wings would crumple in civilization—but he himself had always lived in cities. Yet the falling snows, soft and gentle but with a kind of remorselessness he could sense but could not understand, had always stirred him. He'd often imagined that he would like to see the forests in winter.

In him you could see a reflection of the boy that played beside the pond of snow water, twenty years before. His dark gray eyes were still rather large and perhaps the wasted flesh around them made them seem larger than they were. But it was a little hard to see them, as he wore large glasses. His mother had been sure, years before, that he needed glasses; and she had easily found an oculist that agreed with her.

Now that he was alone on the path, the utter absence of color in his cheeks was startling. That meant the absence of red—that warm glow of the blood eager and alive in his veins. Perhaps an observer would have noticed lean hands, with big-knuckled fingers, a rather firm mouth, and closely cropped dark hair. He was twenty-nine years of age, but he looked somewhat older. He knew now that he was never going to be any older. A doctor as sure of himself as the one he had just consulted couldn't possibly be mistaken.

He sat down on a park bench, just beneath the spreading limb of a great tree. He would sit here, he thought, until he finally decided what he would do with his remaining six months.

He hadn't been able to go to war. The recruiting officer had been very kind but most determined. The boys had brought him great tales of France. It might be nice to go to France and live in some country inn until he died. But he didn't have very long to think upon this vein. For at that instant the squirrel came down to see if he had a nut.

It was the squirrel of Destiny. But Dan didn't know it then.

Bushy-tail was not particularly afraid of the human beings that passed up and down the park, because he had learned by experience that they usually attempted no harm to him. But, nevertheless, he had his instincts. He didn't entirely trust them. After several generations, probably the squirrels of this park would climb all over its visitors and sniff in their ears and investigate the back of their necks. But this wasn't the way of Bushy-tail. He had come too recently from the wild places. And he wondered, most intensely, whether this tall, forked creature had a pocket full of nuts. He swung down on the grass to see.

"Why, you little devil!" Dan said in a whisper. His eyes suddenly sparkled with delight. And he forgot all about the doctor's words and his own prospects in his bitter regrets that he had not brought a pocketful of nuts.

"Why, You Little Devil!" Dan Said in a Whisper.

And then Dan did a curious thing. Even later, he didn't know why he did it, or what gave him the idea that he could decoy the squirrel up to him by doing it. That was his only purpose—just to see how close the squirrel would come to him. He thought he would like to look into the bright eyes at close range. All he did was suddenly to freeze into one position—in an instant rendered as motionless as the rather questionable-looking stone stork that was perched on the fountain.

The squirrel was very close to him, and Dan seemed to know by instinct that the movement of a single muscle would give him away. So he sat as if he were posing before a photographer's camera. The fact that he was able to do it is in itself important. It is considerably easier to exercise with dumb-bells for five minutes than to sit absolutely without motion for the same length of time. Hunters and naturalists acquire the art with training. It was therefore rather curious that Dan succeeded so well the first time he tried it. He had sense enough to relax first, before he froze. Thus he didn't put such a severe strain on his muscles.

The squirrel, after ten seconds had elapsed, stood on his haunches to see better. First he looked a long time with his left eye. Then he turned his head and looked very carefully with his right. Then he backed off a short distance and tried to get a focus with both. Then he came some half-dozen steps nearer.

A moment before he had been certain that a living creature—in fact one of the most terrible and powerful living creatures in the world—had been sitting on the park bench. Now his poor little brain was completely addled. He was entirely ready to believe that his eyes had deceived him.

Bushy-tail drew off a little further, fully convinced at last that his hopes of a nut from a child's hand were blasted. But he turned to look once more. The figure still sat utterly inert. And all at once he forgot his devouring hunger in the face of an overwhelming curiosity.

He came somewhat nearer and looked a long time. Then he made a half-circle about the bench, turning his head as he moved. He was more puzzled than ever, but he was no longer afraid. His curiosity had become so intense that no room for fear was left. And then he sprang upon the park bench.

Dan moved then. The movement consisted of a sudden heightening of the light in his eyes. But the squirrel didn't see it. It takes a muscular response to be visible to the eyes of the wild things.

The squirrel crept slowly along the bench, stopping to sniff, stopping to stare with one eye and another, just devoured from head to tail with curiosity. And then he leaped on Dan's knee.

He was quite convinced, by now, that this warm perch on which he stood was the most singular and interesting object of his young life. It was true that he was faintly worried by the smell that reached his nostrils. But all it really did was further to incite his curiosity. He followed the leg up to the hip and then perched on the elbow. And an instant more he was poking a cold nose into Dan's neck.

But if the squirrel was excited by all these developments, its amazement was nothing compared to Dan's. It had been the most astounding incident in the man's life. He sat still, tingling with delight. And in a single flash of inspiration he knew he had come among his own people at last. He knew where he would spend his last six months of life.

His own grandfather had been a hunter and trapper and frontiersman in a certain vast but little known Oregon forest. His son had moved to the eastern cities, but in Dan's garret there used to be old mementoes and curios from these savage days—a few claws and teeth, and a fragment of an old diary. The call had come to him at last. Tenderfoot though he was, Dan would go back to those forests, to spend his last six months of life among the wild creatures that made them their home.

CHAPTER II.

The dinner hour found Dan Failing in the public library of Gitcheapolis, asking the girl who sat behind the desk if he might look at maps of Oregon. He remembered that his grandfather had lived in southern Oregon. He looked along the bottom of his map and discovered a whole empire, ranging from gigantic sage plains to the east to dense forests along the Pacific ocean. He began to search for Linkville.

Time was when Linkville was one of the principal towns of Oregon. Dan remembered the place because some of the time-yellowed letters his grandfather had sent him had been mailed at a town that bore this name. But he couldn't find Linkville on the map.

He Couldn't Find Linkville on the Map.

Later he was to know the reason—that the town, half way between the sage plains and the mountains, had prospered and changed its name. He remembered that it was located on one of those great fresh-water lakes of southern Oregon; so, giving up that search, he began to look for lakes. He found them in plenty—vast, unmeasured lakes that seemed to be distributed without reason or sense over the whole southern end of the state. Near the Klamath lakes, seemingly the most imposing of all the fresh-water lakes that the map revealed, he found a city named Klamath Falls. He put the name down in his notebook.

The map showed a particularly high, far-spreading range of mountains due west of the city. Of course they were the Cascades; the map said so very plainly. Then Dan knew he was getting home. His grandfather had lived and trapped and died in these same wooded hills. Finally he located and recorded the name of the largest city on the main railroad line that was adjacent to the Cascades.

The preparation for his departure took many days. He read many books on flora and fauna. He bought sporting equipment. Knowing the usual ratio between the respective pleasures of anticipation and realization, he did not hurry himself at all. And one midnight he boarded a west-bound train.

He sat for a long time in the vestibule of the sleeping car, thinking in anticipation of this final adventure of his life. He was rather tremulous and exultant as he sank down into his berth.

He saw to it that at least a measure of preparation was made for his coming. That night a long wire went out to the Chamber of Commerce of one of the larger southern Oregon cities. In it, he told the date of his arrival and asked certain directions. He wanted to know the name of some mountain rancher where possibly he might find board and room for the remainder of the summer and the fall. The further back from the paths of men, he wrote, the greater would be his pleasure. And he signed the wire with his full name: Dan Failing, with a Henry in the middle, and a "III" at the end.

He usually didn't sign his name in quite this manner. The people of Gitcheapolis did not have particularly vivid memories of Dan's grandfather. But it might be that a legend of the gray, straight frontiersman who was his ancestor had still survived in these remote Oregon wilds. The use of the full name would do no harm.

Instead of hurting, it was a positive inspiration. The Chamber of Commerce of the busy little Oregon city was not usually exceptionally interested in stray hunters that wanted a boarding place for the summer. Its business was finding country homes for orchardists in the pleasant river valleys. But it happened that the recipient of the wire was one of the oldest residents, a frontiersman himself, and it was one of the traditions of the Old West that friendships were not soon forgotten. Dan Failing I had been a legend in the old trapping and shooting days when this man was young. So it came about that when Dan's train stopped at Cheyenne, he found a telegram waiting him:

"Any relation to Dan Failing of the Umpqua divide?"

Dan had never heard of the Umpqua divide, but he couldn't doubt but that the sender of the wire referred to his grandfather. He wired in the affirmative. The head of the Chamber of Commerce received the wire, read it, thrust it into his desk, and in the face of a really important piece of business proceeded to forget all about it. Thus it came about that, except for one thing, Dan Failing would have probably stepped off the train at his destination wholly unheralded and unmet. The one thing that changed his destiny was that at a meeting of a certain widely known fraternal order the next night, the Chamber of Commerce crossed trails with the Frontier in the person of another old resident who had his home in the farthest reaches of the Umpqua divide. The latter asked the former to come up for a few days' shooting—the deer being fatter and more numerous than any previous season since the days of the grizzlies.

"Too busy, I'm afraid," the Chamber of Commerce had replied. "But Lennox—that reminds me. Do you remember old Dan Failing?"

Lennox probed back into the years for a single instant, straightened out all the kinks of his memory in less time than the wind straightens out the folds of a flag, and turned a most interested face. "Remember him!" he exclaimed. "I should say I do." The middle-aged man half-closed his piercing, gray eyes.

Listen, Steele," he said, "I saw Dan Failing make a bet once. I was just a kid, but I wake up in my sleep to marvel at it. We had a full long glimpse of a black-tail bounding up a long slope. It was just a spike-buck, and Dan Failing said he could take the left-hand spike off with one shot from his old Sharpe's. Three of us bet him—the whole thing in less than two seconds. With the next shot, he'd get the deer. He won the bet, and now if I ever forget Dan Failing, I want to die."

"You're just the man I'm looking for, then. You're not going out till the day after tomorrow?"

"No."

"On the limited, hitting here tomorrow morning, there's a grandson of Dan Failing. His name is Dan Failing, too, and he wants to go up to your place to hunt. Stay all summer and pay board."

Lennox's eyes said that he couldn't believe it was true. After a while his tongue spoke, too. "Good Lord," he said. "I used to foller Dan around—like old Shag, before he died, followed Snowbird. Of course he can come. But he can't pay board."

It was rather characteristic of the mountain men—that the grandson of Dan Failing couldn't possibly pay board. But Steele knew the ways of cities and of men, and he only smiled. "He won't come, then," he explained. "Anyway, have that out with him at the end of his stay. He wants fishing, and you've got that in the North fork. Moreover, you're a thousand miles back—"

"Only one hundred, if you must know. But Steele—do you suppose he's the man his grandfather was before him—that all the Failings have been since the first days of the Oregon trail? If he is—well, my hat's off to him before he steps off the train."

The mountaineer's bronzed face was earnest and intent in the bright lights of the club. Steele thought he had known his breed. Now he began to have doubts of his own knowledge. "He won't be; don't count on it," he said humbly. "The Failings have done much for this region, and I'm glad enough to do a little to pay it back, but don't count much on this eastern boy. He's lived in cities; besides, he's a sick man. He said so in his wire. You ought to know it before you take him in."

The bronzed face changed; possibly a shadow of disappointment came into his eyes. "A lunger, eh?" Lennox repeated. "Yes—it's true that if he'd been like the other Failings, he'd never have been that. Why, Steele, you couldn't have given that old man a cold if you'd tied him in the Rogue river overnight. Of course you couldn't count on the line keeping up forever. But I'll take him, for the memory of his grandfather."

"You're not afraid to?"

"Afraid, h—l! He can't infect those two strapping children of mine. Snowbird weighs one hundred and twenty pounds and is hard as steel. Never knew a sick day in her life. And you know Bill, of course."

Yes, Steele knew Bill. Bill weighed two hundred pounds, and he would choose the biggest of the steers he drove down to the lower levels in the winter and, twisting its horns, would make it lay over on its side. Besides, both of the men assumed that Dan must be only in the first stages of his malady.

And even as the men talked, the train that bore Dan Failing in to the home of his ancestors was entering for the first time the dark forests of pine and fir that make the eternal background of the Northwest. He was wholly unable to understand the strange feeling of familiarity that he had with them, a sensation that in his dreams he had known them always, and that he must never go out of the range of them again.

Dan didn't see his host at first. For the first instant he was entirely engrossed by a surging sense of disappointment—a feeling that he had been tricked and had only come to another city after all. He got down onto the gravel of the station yard, and out on the gray street pavement he heard the clang of a trolley car. Many automobiles were parked just beside the station, some of them foreign cars of expensive makes, such as he supposed would be wholly unknown on the frontier. A man in golf clothes brushed his shoulder.

Dan looked up to the hills, and he felt better. He couldn't see them plainly. The faint smoke of a distant forest fire half obscured them. Yet he saw fold on fold of ridges of a rather peculiar blue in color, and even his untrained eyes could see that they were clothed in forests of evergreen. Over the heads of the green hills Dan could see a few great peaks; McLaughlin, even and regular as a painted mountain; Wagner, with queer white gashes where the snow still lay in its ravines, and to the southeast the misty range of snow-covered hills that were the Siskeyous. He felt decidedly better. And when he saw old Silas Lennox waiting patiently beside the station, he felt he had come to the right place.

It would be interesting to explain why Dan at once recognized the older man for the breed he was. Silas Lennox was not dressed in a way that would distinguish him. It was true that he wore a flannel shirt, riding trousers and rather heavy, leathern boots. But sportsmen all over the face of the earth wear this costume at sundry times. Mountain men have a peculiar stride by which experienced persons can occasionally recognize them; but Silas Lennox was standing still when Dan got his first glimpse of him. The case resolves itself into a simple matter of the things that could be read in Lennox's face.

Dan disbelieved wholly in a book that told how to read characters at sight. Yet at the first glance of the lean, bronzed face his heart gave a curious little bound. A pair of gray eyes met his—two fine black points in a rather hard gray iris. They didn't look past him, or at either side of him, or at his chin or his forehead. They looked right at his own eyes. The skin around the eyes was burned brown by the sun, and the flesh was so lean that the cheekbones showed plainly. The mouth was straight; but yet it was neither savage nor cruel. It was simply determined.

Lennox came up with a light, silent tread and extended his hand. "You're Dan Failing's grandson, aren't you?" he asked. "I'm Silas Lennox, who used to know him when he lived on the Divide. You are coming to spend the summer and fall on my ranch."

The immediate result of these words, besides relief, was to set Dan wondering how the old mountaineer had recognized him. He wondered if he had any physical resemblance to his grandfather. But this hope was shot to earth at once. His telegram had explained about his malady, and of course the mountaineer had picked him out simply because he had the mark of the disease on his face. As he shook hands, he tried his best to

Congregational Church

Sunday, January 9th, Rev. Ada S. Anderson will preach on the following themes at the Congregational church:

Morning Service—"Aaron and His Almosts."

And in the evening—"Why I believe the Bible."

The Congregational Sunday School have elected the following officers for this year:

Supt—E. Bingham.
Asst. Supt.—Frances Farren.
Asst. Supt.—Howard Box.
Treasurer—Ruth Emerson.
Pianist—Stella Emerson.
Chorister—J. F. Howell.
Librarian—James Kerchival.
Teachers—L. A. McCallum, Mrs. Clint Kercheval, Mrs. Fred Brooks, Mrs. Ada S. Anderson, Mrs. J. F. Howell, Mrs O. E. Ballou, Ruth Emerson, Luella Emerson, Susian Duffy.

Called To New York

Mrs. E. R. Ballou was called Buffalo, New York by the illness of her sister, Mrs. Farmer.

A New Son

Friends have received cards announcing the arrival of William Irvine at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Chapman in Juverne on January 2nd. Mrs. Chapman was formerly Miss Georgia Kahele, a grade teacher in our schools.

Word has been received from New York that Mrs. Adeline Cole is seriously ill at the home of her daughter. Her daughter, Mrs. Ola Dayton, of Chicago has gone to assist in the care of her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Ballou departed Wednesday for Duluth, Minnesota to visit a short time with friends before returning to their home at International Falls.

Located At Thornton

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Harris and son Leland are nicely settled at Thornton and Harris took over his meat market January 1st. Their many friends wish them success in their new business and new home.

Move To New Home

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Patton Jr. have moved to their new home in north Rowan, which has just been completed.

Mrs. H. E. P. Ballou and Miss LaVonne Ballou were Clarion visitors Thursday, calling at the Geo. Hill and L. R. Fitz homes.

Edward Rietz has been quite ill the past week with bronchitis.

Miss Pearl Mickelson, of Clarion is nursing Mrs. Howard Box. The many friends of Mrs. Box will be glad to learn that she s improving nicely.

Stork Busy Monday

The stork was sure busy Monday, as he left babies at the following homes:

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hackley, a son, Loran Clyde, weighing eight and one-half pounds.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Rietz, a daughter, Muriel, weighing seven pounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Box, a daughter, Dorothy May, weighing ten and one-half pounds.

W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. Fred Brooks on Wednesday afternoon, January 19th. Topic—"First Anniversary of National Prohibition,' with Mrs. Gladys Whitten as leader. A very cordial invitation is extended to all members and friends to attend this interesting meeting.

Preached At Garner

Rev. Harold Tomkinson went to Garner Saturday and on Sunday supplied the pulpit at the Methodist church as their pastor. Rev. Webb preached in Rowan Sunday and assisted with the revival meeting the past week.

Measles

Rowan is having an epidemic of measles. The Fred Brooks family is quarantined and other families have the disease.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Dorothy May Box, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Box was held on Wednesday afternoon from the home, and also from the home of Mr. Albert Emerson. A short service was conducted at each place by Rev. Harold Tomkinson, and assisted by the choir of the Congregational church. Miss LaVonne Ballou rendered a very appropriate solo entitled "Little Babys Gone To Sleep." There were many tangible expressions of sympathy from the community in the way of flowers, not the least being a beautiful wreath from the American Legion, of which the father of the deceased is a member. The friends in Rowan offer their deepest sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Box in the loss of their little one.

Successful Meeting

Despite the grippe that has seized so many church people and others in town and thus prevented them from taking part in the revival activities, the services in the Methodist Episcopal church are meeting with good success, at least from the standpoint of people present and helpful messages. Rev. W. Webb, the evangelist, has a pleasing personality, and his powerful sermons have made a profound impression on our people, and much good is expected from the efforts. The services will be continued during the week, when John Walker, of Clarion, will assist.

M. E. Church

The Methodist pulpit, next Sunday evening, will be supplied by Rev. Dr. Bushnell, the new District Superintendent. This service should be particularly helpful, as Dr. Bushnell will bring to us a great message.

BRITT FORGER CAUGHT AFTER AIRPLANE BATTLE

A machine gun on an airplane manned by members of the Royal Canadian mounted police and private detectives riddled a plane piloted by Joseph H. Gadbury, alleged confidence man, forcing him to land near Winnipeg and affecting his capture last week.

Gadbury, wanted at Britt, Iowa, on a charge of forgery and obtaining money under false pretenses is being held at the Winnipeg jail. Police intend to return him to the Iowa city for prosecution.

Gadbury was an aviator serving in the world war. His home is in Tama, Iowa. Establishing himself in Britt and promising farmers of that community to build an airplane factory, Gadbury is alleged to have obtained approximately $18,000. He also is charged with passing worthles checks totalling $1,390, after which he started for Minneapolis and Winnipeg in an airplane.

Gadbury was forced to land at Emerson, Minnesota, near the Canadian line, where his ship underwent repairs. Meantime private detectives from Iowa were on his trail.

Arriving at Winnipeg these detectives obtained co-operation of the Canadian police and started from Winnepeg in an airplane to capture Gdbury. Enroute to Emerson they met Gadbury in his plane and an aerial battle rivaling war exploits was staged.

The propellor of Gadbury's machine was damaged, the gasolene tank puntchured, and the fuselage riddled by machine gun bullets before the fugitive landed and was captured, the police say.

Since the above report was sent out Gadbury has been returned to Britt, having waived extradition, and is now in jail awaiting the outcome of this affair. He claims that he did not know he had no funds in the bank on which his checks were drawn. There are reports that he was also engaged in carrying liquor across the border with his plane.

THE SUBSTITUTE FAKERS

Every little while you are going to hear of a wonderful substitute for gasolene that some chemist, unknown, has discovered and intends to immediately begin commercial production.

It is well to hope that the news is true, but it isn't well to put so much faith in the assertion that you would part with real money to finance the proposition, no matter how strong may be the evidence. Actual demonstration may look convincing, but remember the wonder workers of the past.

A short time ago a gasoline substitute received the indorsement of two officers of the United States army. These officers were honest and competent, and when they were invited to make a test of the invention, no one doubted their verdict would be on the level. They tested the mixture said to have been made from cheap vegetable substance and found it proved 95 per cent high test alcohol.

What the officers did not know was that behind the wall was hidden two barrels of pure grain alcohol with a connecting pipe.

The "inventors" are in jail, but their tribe is many and from time to time we expect to see in the news columns of the daily papers announcements of the great discovery that is to take the place of gasoline.

Hope—but don't invest.—Exchange. Amen, brother!

BARRY GIVEN JUDGEMENT AGAINST KAUFMAN

Jim Barry was given judgement by Justice Hardwick in his suit against Peter Kaufman, the trial of which was held Saturday and Monday. Barry sued Kaufman, and the defendant had a claim against the plintiff. Brry claimed $150 for rent on land from Kaufman, and Kaufman claimed $68 from Barry for the hauling of tile, etc. Justice Hardwick awarded Barry $75 and Kaufman $68, leaving Barry with seven dollars coming, the costs going against Kaufman. Jensen was attorney for Barry and Bullard for Kaufman.

BELMOND TO HOLD A BIG SHORT COURSE

Many Cases From Belmond in the District Court

A Number Of Cases From This Vicinity Occupy The Attention Of The Court.

ONE DIVORCE CASE FOR TRIAL

The board of supervisors has authorized Engineer Hilton to purchase not to exceed five cars of lumber, a quantity of piling and steel culverts.

C. H. Crowe has secured judgement on transcript from Justice Brown's court, against the Wright county fair in the sum of $50 on a note.

The assessors of Wright county have been called to meet at the court house today by Auditor Walker for the purpose of getting their supplies and becoming more familiar with their duties.

Monday was the day set by the board of supervisors for selection of official papers for the year 1921. The Eagle Grove Eagle and Times-Gazette and the Clarion Clipper and the Monitor were named as such papers.

Clerk Goslin has issued marriage licenses to the following couples the past week: Frank Gilliam and Elsie Dorothy State, Loring Champlin and Lucile Schoeneich, Knute Williams and Mrs. Myrtle Downer, Benjamin Quibell and Mrs. Elizabeth Daniels.

The board of supervisors selected H. C. Pinkham of Goldfield as their chairman for the ensuing year. Mr. Pinkham, who is one of the best members to serve on that board, will retire at the close of his present term. James Mehl of Norway township is to succeed him.

Miss Blanche Bock, county superintendent, announces the next study center to be held at Clarion on Saturday, January 22nd. The instructors will be Miss Anna Cordts and Miss Grace Rait of Cedar Falls, Miss Margery Hilton of Clarion. All teachers of the county are invited.

The county agent's office has been removed to the north room in the basement of the court house. To reach this office enter the main door to the building and descend the stairs to the right. Miss Kate Liddle the Red Cross nurse, will occupy the room vacated by Agent Edwards on the second floor.

Lois Brown, a minor, by Clara Sorenson, her mother, versus Mrs. J. T. Phyllis of Clarion, grandmother of the child, is a case filed for trial at the January term of court. The action grows out of a family quarrel last week in which the defendant procured possession of the child in question during the mother's absence. Plaintiff petitions the court to determine the custody of the child. --Monitor.

Clipper: Clara Sorenson, mother of Lois A. Brown, four and one-half years of age, has filed a petition in district court asking for a writ of habeas corpus nd disposition of the child, now alleged to be illegally in the custody of the child's grandmother, Mrs. J. E. Phyllis of Clarion. The petition alleges that January 3rd Mrs. Phyllis "unlawfully wrongfully and wilfully secured possession of the child while its own mother was absent" Since then she has refused to return the little girl to the mother.

A minor chapter of this case was written in Mayor McCreery's court Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. Sorenson was fined $5 and costs for assault on the person of John English, and for using obscene language. In an effort to get the custody of the child, Sorenson is alleged to have followed the grandmother into the home of Mr. English, where Mrs. Phyllis had fled. There a scrimmage followed and Mr. English filed complaint. Conflicting testimony was introduced on both sides during the trial before Mayor McCreery. Mr. Sorenson appealed from the Mayor's decision to the district court. The English family lives near Mrs. Phyllis.

The Gamble-Robinson Co. of Esthervile, fruit wholesalers, are suing George Lutz of Belmond to recover an account owing them of $70.65, due since August 10.

S. K. Bach, a Dows blacksmith, is suing W. K. Gade et al to secure cancellation of a contract whereby he was trading his blacksmith shop and the lots it was situated on for a farm in Mitchell county, Iowa. He alleges that the Mitchell county land was represented as being worth $325 per acre, well tiled, and free from quack grass, but as a matter of fact it does not come up to the representations and is not worth more than $225 per acre. He asks the court to cancell the contract and quiet title to the Dows property in his name, as well as for damages as the court may determine and for casts of the suit.

H. Fischer is suing Fred Staehle and wife to recover $227.40 due for merchandise sold. The Iowa Valley Sugar Co. has been garnisheed to protect his claim.

H. A. Koefed of Meservey is also suing the Staehles to recover $60.08 for merchandise sold them.

Robert Wildman is suing Clarence Franklin to recover $108.19, alleged to be due on a note.

Laura Chapman is suing Fred Gibson of Eagle Grove for $500 damages, alleged to be due as a result of a fall received in defendant's restaurant. She was employed there as night cook and as the result of the fall was under a doctor's care eight weeks, during which time her wrist was kept in a cast. Defendant did not carry workman's compensation. $75 of the $500 asked represents a doctor's bill.

Fred C. Veeder of Belmond has filed suit for divorce from Dora Veeder. They were married in January 1916, and lived together until April, 1916, and from July 1916 to middle of August of the same year. In that month the wife deserted the husband without cause. He states he was always a dutiful and loving husband, and prays for absolute decree of divorce and that defendant be barred from any right, claim or title to property owned by plaintiff.

Adam Reffer of Bielmond is suing Jas. Siskoff to recover $100, alleged to be due as the result of the breaking of a stove which Siskoff was moving for the plaintiff. Accident resulted from "too fast driving over frozen ground, despite plaintiff's warning."

J. H. Fiderlick is suing Don O. G. Marcus to recover $700 alleged to be due as a balance on rental of land in section 34-90-26, and asks for a landlord's writ of attachment.

L. Emerick is suing C. C. Graves and Wm. Burton to recover possession of a cook shack or $75, alleged to be the value of plaintiff's interest. Two orders for $37.50 each were given plaintiff but they proved to be worthless, he alleges. Graves is Burton's agent in the county, and the cook shack is now east of Clarion.

E. F. Mosher is suing Chester Hunt, Perry Nort and C. E. Hillyer, to recover $500 damages alleged to be due as the result of wrongful possession of a 12-acre tract in Eagle Grove and damages to buildings and grounds. This is an appeal case from J. H. Williamson's court of Eagle Grove. Hillyer originally leased the land and Mosher claims the contract was that the lease could not be assigned except with his consent, and that this was done contrary to his wishes. He claims the pasture was overstocked and rooted up by hogs and damages to buildings also followed the occupancy of the land by Nort and Hillyer.

BOY ACCIDENTLY SHOOTS SELF THRU LIP

Roy Lee, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Lee, suffered a painful accident last week when he accidently shot himself thru the lip.

The boy was handling a rifle and the weapon was discharged in some manner, the bullet going thru his lip. He was exceedingly lucky in a way, as had the bullet gone a little further to either side the results of it might have been much more serious. Dr. Steele was immediately summoned and gave the lad prompt treatment, and he is now recovering in nice shape.

Knights of Columbus Hold Good Meeting Sunday Afternoon

Belmond, Eagle Grove And Goodell Chapters Meet Sunday in Library To Stir Things Up.

TWELVE NEW MEMBERS JOIN

A meeting of about sixty members of the Knights of Columbus met at the library basement on Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock, for the purpose of perfecting plans and to stimulate an interest in the organization, and to map out a campaign for recruits. A delegation from Eagle Grove and one from Goodell were in attendance. The afternoon was spent in a general smoker and a few good short talks were given. Twelve young men present made application for membership in the organization. Another meeting, at which there will be an initiation of members will be held at Eagle Grove sometime during the next month. Rev. D. Nolan of Eagle Grove was present at the meeting here, and was a visitor with the Rev. Eardley.

BELMOND LAWYER GIVES ADDRESS AT EAGLE GROVE

Eagle Grove Eagle: The address by Atty. W. E. Bullard of Belmond featured the Commercial Club meeting Thursday night. Mr. Bullard is fast becoming known as one of the leading orators of this section of Iowa and the Commercial Club members were pleased with his address, admiring his frankness and fearless attitude on the questions of the day. Mr. Bullard had not time in which to prepare for the address, having been invited the previous morning to appear here. He first reviewed the war and America's participation in it, stating that we were prone to too soon forget those stirring times and the momentous days which followed. He called to mind the demand for American goods at the beginning of the war and for the year and a half following before Europe could get her industries to functioning again. He advocated a give and take attitude by both mercant and farmer. The merchant was getting his and there was no relief for the merchant except to sell his goods for what he could get for them. He had no recourse except to report his loss to the government in the next income blank. The farmer was being forced to compete with Argentine and Canadian competition and should be protected by a protective tariff. But ultimately, the speaker thought, relief would come and that a gradual readjustment would come which would be lasting in its scope and which would assure the future prosperity and welfare of the republic.

Mr. Bullard also spoke at length and commented on the problems which confronted the Belmond Commercial Club and noted the similarity of problems. Both clubs were working for better things for their cities—better express service, better telegraph service. He also advocated a closer spirit of co-operation among the towns of the county. He invited everyone to come over to Belmond, see her big sugar beet factory and other industries, to get acquainted. The county should have a county commercial club. Our interests were common and there is no county fued.

Hon. W. E. Bullard has been a resident of Wright county for the past thirty years and is an entertaining, convincing speaker and he made a favorable impression here, both in his address and in discussion of various subjects at the conclusion of his address.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTICE!

There will be a meeting of the local Post of the American Legion at the city hall on Wednesday night, January 19th, at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of election of officers and the transacting of important business matters.

Belmond Bolshevism Worries Wirtz

The following clipping from the Clarion Clipper will be of interest to Belmond people, as it illustrates the awful reputation the town is getting among the people:

Much has been said pro and con about Bolshevism but how it is fostered by the upper classes is told by a sugar tramp at Belmond. A stranger going to purchase anything, if he is not wise, is sure to be pitied. I went into a grocery store one night and bought a quarter's worth of apples and got eight for my money. A local man paid the same money for a peck. In a clothing store I was asked $2.50 for a cap that had a $1.50 tag on it; bought pair of overalls for $2.00 one night and two days later was asked $2.50 for hem. Sox sold for forty cents to local men and sold for a half dollar to outsiders, and then these merchants wonder why the migratory worker favors bolshevism when they themselves create the cause for the worst curse the world has very known.

Respectfully submitted,
Nick Wirtz.

The Clipper doesn't know a thing about the incidents complained of in the letter from Mr. Wirtz. Lots of times a fellow is honestly mistaken One thing we do know, most stores nowadays have only one price for an article. It would be a foolish merchant who would deliberately try to sell an article marked $1.50 for $2.50. Overalls might raise in price 50c a pair in a few days, and did occasionally do this until last fall. Then we know for a fact stores in Clarion and probably Belmond, too, marked them down 50c to 75c a pair. Some apples at 8 for a quarter would be cheap. A large delicious apple at a dime is not an extortionate price, that is, the merchant who sells it does not get an extortionate profit on the transaction. We know that the class of stores such as you generally find in towns like Belmond, or in Clarion, or in any of the thousand of country towns the nation over, sell standard goods, advertised the country over at certain prices, and where there is one crooked merchant trying to gouge strangers there are who play fair and square with everyone.

Prices have been high on many articles sold in the stores, but that doesn't mean the merchant has gotten the difference between the old pre-war price and that which he received. Fact is, very few country merchants get rich from the profits of their business. Think over the men you know and see how many really have. Some have grown wealthy from investments in land, o iginally a few thousand dollars representing his entire savings, risked. Then the land paid off the debt. A man with a quarter section of Iowa land bought ten or fifteen years ago could have paid for it in the meantime and thus been wealthy in his community. How many merchants have worked for many years and then failed to take out of the business what was originally put in? There are thousands of such the country over.

Mr. Wirtz is right: Bolshevism is a curse. It will not thrive in American soil. Our people are not ground down like they are in oppressed Russia. And the anarchists deported from America and returned to Russia have found that Russia is not the paradise they had dreamed of. Fact is, they denounce bolshevism and its works. There are evils in America that need correcting. Authority is often abused. Public confidence is occasionally betrayed. But the average merchant is more a slave to the public than is the worker. Honesty is not rare in business, but is so common that it bulwarks business, both little and big. Of this we feel sure, Mr. Wirtz's informant to the contrary notwithstanding.

A. H. Storm and son Leland of Sanborn, Iowa, were guests at the home of C. J. Schmalle last week. Mrs. L. W. McCallum and little daughter LaVonne of Alexander visited here last Wednesday.

A THREE DAY PROGRAM TO BE HELD HERE

February 10th And 11th Are The Days Picked For Holding The Big Event.

BIGGEST EVENT OF THE WINTER

Specialists From Ames To Be On Program—Many Different Items To Be Taken Up.

The greatest event of the winter will be held next month Thursday and Friday, February 10th and 11th, when Belmond stages a great two-day Short Course.

Several noted specialists on various farming branches will be on the program, and will lecture and demonstrate in the various departments that are being planned.

The program has not yet been completely worked out, but will be given in a later issue. That it will be a good one goes without saying. So far, the speakers and speciaists who will be here are:

F. G. Churchill, specialist in soils.

E. L. Qaufe, animal husbandry.

Bertha Holden, assistant leader of Home Demonstration Agents.

Peter Peterson, a noted breeder of Holsteins, near Cedar Falls.

All the townships around Belmond are co-operating in the course, and the following men from their respective townships will meet with a committee from the Chamber of Commerce in the near future to complete the details of the course:

Norway—E. E. Evans.
Belmond—Geo. P. Hardwick.
Pleasant—Adolph Meinders.
Iowa—J. E. Miller.
Grant—C. L. Hall.

The Chamber of Commerce will hold a meeting this week when a committee will be chosen to meet with the gentlemen named.

The farmers around are all heartily in favor of the idea and are cooperating in every way with the local men in putting the course over. There will be demonstrations in repairing tractors, which will be held at a garage; grain exhibits and lectures, as well as stock exhibits and talks by the specialists on them, a department and program for the ladies, and all that goes with such an affair.

At the last short course held here, several years ago, the program was held at different places about the town, and the majority seem to favor the same plan for this one. It has been suggested that the grain exhibits, lectures, etc, be held in the opera house or the school auditorium, the tractor work, stock, and similar affairs in the garage, and the ladies part in the library basement which appears to be a good idea.

It is also understood that a number of the businesss men will offer prizes for the best exhibits, from the stock of their stores.

There will be no profit for anyone in the course, it is simply a progressive movement to bring about a closer relationship between the town and the country.

Watch for the full program at a later date.

FARMERS OF WEST HAVING A HARD TIME

Geo. Polmateer, who has just returned from a trip thru Nebraska and South Dakota, says that the farmers out that way are having a hard time of it. Being a great cattle country, naturally they raised a large number. Prices came down, they couldn't meet their notes at the banks, and many are being forclosed by the bankers. One banker foreclosed, taking the cattle, and then tried to sell the stocsk at public auction. The auctioneer, sheriff and the banker were there, but not a bidder snowed up. Hay is worth a dollar a ton, and corn lies in great heaps, unsaleable.

NOTICE!

As the Fire Company have reorganized and have been placed on a consistant working basis, it is requested that no one not a member of the fire company be allowed to in any way interfere with the work of the company. And it is forbidden that any one not a member of the company ride on the fire truck.

It is further requested that, at the alarm of fire, ALL other vehicles stop as near the curb as possible and wait until the truck has passed. The volunteer fire company are willing to do all they can to make Belmond safe from fires, and ask the people to do their part in preventing accidents.

And it is further demanded that all trafic cease in the block where the fire is during the time the apparatus is strung across the street.

Should any one desire to turn in an alarm of fire, do so by calling central and plainly telling where the fire is located. There is also an alarm that can be turned in at Griesy's corner, which can be turned in by pressing the black button, and then run to fire station and telling driver where the fire is located. The blowing of the siren at any time indicating fire will be readily distnguished by the raising and lowering of the scale of the whistle. This is obtained by alternately pressing the black and red button.

By order of Fire Chief:
Geo. Brady.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

Mrs. Ralph Christie planned and carried out a very pleasant birthday surprise party upon her husband on Monday evening of this week, for his 29th birthday. Over thirty of their friends and neigbors were present, and as a token of their regard and esteem presented the guest of the evening with a purse. A two course supper was served. Everybody present reports a very enjoyable evening.

Among those present were: Mrs. T. A. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. John Flaans and children, Mr. and Mrs. John Mack, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bamford, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Farm Bureau Notes

WOMEN DIRECTORS IN THE FARM BUREAU

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Wright County Farm Bureau it was unanimously decided that Wright County should be represented at its board meetings by one lady township chairman and act in the same capacity in her town ship in directing the ladies work as the man director does in executing the work of the men's department and so will have the women's voting power at each board of directors meeting.

It was decided that since Wright county is not in a position financially to employ a Home Demonstration Agent for this year that it would be well to organize the ladies department of the Farm Bureau work in this manner so as to give the ladies of our local Farm Bureau an opportunity to assist in directing the activities.

ANNUAL MEETING OF WRIGHT COUNTY FARM BUREAU

The annual meeting of the Wright County Farm Bureau, which was held at the courthouse at Clarion, Thursday, January 13, was attended by nearly 300 Wright county farmers. This seems to have been a record breaker in point of numbers, there being twice as many in attendance as there were at last year's meeting.

Miss Neale S. Knowles, state leader of Home Demonstration agents, delivered a splendid address on "Woman's Part in the Farm Bureau." Miss Knowles talked at length upon the importance of having the women take an active part in the Farm Bureau work. She laid stress upon the responsibility which rests upon each township organization and in turn upon each individual member. In concluding her splendid address Miss Knowles pledged herself to do all that is possible thru her department in co-operating with the ladies of Wright county in conducting their department of the work for next year in the absence of a Home Demonstration agent.

C. W. Hunt, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation gave a most interesting and instructive address on the present status of the Farm Bureau, and the outlook for the future of this great organization.

Mr. Hunt opened his address by answering the question: "Has the Farm Bureau come to stay?" and in doing so he reminded his audience of the tremendous growth of the Farm Bureau made in the past two years, and gave facts and figures to substantiate his statements regarding its growth.

In referring to the National Farm Bureau Federation at Indianapolis, Mr. Hunt said that that convention was the greatest meeting that had ever been held in America since the signing of the Declaration of Independence. He spoke of how the entire agricultural interests of the U. S. were represented at this meeting. He spoke of the delegates coming from all parts of the U. S. from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian line and from the Atlantic coast, to the Pacific coast, all with one thought in mind: namely, that of establishing a better and more permanent argricuture.

In speaking of farmers not joining the Farm Bureau so as to co-operate with one another, Mr. Hunt said that too often the farmer takes the selfish view that if he becomes a member of the Farm Bureau he will be helping some other fellow, when he should realize that by becoming a member of such an organization he will be helping himself. He used a clear cut illustration to drive home the point he was making by telling the story of the sight of a sow and a litter of ten pigs all nestled up as close as possible in order to keep warm during a freezing cold night. Each pig was cooperating with the others to keep them all warm but in doing so he was keeping himself warm.

The greater part of the morning program was given to reports from the various committees. The afternoon session was spent in listening to the splendid addresses by the two principal speakers and in the election of officers for the ensuing year and in discussing matters of business of the Farm Bureau.

The general interest at the meeting was added to by the good music which was so kindly rendered by Meeker's orchestra of Dows. Mr. Hunt referred to the splendid music in his talk and complimented Wright county people in having the foresight to realize that music adds to a public meeting and keeps things moving.

The election of officers for 1921 gave the following results:

Harry Sumners, Clarion, president.
Geo. C. Kirstein, Clarion, vice pres.
Geo. A. Miller, Dows, Treasurer.
E. W. Campbell, Clarion, Secretary.

The following directors were elected to represent their townships on the County Farm Bureau board:

A. L. Middleton, Mrs. A. L. Middleton, Troy;
G. D. Dengert, Mrs. Glen Knox, Vernon;
E. W. Campbell, Mrs. M. L. Clark, Lake;
Harry Sumners, Lady chairman not yet elected, Dayton;
N. L. Vanderlip, Mrs. O. P. Hackbarth, Blaine;
Floyd Bubeck, Lady chairman not yet elected, Wall Lake;
Roy Woodley, Ladyl chairman not yet elected, Lincoln;
Adolph Meinders, Mrs. J. F. Henn, Pleasant;
Joe Abernathy, Lady chairman not yet elected, Boone;
E. E. Evans, Mrs. E. E. Evans, Norway;
F. L. Kirstein, Lady chairman not yet elected, Woolstock;
J. E. Miller, Lady chairman not yet elected, Iowa;
C. L. Hall, Lady chairman not yet elected, Grant;
G. L. Trask, Lady chairman not yet elected, Eagle Grove;
G. P. Hardwick, Mrs. A. E. Martin, Belmond;
T. A. Knight, Lady chairman not yet elected, Liberty.

The following resolutions were submitted and adopted at the annual meeting:

"We the members of the Wright County Farm Bureau submit the following resolutions:

We endorse the national and state officers and commend them on the interest of the farmers at all times.

That we favor the retention of the Primary Law, and urge upon the general assembly the enactment of such amendments as will eliminate abuses and preserve the integrity of the principles involved.

That we recommend the county Farm Bureau to appoint a committee to meet with the assessors and county board of review for the purpose of using their influence for the proper equalization of taxes.

That we look with approval of the newspaper reports which indicate that Henry C. Wallace is to be appointed to the position of Secretary of Agriculture. If such appointment is made, we urge Mr. Wallace to accept, for we feel that he is a man of ability to represent farmer's interests in the way needed under present conditions.

That we deplore the attitude of farm machinery manufacturers in regard to the prices asked for their products, and we recommend to our farmers the careful repairing of all machinery that can economically be made serviceable. Furthermore, our Farm Bureau should conduct an "Excess farm machinery inventory" the facilitate the exchange of same, thus obviating as far as possible the necessity of purchasing new equipment. To this end we advocate a week to be known as "Repair week," requesting all farmers to get all machinery in workable shape.

That we recommend the work of the committee of seventeen in their efforts to work out feasible plans for marketing our produce.

We recommend that our by-laws be so changed that each township lady president shall have equal right in voice and voting in all county meetings with the men directors and shall be eligible to the different offices in the county.

That there be an amendment to the law giving the drainage engineer so much power on drainage ditches.

That the board of directors pick the resolutions committee at their last meeting at least one month previous to the annual meeting, thereby giving the resolutions committee more time, also giving each member an opportunity to hand any resolution to the county agent or one of the committee.

That the permanency and dignity of agriculture as well as the stability and happiness of country life is in large measure dependent upon the quality and inherent strength of the farm homes. The influence of this organization which is a potent factor in our national life will be materially extended and reflect itself over rural America in a more significant manner, by the admission of women to membership; and they are invited into full participation in the task of advancing the cause of American agriculture. We welcome to our councils the farm women of our nation and pledge our full co-operation in such programs for the advancement of our common purpose as shall be within the scope of this organization's activities in its endeavors to promote the welfare of country life.

That there should be no further delay by the American Farm Bureau Federation in the establishment and adequate financing of a bureau of research with sub-departments for the purpose of collecting and interpreting facts and figures dealing with the production of farm crops and livestock and for the fullest inquiry into conditions which influence the law of supply and demand, to the end that our members may have reliable information and guidance in the production and marketing of their commodities.

That we denounce as un American the principle and are opposed to guaranteeing a fixed return to public utilities and railroads on a cost-plus basis.

That we declare that the farmer is entitled to compensation for his services equal to actual cost of efficient production and a reasonable return upon his capital invested and we pledge our efforts to bring about these results.

That we highly recommend the good work of the county agricultural agents, the agricultural extension departments and the experiment stations, and we pledge our hearty cooperation to them in the furtherance of their work along practical agricultural lines, and the improvement of home and community.

That we endorse the immediate relief program advocated by the American Farm Federation, reading as follows:

(1) Regulartory power over farmers' co-operative marketing associations should be in the hands of U. S. Department of Agriculture rather than the Federal Trade Commission.

(2) The farmers' co-operative marketing movement must not be hindered by the provisions of the Sherman Law enacted to control trusts and not with any intent to curb co-operation for the benefit of the public at large.

(3) The Federal Reserve Bank should be amended so as to provide preferred rates for loans for productive purposes over loans for speculative purposes.

(4) The warehousing act should be extended so as to serve the needs of both individuals and co-operative associations, and there should be based upon it a rural credits plan which will enable the farmer, individually and collectively, to market his crops in an orderly fashion.

(5) The Federal Land Bank system should be extended to provide farmers with personal credit, for such purposes as buying improved seed, livestock, machinery and equipment, on the same general plan as real estate loans are now provided.

SCARBRO'S CLUB MEMBERS PRODUCE OVER MILLION

The following article from the extension staff of the South Dakota agricultural college will be of interest to folks in this vicinity, as it concerns the work of Prof. P. J. Scarbro, former superintendent of schools here for nine years:

Products valued in excess of a million dollars were produced during the past year by the 6,869 South Dakota youngsters enrolled in the boys' and girls' clubs. A summary of project results for 1920 just issued by P. J. Scarbro, state club leader, shows that 5,727 club members reported a gross production of $881,631.91 for the year. Production costs totaled $302,913.81, leaving a net profit of $578,718.10. The average gross production record of each member reporting was $153.94, the net production averageing slightly in excess of $101.

The report shows that there were 526 organized boys and girls' clubs in the state with an average membership of 13 plus. More members enrolled for the baby pork project than for any other, the total enrollment for this project being 1,452. Gardening came second in the matter of enrollment with 1,410, and sowlitter third with 1,393. Other projects undertaken by the clubs, with the total enrollment in each, follow:

Corn, 182; potatoe, 35; cow-calf, 109 baby-beef, 10; sheep, 47; poultry,300; canning, 617; bread, 274; sewing, 1,040.

The greatest production record, in gross value, at least, from any of the projects was made in the sowlitter clubs. Members reported a gross production of $695,440 in this project, total cost being $219,720, leaving a net profit of $475,720. This means an average gross production of $529 plus for every member of a sow-litter club in the state. The cow-calf clubs came second in the matter of value of products, the gross value reported being $64,528, and the net production $31,828.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy

This remedy is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough. From a small beginning its sale and use has extended to all parts of the Uunited States and to many foreign countries. This alone is enuf to convince one that it is a medicine of more than ordinary merit. Give it a trial and you will find this to be the case. For sale at Adams Phar.

AUTO LICENSE BUSINESS PICKS UP CLOSING DAYS

All fall and early winter the county treasurer's office was ready to issue licenses to the auto owners of Wright county, but they came dribling in. The last half of December saw business pick up some, but after the 29th, when the force was up with the applications the deluge came. Then the appications poured into the office in a growing stream and the last day the mail applications swamped the force. It will require all of this week to get caught up again and likely the number of delinquents will not be large. Up to January 1st 2070 licenses had been mailed. About 3500 cars are in the county.—Clipper.

EMERGENCY INSECTICIDE SHELF FOR FARMERS

Everyone is familiar with the modern housewife's emergency food shelf which saves her many embarrassing situations when unexpected guests show up at mealtime. The same principle can be applied by the farmer in taking care of his unexpected insect guests by the maintainence of an emergency insecticide shelf consisting of a complete line of common insecticides.

These materials always at hand would not only save many trips to town in the midst of the season's work, but would also save many promising crops from the ravages of hungry insect armies.

Such a shelf should contain several pounds of powered arsenate of lead for use against the leaf feeding insects of the garden and orchard. There should be some Paris green for the ever present potatoe bugs, and at least one pint of Black-leaf 40 for those plant lice that become so bad at times. Five or ten pounds of powdered white arsenic should not be forgotten as this is the poisoning element used in poisoned bait, which is so successful against grass hoppers, cut worms and army worms. One must always remember that spray materials cannot be applied without some kind of a spraying apparatus. This apparatus completes the shelf.

An emergency shelf of this nature is one of the most useful and profitable additions to any farmer's or gardener's equipment. It certainly is deserving of serious thought. Farmers should stock up now and be ready for the next season, as these materials will keep indefinitely.

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals — makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration — makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly — and have great wearing quality.

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes — oils and greases.

COMPARES IOWA SUGAR BEET LAND WITH COLORADO'S

Colorado is the sugar bowl of the United States. Colorado soil and sunshine produced more sugar in 1920 than any other state in the union. The famed cane crop of Louisiana was but 150,000 tons while Colorado harvested 335,000 tons of sugar, or 670,000,000 pounds of a total value of $53,600,000, figured at eight cents a pound, the lowest price sugar has reached in years.

The only state anywhere approaching Colorado's production is Michigan with slightly more than half of Colorado's yield.

In the short space of nineteen years, less than a generation, Colorado has taken the lead in the growing nd manufacturing of this necessity of the human race. The pioneer company, the Great Western, started operations in Loveland in 1901 with 5,600 acres cultivated to the sugar and the growth of the industry in 1920 had 160,000 acres devoted to the growing of beets exclusively for its factories. The one factory has grown to eighteen operating plants with one under construction and others planned. The Great Western Sugar company has ten of these operating factories and the one building at Johnstown, Colorado. In the eighteen plants the investment represents $60,000,000.

The total acreage devoted to the sugar beet in Colorado in 1920 was 250,000. Tees quarter of a million acres produced 2,750,000 tons of beets. To work the fields the sugar companies imported labor from old Mexico, thousands of men and women and the youths in the families. The railroads were paid $300,000 for their transportation to the various localities in Colorado where they were turned over to the beet growers.

The farmers of Colorado were paid $31,800,000 for their beets and they paid the labors in their fields $8,000,000. To move the crop cost $8,500,000, the railroads receiving this in freight charges embracing all operations in the transportation.

Ten thousand farmers in Colorado are now engaged in raising beets and they employ 25,000 "beet hands." One grower in the northern Colorado fields received more than $31,000 for the product from his 210 acres. Several were handed checks of more than $15,000. Eleven tons of sugar beets to the acre was the 1920 average and the fixed guaranteed minimum price for the grower was $12 per ton. The average farmer with thirty acres of beets received around $4,300 for his one crop, and the majority grew corn, wheat and other crops in addition. Sugar beets is the big cash crop of the state for the farmer knows the price before he plants and the crop represents just so much cash in the farmer's hands.

The past year saw the highest price ever paid for sugar beets in the state. Everybody benefitted including the 8,500 employees in the factories whose wages range from $3.50 to $8 a day. The 160,000 acres was the highest acreage in the history of the Great Western Sugar company, 1919 having but 138,449 acres grown for this one company. The 1920 season starting September 23 when the first factory began operations will last 110 days.

Please take notice that the price paid for the beets in 1920 was $12 per ton, which is the same price paid by the Northern Sugar corporation.

The average yield as shown by the above clipping in Colorado is 11 tons to the acre. Bear in mind that they have been raising beets in Colorado for twenty years and that the beet crop is the main crop there. Quite naturally the land is put in the very best of condition for the crop so as to produce a big yield.

First it is prepared for irrigation, second, thoro drainage as irrigation causes seepage water, third, deep plowing followed by making a firm seed bed and then a thoro cultivation keeping the field free from weeds and after all this thoro work they go thru in Colorado the yield is 11 tons of beets to the acre. Still they make money on their beets on their land which is worth from $400 to $500 per acre.

When we come to the realization that we have the soil in the counties of Hancock, Kossuth, Emmet and three or four other counties in northern Iowa with proper drainage and begin to give the beet crop the care and attention it requires, the same as we do with our other crops we will find that the yield on our land will average a litte better than the lands of Colorado.

In the five years that I have been connected with the Northern Sugar Corporation as their fieldman I have had occasion to come across many fields in this territory where with the proper care in getting the seed bed ready and follow it with a thoro cultivation, keeping the field free from weeds on our drained lands the yield has been all the way from 12 to 20 tons per acre.

The past year has been a poor year in this territory for a beet crop as we had too much rain in the early spring and summer, yet the crop averaged over 12 tons on several hundred acres.

With 20 year's experience in the beet industry such as Colorado has had we will, I believe, be able to increase our yield at least one-third more. Think of what this will mean to your land.

Within the next fifteen years there will be scattered thruout this part of the country 15 to 20 sugar beet factories and you will see land selling around $500 an acre—for when you can raise a crop that will net you $100 an acre, land at that price will be very reasonable.

Every farmer within a reasonable distance of a beet dump should plan to raise from 20 to 40 acres of beets this year.

With the large yield of corn in 1920 and corn selling around 45 cents a bushel, what will corn be worth this year if we have another large crop with a surplus left over from the preceeding year?

The price we are going to pay for beets this year has not been settled yet, but I feel sure that one acre of beets will bring you more clear money than two acres of corn or three of oats.—C. S. Terwilliger in the Garner Signal.

FIRST WHITE WOMAN IN HANCOCK COUNTY TELLS OF EARLY EXPERIENCES

The following article from the Garner Signal was written by Mrs. A. Avery, one of the pioneer settlers of this vicinity and well known by many Belmond people. The Signal prints as follows:

The following reminiscence of olden days is from the pen of Mrs. A. Avery, who is now nearing her nintieth birthday, having been born at Sandusky, Ohio, January 22, 1831, is exceedingly interesting. A very significant fact about the manuscript is that it is so well connected, indicating an intellect as clear as that of one of middle age and the hand writing is as free from the indications of advanced years as tho it were by the hand of one of but twenty summers. Each letter is as clear and distinct, every line and curve perfect, not a waver of the pen can be detected. At the request of Mrs. Hattie M. Aldridge, recorder of Hancock county, Mrs. Avery prepared this article and we consider it a real privilege to be allowed to produce it.

"In 1854, with my husband, our two children, my little sister and two hired men, I came to Hancock county. We landed at Upper Grove on the Iowa river, September 9th. We lived in a hay shanty for six weeks until the men could get the hay put up for our stock. We had twelve head of oxen and two cows. After the hay had been put up, the men went into the timber and there they cut the logs for our log cabin. After this was completed, the hired men went back to civilization. It was necessary for my husband to go to Dubuque after supplies, requiring eight days to make the trip with oxen, and during this time I was left alone with my little family. During his absence I got very lonesome, there being not one person in the county except our family. One day I strolled to the river and as I stopped by the beaver dam, I saw five or six half-grown beavers feeding in the pool above their dam and the thought came to me that I could catch some of them. I went back to the cabin and got a two-spring trap, found a stick that would hold the trap, went down to the river and set it. The next morning I went to see if I had anything in my trap and sure enough, I had a beaver. I managed to pull it out of the water but it was so heavy that I could not carry it. I went back and brought my little sister to help me drag it to the cabin and when my husband returned he took the pelt off the beaver. I tried out the oil and had three gallons. I never again tried to catch any beavers. The next spring a fur buyer came thru our country and he gave me only $1 a pound for the pelt. It weighed seven pounds and was as dry as a chip. But at that price I was glad to get rid of it. This happened on Christmas day. I recall the beautiful weather. There was no snow and it was as warm and nice as a spring day, but we had plenty of snow in Februry and March. The next spring Mr. Avery began breaking his ground. I drove the oxen while he broken in ten acres. We used three yokes of oxen to the plow. When it came to planting I had to chop the corn in with an ax. After it ripened, I had to stand guard with a shotgun to save it from the wild cranes, wild geese and ducks.

"On one occasion, when Mr. Avery was away after provisions, Indians camped on the look-out, half a mile from our cabin. They would come to our place and beg bread, eggs or anything they could eat. I soon found that I could not stand to give them always, so one day I refused them. They went away, and I expected that they would murdur us all but they did not harm us in any way. When Mr. Avery came home I was relieved, and told him of the Indian's visit. He was scared, so was I, more so than at the time the Indians were there. But I lived thru it all. The climate agreed with me. During the next summer several families came to the county, and I felt better. Our post office was Eldora, Hardin county, seventy-five miles distant. There was not a tree or a shrub from Upper Grove to Forest City at that time. Now it is quite different.

"I was at the first birth and the first death in the county. Three years after landing in Hancock county my son George A. Avery, first male child born in the county, came to this world. He now lives at Belmond.

"Mr. Avery and I celebrated our golden wedding anniversary six years before his death. Since his death, two years ago, I have made my home with my daughter, Mrs. A. W. Schmalle in Garner.

"I will bring my reminiscence to a close. I trust that you will excuse poor grammer and poor spelling. I have never been to school since I was ten years old. I trust that you will over-look my shortcomings in this article, and be gracious enough to say that she has done the best she could. I am ninety years old."

Taking Desperate Chances

It is true that many contract severe colds and recover from them without taking any precaution or treatment, and a knowledge of this fact leads others to take their chances instead of giving their colds the needed attention. It should be borne in mind that every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality, makes the system less able to wthstand each succeeding attck and paves the way for the more serious diseases. Can you afford to take such desperate chances when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of bad colds may be had for a trifle?—For sale at Adams Pharmacy.

On last Tuesday, January 11th at 12:00 o'clock, occurred the marriage of Miss Ellen Schulte and Hilko Pals, the ceremony taking place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Claus Symers. The wedding was charming in its simplicity, only the immediate relatives present. Rev. Joseph Edge, pastor of the Methodist church, was the officiating minister. The ring ceremony was used. The house was prettily decorated for the occasion in pink and white. The bride was gowned in taupe beaded silk georgette and carried a bouquet of flowers. She was attended by Mrs. Katie Frohling, sister of the bridegroom, as bridesmaid, while Menno Frohling served the groom. Miss Susie Schulte, little ten year old sister of the bride, played the wedding march. Following the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner was served. Both the bride and groom have resided near Alexander most all their lives and are held in very high esteem by their many acquaintances.

The bride is the oldest daughter of Mrs. Claas Symens, being a very accomplished young lady. The groom is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Pals, well known residents of Franklin county. Mr. and Mrs. Pals left immediately after the wedding service for a trip to Texas, where they will visit at Port Arthur and other points for three or four weeks.

On their return home they will commence housekeeping on a farm two and one-half miles north of Alexander.

Congratulations are extended Mr and Mrs. Pals by their many friends for a long and prosperous wedded life.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

WHAT ABOUT THE BAND?

What about the band for next year? Is Bemond to have another? If so, is it not time to be looking into the matter and getting the thing in shape and lined up?

Klemme's band has started their preliminary work for next season's concerts, perfecting their organization and laying out their summer's schedule. It is a good plan to follow, to have things settled early and not leave everything for the last minute when time is short and action apt to be hasty and unconsidered.

Nobody entertains any doubt that a band is a good thing for the town, that it brings trade, gives wholesome entertainment and is a worthwhile proposition in every way. And nobody who heard Belmond's band last summer entertains any doubt but what it is one of the best of its kind in the country.

The Independent is not informed as to whether the band boys had any "kick" on the way the band was financeid or run last summer, but if they had, now is the time for them and the Chamber of Commerce to get together and settle it, and to make their plans for next summer.

HOW ABOUT A CHAUTAUQUA?

Two different gentlemen representing two different chautauqua systems have been in Belmond in the past two months, investigating the possibilities for holding a chautauqua in Belmond next summer.

The first did not meet with very good success, and the second with a little more. Nobody appeared to take enough interest in the idea to be willing to start something. A number were willing to back the proposition, but nobody wanted to do any of the work.

This paper is heartily in favor of Belmond's holding a chautauqua next summer, and is willing to be one of the backers, and to lend whatever assistance may be within its power. A chautauqua is a good thing for any town, regardless of size; it furnishes the highest class of entertainment at a very moderate cost, and at a season of the year when entertainment of its calibre is usually on the shelf.

Practically most of the towns in this vicinity have signed or are to sign up for a chautauqua this next summer. Goldfield is a noted example of the chautauqua as a paying proposition. A chautauqua has been staged there for several years and has made good, because the citizens of the town were back of it and willing to boost.

If Belmond intends to remain on the map next year, there are several things it should be looking into now, and among them is a good high grade chautauqua. Reccomended for action by the Chamber of Commerce and the Community Club.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL

J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m.

Owing to the stormy day last Sunday the attendance was not up to average in the Sunday school. We ought to have an extra large attendance next Sunday to bring the average up to standard.

Dr. J. J. Bushnell, our district superintendent, will be with us and preach next Sunday morning. This is Dr. Bushnell's first Sunday with us. Let's give him a royal welcome at the service. It will cheer him and we are certain his message will be an inspiration to all who hear it. Most folk are ready to acknowledge that they should give the church and religion a larger place in their lives than they do. Why not do it this year? "Men and women who conform to the laws of God and strive to be of real service one to another automatically become healthy, happy and prosperous. Ninety-five per cent of the people who do not get along well materially owe their misfortune to lack of these religious qualities of faith, industry, courage, imagination and thrift. This means that the real great work of the church today lies in reviving these great productive qualities in the souls of the masses."

You will find a welcome at any and all of the services of the church. Will you be there Sunday?

Getting Together

One of the biggest problems facing farmers and bankers today is that of providing ample farm credits on reasonable terms. They can solve it only by working together, says

The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

Our credit system is based on a 60-day paper intended to serve commercial interests with a quick turn-over. It doesn't serve the farmer, whose turn-over comes once a year. How can he be supplied with the capital he needs to run his farm business?

Because the problem of furnishing the farmer with ample credit facilities is one of such vital interest to the whole farm industry and to our national welfare, THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN has many trained investigators working on the plans offered for solving the difficulties. Their articles will keep you informed on developments toward easier farm credits. For an example, next week's issue carries a story by E. V. Wilcox on financing the marketing of a major farm crop. Other competent articles are coming soon.

SCHOOL NOTES

This week will be given to reviews and semester examinations. Some pupils are beginning to realize that it is better to get their lessons every day rather than depend upon semester examinations.

The Normal Training examinations will be held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week in Room 35. Any Normal Training graduate may write at this time to raise certificate grades if they wish to do so.

Last Frday the basket ball team journeyed to Dows, where they met defeat. Our teams were not used to playing on a small floor with low ceilings. However, we expect to record a different story when Dows comes to Belmond, February 18.

Don't forget the men's community night which is held in the gym every Tuesday night from 7:30 to 9:30. Come out and enjoy the evening with us. Volley ball, indoor base ball and other games will give you a chance to enjoy yourself. Tennis or gym shoes or rubbers are needed to play on the floor.

Last Friday evening the second number of the Lyceum course was given. The weather was anything but pleasant, but a good audience greeted the Bonnie Brook company and enjoyed the entertainment. Miss Brooke had a number of selections which she might have given had the audience encored. Don't be afraid to applaud the talent if you are pleased with their efforts.

The last number of the Lyceum course will be given February 7th. This number will be the Laurant company. Laurant is a magician and known among the Redpath talent as the Man of Mystery. Laurant has been with the Redpath bureau over ten years and comes to us guaranteed to please any who wish magic and mystery.

Mrs. Frank Baldridge and Mrs. Dull were kindergarten visitors last Friday afternoon.

A third of first grade's enrollment has been absent the past week due to colds and measles.

The public declamatory contest will be held in the auditorium on January 26, at 8:00 o'clock. Every one should plan to attend this program. Tickets 25 and 35 cents.

"A Sister to Salome"

A Fox picture featuring

Gladys Brockwell

11c and 25c

FRIDAY, JAN. 21

"The Scuttlers"

A Fox picture featuring

Wm. Farnum

An absorbing and sensational story of the sea. William Fox, the producer, must have gone to great expense to put this story on the screen. A 250-foot ship is used for most of the scenes, and this vessel is sunk far out n the Pacific, after a series of dramatic incidents that are gripping in the extreme.

The story is that of a man who is hired to ship as a sailor in order to learn if the captain is guilty, as suspected, of scuttling his ships for the insurance. To avoid suspicion Farnum, as Jim Landers, allows himself to be shanghaied. He finds himself under a brutal first mate, and the mate at once shows that he dislikes Landers more than any one on board. The story passes from one thrill to another and holds the breathless interest of the audience from beginning to end.

SATURDAY, JAN. 22

"Twins of Suffering Creek"

A Fox picture featuring

William Russell

Also a special Crisby comedy—KISS ME CAROLINE.

MONDAY AND TUESDAY JAN. 24 & 25

"What Women Love"

A First National production featuring

Annette Kellerman

Annette Kellerman, known as the mermaid of the screen, and who is the greatest woman swimmer in the world, was threatened in her childhood with the life of an invalid. Thru her untiring energy and her love of the sea she gained the peak of womanly physical perfection, and today is one of the most beautiful figures on the screen.

Also a two-reel Harold Lloyd comedy — BUMPING INTO BROADWAY

KLEMME BAND GETTING READY FOR SUMMER

Klemme Times: The members of the Klemme band met at the band rooms Monday evening for their annual meeting and the election of officers. Matters of business were talked over and a constitution and by-laws were read and to be adopted by the band at the next meeting, thereby completing the organization and putting the band on a firmer footing . A leader will be located and band rehearsals will begin in a week or two so that a good summer program can be lined up. The band had a hard struggle last year as they were all beginners but they are gradually being whipped into good shape and this summer the band will be able to give some high class entertainment.

CHARLEY PETERSON TELLS TALE OF ROAD SHOWS

The following article is from the Hampton Chronicle, and is by a former Belmond resident, Charles Peterson, who managed the Lyric theatre for several years. Charley is a showman from the ground up, and knows the business thoroly. What he says carries weight. The article reads:

The present rail situation in this country is giving theatrical managers no end of concern. Charles Peterson, manager of the Windsor theatre, stated today that big shows are being forced from the road nearly every day because of the great increase in railroad rates. In prewar days, when the two-cent-per mile rate was in force, a baggage car could be secured for fiteen tickets. Now it costs three cents and even more per mile and takes from 25 to 40 tickets to secure a car.

Iowa, in common with many other states, is fighting the 3.6 rate within the state, altho it has gone into effect for interstate travel. Mr. Peterson says that the entire future of the one-night stand theatre depends upon some adjustment of the rate of travel for theatrical companies; that unless some help is had soon, hundreds of theatres will be forced to close and will be converted into some other business. The producing managers and theatre interests of the country have appeared before the interstate commerce commission a number of tims and asked for hearing, but thus far without success.

"Some of the roads in the east are said to have been willing to make some concessions, but those of the west are not willing to make any change whatever in their rates," said Mr. Peterson. "The roads of the west are going on the theory that the shows will travel, no matter what the rates are, but they are due for an awakening.

"Another disturbing element in the present situation is the advance in wages given to the actor, the stage employee and the musician, together with the other increases have been granted, and altho seats for first class attractions are selling at the very highest figure ever known and business is good, many of the theatres and nearly all of the one-night stand and week stand companies are losing money. There must be very general reduction in operating expenses or a very general increase in admission charge.

"Not alone should the theatre managers look upon these railroad fare increases with concern, but also should the general public. The merchant who has much out of town patronage will find that with every increase his trading radius will be cut down or that he will be called upon to make greater inducements to those from a distance. The business man who has got to go to market often finds that his traveling expenses have gone up a great deal. Everyone is affected and increases increases are being put into effect in transportation almost daily, while all other things are on the decline. The merchant, the worker, the farmer and the manufacturer are all taking their losses, but the railroads, under the protecting wing of the interstate commerce commission, are still advancing their rates."

NEWSPAPER RATES TO STAND

Deflation is now in full swing in the United States. Pyramid prices are giving away before marked public resistance. The newspaper industry, however, is one in which there can be no radical revision in prices, for the very good reason that newspaper service to both reading public and advertiser has been underpaid and undervalued for many years. During the war, and since, newspaper prices have advanced as a last resort under circumstances over which publishers have had no control.

It is but honest and fair to state in this connection that there has been no profiteering by newspaper publishers, but, on the contrary, public service of the first order most under most unusual and extraordinary interference by the government.

There can be no reduction today in newspaper rates, neither to the reader or advertiser—in fact in many instances there must be still further advances in subscription and advertising rates to cover increases in cost since October 1st, in labor and materials.

Truth is, the hazards of newspaper publishing are so great, the lure to exceptional and expensive public service so enticing and competition so keen, that it is practically impossible to accumulate needed reserves and necessary betterments, to say nothing of adequate managerial compensation, dividends, etc., says Editor and Publisher.

Since 1914, the principal factors in newspaper making, organized labor and news print, have increased in cost 498 percent, while in the same period retail prices have increased approximately 150 percent; advertising rates 180 percent—a total of 330 percent, leaving a balance of 168 per cent in actual increased costs of production that has been absorbed by reduction in pages and other economies.

These figures do not include non-union labor increases, which have been in almost equal proportion, or a multitude of all kinds of tax items.

Deflation is now the order of the day in practically every business except that of newspaper-making. Prices must come down, but newspaper prices must never again be permitted to fall to the old cut-throat level that prevailed prior to 1914.

From the standpoint of production costs—labor and news print—the newspaper publishing business will be unchanged in 1921 over 1920. There is no tendency to lower wage scales and in all probability news print will continue to sell on contracts at the same average as in 1920, if not ten per cent higher.

There can be no lowering of rates either to subscriber or advertiser. The newspaper businesss is today on a more solid basis than ever before in its history and it must be kept there. In some cases, as we have said, further increases in revenues will be necessary to meet the new standards. As a matter of fact since October 1st, over three hundred newspapers have raised advertising rates on an average of about twenty-five percent. It may be necessary for other papers to follow this lead, in spite of general price declines.

In the meantime, it is the duty of every publisher in America to take stock in order that he may present a logical dollar and cents reason why for his prevailing schedule of rates, instead of some sentimental reason which was the rule some years ago and which, it is hoped, has been driven out of newspaper and advertising business for all time.

Just as an example of the above, when the Independent started in business in Belmond fourteen months ago, its first purchase of news print cost six cents a pound—last week a ton was finally delivered, at eleven cents a pound, nearly double what was paid a little over a year ago. Fourteen cents was the price last spring, showing a decline of three cents in a year. The Independent's subscription price is the same and the advertising rates the same as when print was six cents.

MANY ACCIDENTS ON CROSSINGS IN PAST YEAR

The safety of motor cars, trucks and other vehicles on the highways of the country and especially the dangers to their occupants at railroad grade crossings and on the bridges and culverts, is one of the subjects that will receive a great deal of attention at the American Good Roads Congress and National Good Roads Show to be held at the Coliseum in Chicago, February 9 to 12 next.

The congress and show will be held under the auspices of the American Road Builders Association, which includes in its membership the highway officials of the national government and those of the states, counties, cities and townships in the United States and Canada, together with highway engineers, users of road materials and highwaay transportation equipment.

It is estimated that there are about 400,000 bridges of more than five-foot span in the United States. According to Willis Whited, bridge engineer of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, it is probable that more than 80 percent of these are unable to carry a thoroly modern truck with an ample margin of safety. A majority of the bridges consist of a single span of wooden stringers with plank floors. Better construction and inspection of these bridges is one of the advances which members of the American Road Builders Association are advocating and it is likely that a vigorous campaign will be inaugurated at the Chicago good roads meeting with those ends in view. Engineers, like Mr. Whited, believe that the smaller bridges of the country will, for the most part, have to be rebuilt and the floors of the larger ones will have to be strengthened. Truck traffic, they say, is growing constantly heavier, and the limit is not in sight.

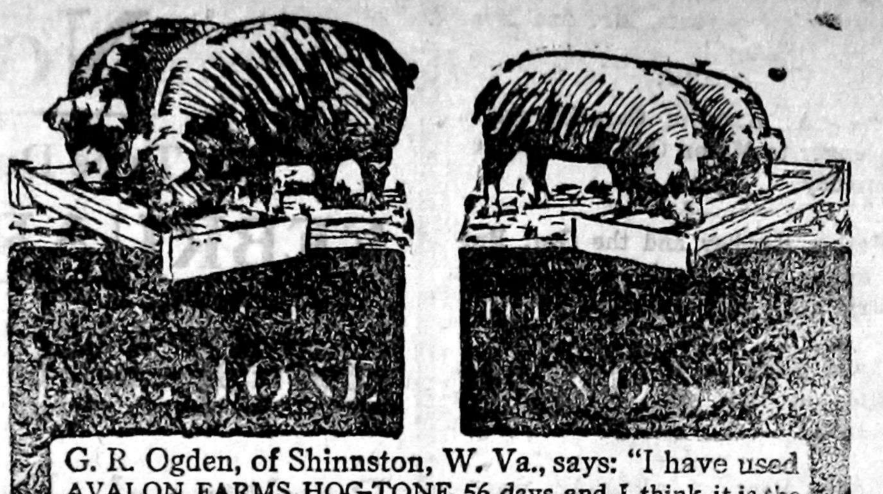
The constantly increasing number of grade crossing accidents, too, is a subject that is expected to cause considerble discussion at Chicago in connection with the growing demand for the elimination of grade crossings. Automobile accidents of one kind or another on the public highways killed 7,969 persons in 1919 according to the census of figures for 1920 covering the census bureau's registration area, which embraces 80 per cent of the country's population. A total of 3,808 deaths occured on the streets of the 66 largest cities of the country.

The deaths in 1919 from automobile accidents in the registration area showed an increase of 444 over those of 1918.

The enormous amount of automobile traffic on American roads and the consequent increase in liability to accident will be realized when it is considered that there are now 8,000,000 automobiles registered in the United States. In 1906 the number was only 48,000 an average of 1,000 to the state. In 1914, the number grew to 1,700,000. Twenty-five million Americans are now using motor cars. The actual vehicle-mile use of the roads, it is estimated, has increased more than 500 per cent in the rural districts and 1000 per cent in those near the large centers of population. There are 2,500,000 miles of rural highways in the United States and 40,000,000 automobiles tires are now an annual necessity.

The Chicago meeting promises to be one of the greatest in point of attendance and in results ever held in the history of the good roads movement. The governments of the several states and terrorities of this country and Canada as well as the mayors of two thousand cities have been asked to appoint official delegates to the meeting. In some instances governors and mayors will head their delegations in person. Seven thousand road and street contractors and thousands of army, automotive and chemical engineers, agriculturists, editors, bankers, motorists and large users of trucks, as well as officials of boards of trade, chambers of commerce and other organizations interested in road and street improvement, have been invited to attend. The congress also will be open to any and all persons interested in improving the highways of the country.

Wanted—Good clean rags, cotton, and of fair size. Will pay fifteen cents a pound for what we want. Bring them to the Independent office.



G. R. Ogden, of Shinnston, W. Va., says: "I have used AVALON FARMS HOG-TONE 56 days and I think it is the best medicine I ever used. I have two pigs 4 months and 3 days old that weigh 360 pounds, one 6 pounds heavier than the other. They are 100 pounds heavier than my neighbor's 2 of the same litter and feed."

This is the experience of a typical user of Hog-Tone. There are hundreds and hundreds of letters on file at the Avalon Farms Company's office from nearly every state in the Union, all telling of big improvement in hogs and in hog profits through the use of Hog-Tone, the scientifically prepared Hog Conditioner, Fattener and Worm Remover. Hog-Tone is sold on 60 days' Free Trial under an absolute money-back guarantee. Come in the store and tell us how many hogs you have in your herd and we will give you enough Hog-Tone to treat all of them 60 days. You don't have to pay for it unless you are absolutely satisfied. Hampton Recorder: Federal agent Healey of Fort Dodge, accompanied by Sheriff A. B. Atkinson and Deputy Sheriff A. P. Millet, made a raid on the rural home of G. A. Benkendork, two miles east of Dows in Morgan township, last week and captured the first moonshine whiskey still to be found in Franklin county. The officers destroyed twenty gallons of mash but only obtained about a pint of the finished product.

Mr. Benkendorf was not at home at the time of the raid, being absent on a visit to Illinois, but as it is against the law to have a still in one's possession, unless it is duly registered, in which case it may only be used legally in distilling water, he will be dealt with upon his return home by either the state or federal government.

Members of the family declare that Mr Benkendork made the still himself and had only used the liquor for home consumption, which Mr. Healey says is the usual plea. It is a good guess that Mr. Benkendorf upon his return to Iowa will be summoned to Fort Dodge and while there will be called upon to pay the usual fine assessed in such cases.

DESCENT OF MAN

Little Girl—Teacher said today that our ancestors away back were monkeys.

Mother—You don't believe that, do you?

"Well, I don't know much about it, but I told the teacher that maybe it wasn't so far back either, ' cause I heard dad say that you had made a monkey out of him."

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

read the mountaineer's expression. It was all too plain: an undeniable look of disappointment.

The truth was that even in spite of all the Chamber of Commerce head had told him, Lennox had still hoped to find some image of the elder Dan Failing in the face and body of his grandson. Because of the thick glasses, Lennox could not see the young man's eyes; but he didn't think it likely they were at all like the eyes with which the elder Failing saw his way through the wilderness at night.

"You're Dan Failing's Grandson, Aren't You?"

Of course he was tall, just as the famous frontiersman had been, but while the elder weighed one hundred and ninety pounds, bone and muscle, this man did not touch one hundred and thirty. Evidently the years had brought degeneracy to the Failing clan. Lennox was desolated by the thought.

He helped Dan with his bag to a little wiry automobile that waited beside the station. They got into the two front seats, and a moment later were starting up the long, curved road that led to the Divide.

During the hour that they were crossing over the foothills, on the way to the big timber, Silas Lennox talked a great deal about the frontiersman that had been Dan's grandfather. A mountain man does not use profuse adjectives. He talks very simply and very straight, and often there are long silences between his sentences. Yet he conveys his ideas with entire clearness.

Dan realized at once that if he could be, in Lennox's eyes, one-fifth of the man his grandfather had been, he would never have to fear again the look of disappointment with which his host had greeted him at the station. But instead of reaching that high place, he had only—death. He knew what his destiny was in these quiet hills. And it was true that he began to have secret regrets that he had come. But it wasn't that he was disappointed in the land that was opening up before him. It fulfilled every promise. His sole reason for regrets lay in the fact that now the whole mountain world would know of the decay that had come upon his people. Perhaps it would have been better to have left them to their traditions.

He had never dreamed that the fame of his grandfather had spread so far. For the first ten miles Dan listened to stories—legends of a cold nerve that simply could not be shaken; of a powerful, tireless physique; of moral and physical strength that was seemingly without limit. Then, as the foothills began to give way to the higher ridges, and the shadow of the deeper forests fell upon the narrow, brown road, there began to be long gaps in the talk. And soon they rode in utter silence, evidently both of them absorbed in their own thoughts.

Dan did not feel oppressed at all. He merely seemed to fall into the spirit of the woods, and no words came to his lips. Every mile was an added delight to him. Not even wine could have brought a brighter sparkle to his eyes. He had begun to experience a vague sort of excitement, an emotion that was almost kin to exultation, over the constant stir and movement of the forest life. Once, as they stopped the car to refill the radiator from a mountain stream, Lennox looked at him with sudden curiosity. "You are getting a thrill out of this, aren't you?" he asked wonderingly.

It was a curious tone. Perhaps it was a hopeful tone, too. He spoke as if he hardly understood.

"A thrill!" Dan echoed. He spoke as a man speaks in the presence of some great wonder. "Good Heavens. I never saw anything like it in my life."

"In this very stream," the mountaineer told him joyously, "you may occasionally catch trout that weigh three pounds."

But as he got back into the car the look of interest died out of Lennox's eyes. Of course any man would be somewhat excited by his first glimpse of the wilderness. It was not that he had inherited any of the traits of his grandfather. It was absurd to hope that he had. And he would soon get tired of the silences and want to go back to his cities. He told his thought—that it would all soon grow old to him; and Dan turned almost in anger.

"You don't know," he said. "I didn't know myself, how I would feel about it. I'm never going to leave the hills again."

"You don't mean that."

"But I do." He tried to speak further, but he coughed instead. "But I couldn't if I wanted to. That cough tells you why, I guess."

"You mean to say—" Silas Lennox turned in amazement. "You mean that you're a—a goner? That you've given up hope of recovering?"

"That's the impression I meant to convey. I've got a little over four months—though I don't see that I'm any weaker than I was when the doctor said I had six months. Those four will take me all through the fall and the early winter. And I hope you won't feel that you've been imposed upon—to have a dying man on your hands."

"It isn't that." Silas Lennox threw his car into gear and started up the long grade. And he drove clear to the top of it and into another glen before he spoke again. Then he pointed to what looked to Dan like a brown streak that melted into the thick brush. "That was a deer," he said slowly. "Just a glimpse, but your grandfather could have got him between the eyes. Most like as not, though, he'd have let him go. He never killed except when he needed meat. But that—as you say—ain't the impression I'm trying to convey."

He seemed to be groping for words.

"What is it, Mr. Lennox?" Dan asked.

"Instead of being sorry, I'm mighty glad you've come," Lennox told him. "It's not that I expect you to be like your grandfather. You haven't had his chance. But it's always the way of true men, the world over, to come back to their own kind to die. That deer we just saw—he's your people, and so are all these ranchers that grub their lives out of the forests—they are your people, too. And you couldn't have pleased the old man's old friends any better, or done more for his memory, than to come back to his own land for your last days."

The words were strange, yet Dan intuitively understood. It was as if a prodigal son had returned at last, and although his birthright was squandered and he came only to die, the people of his home would give him kindness and forgiveness, even though they could not give him their respect.

CHAPTER III.

The Lennox home was a typical mountain ranch-house—square, solid, comforting in storm and wind. Bill was out to the gate when the car drove up. He was a son of his father, a strong man in body and personality. He too had heard of the elder Failing, and he opened his eyes when he saw the slender youth that was his grandson. And he led the way into the white-walled living room.

"You must be chilly and worn out from the long ride," Lennox suggested quietly. He spoke in the tone a strong man invariably uses toward an invalid. Dan felt a curious resentment at the words.

"I'm not cold," he said. "It's hardly dark yet. I'd sooner go outdoors and look around."

The elder man regarded him curiously, perhaps with the faintest glimmer of admiration. "You'd better wait till tomorrow, Dan," he replied. "Bill will have supper soon, anyway. You don't want to overdo too much, right at first."

"You'd Better Wait Till Tomorrow, Dan."

"But, good heavens! I'm not going to try to spare myself while I'm here? It's too late for that."

"Of course—but sit down now, anyway. I'm sorry that Snowbird isn't here."

"Snowbird is—"

"My daughter. My boy, she can make a biscuit! That's not her name, of course, but we've always called her that. She got tired of keeping house and is working this summer. Poor Bill has to keep house for her, and no wonder he's eager to take the stock down to the lower levels. I only wish he hadn't brought 'em up this spring at all; I've lost dozens from the coyotes."

"But a coyote can't kill cattle—"

"It can if it has hydrophobia, a common thing in the varmints this time of year. But as I say, Bill will take the stock down next season, and then Snowbird's work will be through, and she'll come back here."

"Then she's down in the valley?"

"Far from it. She's a mountain girl if one ever lived. Perhaps you don't know the recent policy of the forest service to hire women when they can be obtained. It was a policy started in war times and kept up now because it is economical and efficient. She and a girl from college have a cabin not five miles from here on old Bald mountain, and they're doing lookout duty."

Dan wondered intensely what lookout duty might be. "You see, Dan," Lennox said in explanation, "the government loses thousands of dollars every year by forest fire. A fire can be stopped easily if it is seen soon after it starts. But let it burn awhile, in this dry season, and it's a terror—a wall of flame that races through the forests and can hardly be stopped. And maybe you don't realize how enormous this region is—literally hundreds of miles across. We're the last outpost—there are four cabins, if you can find them, in the first seventy miles back to town. So they have to put lookouts on the high points, and now they're coming to the use of airplanes so they can keep even a better watch. Snowbird and a girl friend from college got jobs this summer as lookouts—all through the forest service they are hiring women for the work. They are more vigilant than men, less inclined to take chances, and work cheaper. These two girls have a cabin near a spring, and they cook their own food, and are making what is big wages in the mountains. I'm rather hoping she'll drop over for a few minutes tonight."

"Good Lord—does she travel over these hills in the darkness?"

The mountaineer laughed—a delighted sound that came somewhat curiously from the bearded lips of the stern, dark man. "Dan, I'll swear she's afraid of nothing that walks the face of the earth—and it isn't because she hasn't had experience either. She's a dead shot with a pistol, for one thing. She's physically strong, and every muscle is hard as nails. She used to have Shag, too—the best dog in all these mountains. She's a mountain girl, I tell you; whoever wins her has got to be able to tame her!" The mountaineer laughed again.

The call to supper came then, and Dan got his first sight of mountain food. There were potatoes, newly dug, mountain vegetables that were crisp and cold, a steak of peculiar shape, and a great bowl of purple berries to be eaten with sugar and cream. Dan's appetite was not as a rule particularly good. But evidently the long ride had affected him. He simply didn't have the moral courage to refuse when the elder Lennox heaped his plate.

"Good heavens, I can't eat all that," he said, as it was passed to him. But the others laughed and told him to take heart.

He took heart. It was a singular thing, but at that first bite his sudden confidence in his gustatory ability almost overwhelmed him. So he cut himself a bite of the tender steak—fully half as generous as the bites that Bill was consuming across the table. And its first flavor simply filled him with delight.

"What is this meat?" he asked. "I've certainly tasted it before."

"I'll bet a few dollars that you haven't, if you've lived all your life in the Middle West," Lennox answered. "Maybe you've got what the scientists call an inherited memory of it. It's the kind of meat your grandfather used to live on—venison."

Soon after dinner Lennox led him out of the house for his first glimpse of the hills in the darkness.

They walked together out to the gate, across the first of the wide pastures where, at certain seasons, Lennox kept his cattle; and at last they came out upon the tree-covered ridge. The moon was just rising. They could see it casting a curious glint over the very tips of the pines. But it couldn't get down between them. They stood too close, too tall and thick for that. And for a moment, Dan's only sensation was one of silence.

"You have to stand still a moment, to really know anything," Lennox told him.

They both stood still. Dan was as motionless as that day in the park, long weeks before, when the squirrel had climbed on his shoulder. The first effect was a sensation that the silence was deepening around them. It wasn't really true. It was simply that he had become aware of the little continuous sounds of which usually he was unconscious, and they tended to accentuate the hush of the night. He knew, just as all mountaineers know, that the wilderness about him was stirring and pulsing with life. Some of the sounds were quite clear—an occasional stir of a pebble or the crack of a twig, and some, like the faintest twitching of leaves in the brush not ten feet distant, could only be guessed at.

"What is making the sounds?" he asked.

He didn't know it, at the time, but Lennox turned quickly toward him. It wasn't that the question had surprised the mountaineer. Rather it was the tone in which Dan had spoken. It was perfectly cool, perfectly self-contained.

"The one right close is a chipmunk. I don't know what the others are; no one ever does know. Perhaps ground squirrels, or rabbits, or birds, and maybe one of those harmless old black bears who is curious about the house. And tell me—can you smell anything—"

"Good Lord, Lennox! I can smell all kinds of things."

"I'm glad. Some men can't. No one can enjoy the woods if he can't smell. Part of the smells are of flowers, and part of balsam, and God only knows what the others are. They are just the wilderness—"

Dan could not only perceive the smells and sounds, but he felt that they were leaving an imprint on the very fiber of his soul. He knew one thing. He knew he could never forget this first introduction to the mountain night. The whole scene moved him in strange, deep ways in which he had never been stirred before; it left him exultant and, in deep wells of his nature far below the usual currents of excitement, a little excited too.

Then both of them were startled out of their reflections by the clear, unmistakable sound of footsteps on the ridge. Both of them turned, and Lennox laughed softly in the darkness. "My daughter," he said. "I knew she wouldn't be afraid to come."

Dan could see only Snowbird's outline at first, just her shadow against the moonlit hillside. His glasses were none too good at long range. And possibly, when she came within range, the first thing that he noticed about her was her stride. The girls he knew didn't walk in quite that free, strong way. She took almost a man-size step; and yet it was curious that she did not seem ungraceful. Dan had a distinct impression that she was floating down to him on the moonlight. She seemed to come with such unutterable smoothness. And then he heard her call lightly through the darkness.

The sound gave him a distinct sense of surprise. Some way, he hadn't associated a voice like this with a mountain girl; he had supposed that there would be so many harshening influences in this wild place. Yet the tone was as clear and full as a trained singer's. It was not a high voice; and yet it seemed simply brimming, as a cup brims with wine, with the rapture of life. It was a self-confident voice too, wholly unaffected and sincere, and wholly without embarrassment.

Then she came close, and Dan saw the moonlight on her face. And so it came about, whether in dreams or wakefulness, he could see nothing else for many hours to come.

The girl who stood in the moonlight had health. She was simply vibrant with health. It brought a light to her eyes, and a color to her cheeks, and life and shimmer to her moonlit hair. It brought curves to her body, and strength and firmness to her limbs, and the grace of a deer to her carriage. Whether she had regular features or not Dan would have been unable to state. He didn't even notice. They weren't important when health was present. Yet there was nothing of the coarse or bold or voluptuous about her. She was just a slender girl, perhaps twenty years of age, and weighing even less than the figure occasionally to be read in the health magazines for girls of her height. And she was fresh and cool beyond all words to tell.

And Dan had no delusions about her attitude toward him. For a long instant she turned her keen, young eyes to his white, thin face; and at once it became abundantly evident that beyond a few girlish speculations she felt no interest in him. After a single moment of rather strained, polite conversation with Dan—just enough to satisfy her idea of the conventions—she began a thrilling girlhood tale to her father. And she was still telling it when they reached the house.

Dan held a chair for her in front of the fireplace, and she took it with entire naturalness. He was careful to put it where the firelight was at its height. He wanted to see its effect on the flushed cheeks, the soft dark hair. And then, standing in the shadows, he simply watched her. With the eye of an artist he delighted in her gestures, her rippling enthusiasm, her utter irrepressible girlishness that all of time had not years enough to kill.

Bill stood watching her, his hands deep in his pockets, evidently a companion of the best. Her father gazed at her with amused tolerance. And Dan—he didn't know in just what way he did look at her. And he didn't have time to decide. In less than fifteen minutes, and wholly without warning, she sprang up from her chair and started toward the door.

"Good Lord!" Dan breathed. "If you make such sudden motions as that I'll have heart failure. Where are you going now?"

"Back to my watch," she answered, her tone wholly lacking the personal note which men have learned to expect in the voices of women. And an instant later the three of them saw her retreating shadow as she vanished among the pines.

Dan had to be helped to bed. The long ride had been too hard on his shattered lungs; and nerves and body collapsed an instant after the door was closed behind the departing girl. He laughed weakly and begged their pardon; and the two men were really very gentle. They told him it was their own fault for permitting him to overdo. Lennox himself blew out the candle in the big, cold bedroom.

Dan saw the door close behind him, and he had an instant's glimpse of the long sweep of moonlit ridge that stretched beneath the window. Then, all at once, seemingly without warning, it simply blinked out. Not until the next morning did he really know why. Insomnia was an old acquaintance of Dan's, and he had expected to have some trouble in getting to sleep. His only real trouble was waking up again when Lennox called him to breakfast. He couldn't believe that the light at his window shade was really that of morning.

"Good Heavens!" his host exploded. "You sleep the sleep of the just."

Dan was about to tell him that on the contrary he was a very nervous sleeper, but he thought better of it. Something had surely happened to his insomnia. The next instant he even forgot to wonder about it in the realization that his tired body had been wonderfully refreshed. He had no dread now of the long tramp up the ridge that his host had planned.

But first came target practice. In Dan's baggage he had a certain very plain but serviceable sporting rifle of about thirty-forty caliber—a gun that the information department of the large sporting-goods store in Gitcheapolis had recommended for his purpose. Except for the few moments in the store, Dan had never held a rifle in his hands. The first shot he hit the trunk of a five-foot pine at thirty paces.

"But I couldn't very well have missed it!" he replied to Lennox's cheer. "You see, I aimed at the middle—but I just grazed the edge."

The second shot was not so good, missing the tree altogether. And it was a singular thing that he aimed longer and tried harder on this shot than on the first. The third time he tried still harder, and made by far the worst shot of all.

"What's the matter?" he demanded. "I'm getting worse all the time."

Lennox didn't know for sure. But he made a long guess. "It might be beginner's luck," he said, "but I'm inclined to think you're trying too hard. Take it easier—depend more on your instincts."

Dan's reply was to lift the rifle lightly to his shoulder, glance quickly along the trigger and fire. The bullet struck within one inch of the center of the pine.

For a long second Lennox gazed at him in open-mouthed astonishment. "My stars, boy!" he cried at last. "Was I mistaken in thinking you were a born tenderfoot—after all? Can it be that a little of your old grandfather's skill has been passed down to you? But you can't do it again."

But Dan did do it again. If anything, the bullet was a little nearer the center. And then he aimed at a more distant tree.

But the hammer snapped down ineffectively on the breech. He turned with a look of question.

"Your gun only holds five shots," Lennox explained. Reloading, Dan tried a more difficult target—a trunk almost one hundred yards distant. Of course it would have been only child's play to an experienced hunter; but to a tenderfoot it was a difficult mark indeed. Twice out of four shots Dan hit the tree trunk, and one of his two hits was practically a bull's-eye. His two misses were the result of the same mistake he had made before—attempting to hold his aim too long.

* * * * * * *

Dan and Lennox started together up the long slope of the ridge. Dan alone armed; Lennox went with him solely as a guide. The deer season had just opened, and it might be that Dan would want to procure one of these creatures.

"But I'm not sure I want to hunt deer," Dan told him. "You speak of them as being so beautiful—"

"They are beautiful and your grandfather would never hunt them, either, except for meat. But maybe you'll change your mind when you see a buck. Besides, we might run into a lynx or a panther. But not very likely, without dogs."

They trudged up, over the carpet of pine needles. They fought their way through a thicket of buckbrush. Once they saw the gray squirrels in the tree tops. And before Lennox had as much as supposed they were near the haunts of big game, a yearling doe sprang up from its bed in the thickets.

For an instant she stood motionless, presenting a perfect target. It was evident that she had heard the sound of the approaching hunters, but had not as yet located or identified them with her near-sighted eyes. Lennox whirled to find Dan standing very still, peering along the barrel of his rifle. But he didn't shoot. The deer, seeing Lennox move, leaped into her terror-pace—that astounding run that is one of the fastest gaits in the whole animal world. In the wink of an eye she was out of sight.

"Why didn't you shoot?" Lennox demanded.

"Shoot? It was a doe, wasn't it?"

"Good Lord, of course it was a doe! But there are no game laws that go back this far. Besides—you aimed at it."

"I aimed just to see if I could catch it through my sights. And I could. My glasses sort of made it blur—but I think—perhaps—that I could have shot it. But I'm not going to kill does. There must be some reason for the game laws, or they wouldn't exist."

"You're a funny one. Come three thousand miles to hunt and then pass up the first deer you see. You could almost have been your grandfather, to have done that. He thought killing deer needlessly was almost as bad as killing a man. They are beautiful things, aren't they?"

Dan answered him with startling emphasis. But the look that he wore said more than his words.

They trudged on, and Lennox grew thoughtful. He was recalling the picture that he had seen when he had whirled to look at Dan, immediately after the deer had leaped from its bed. It puzzled him a little. He had turned to find the younger man in a perfect posture to shoot, his feet placed in exactly the position that years of experience had taught Lennox was correct; and withal, absolutely motionless. What many hunters take years to learn, Dan had seemed to know by instinct. Could it be, after all, that this slender weakling, even now bowed down with a terrible malady, had inherited the true frontiersman's instincts of his ancestors?

The result of this thought was at least to hover in the near vicinity of a certain conclusion. That conclusion was that at least a few of the characteristics of his grandfather had been passed down to Dan. It meant that possibly, if time remained, he would not turn out such a weakling, after all. Of course his courage, his nerve, had yet to be tested; but the fact remained that long generations of frontiersmen ancestors had left this influence upon him. The wild was calling to him, wakening instincts long smothered in cities, but sure and true as ever. It was the beginning of regeneration. Voices of the long past were speaking to him, and the Failings once more had begun to run true to form. Inherited tendencies were in a moment changing this weak, diseased youth into a frontiersman and wilderness inhabitant such as his ancestors had been before him.

ROWAN

Mrs. Dan Fletcher was called to Stanwood by the death of an uncle the past week. She returned home Monday, having also visited relatives at Tipton, Iowa.

J. F. Howell and Geo. Pritchet motored to Iowa Falls on Wednesday to transact business.

Mrs. Leonard McCallum was a Belmond caller on Wednesday afternoon.

Milton Brown of Meringo was a week end guest at the F. H. Fowler home, and was accompanied home on Monday by his wife, who has been a guest of her parents the past two weeks.

CALLED TO ILLINOIS

William Steffens and son Jesse were called to Illinois by the sudden death of Mr. Steffens' brother, Jim. Another brother, Jake Steffens, who has been a guest here with relatives also accompanied them.

Belmond Local News

Theo. Bonte will hold a closing out sale on the Mennenga farm two miles east and two north of Belmond on February 3rd. Watch for his ad and bills.

Ike Shaffer handed us the following clipping from a Portland, Ore., paper, and says he knows the gentlemen mentioned very well:

Letters signed "Shadow" and demanding amounts varying from $25,000 and $10,000 and other damage, have been received by five prominent men of Portland, the police announced J. Wesley Ladd, banker, received a letter demanding $25,000; Ben Selling, clothier, $15,000; Charles Jennings and Henry Jennings and I. Gevuertz, furniture men, $10,000.

The police arranged with Ladd to place a dummy package in a designated spot last night and after the package had been put there it disappeared. The police were unable to account for the escape of the person who had taken the package.

SOME SNOW

Belmond's lovely weather took a sudden turn for the worse last week Thursday, and for a few minutes the heaviest fall of snow that this vicinity has experienced for many moons occurred. Some of the old timers said that they could not remember a time when the snow fell so thick. The storm did not last long, but it certainly done some business while it was here. The weather then turned colder and the wind coming up made things disagreeable that night.

Board At Special Meeting Considers Question Of Pupils Bringing Lunch To School.

OTHER REGULATIONS MADE

The board at a special meeting adopted a motion stating that no distinction should be made regarding pupil might bring his noon lunch to school. However, we hope parents will see the wisdom of a child having a warm meal at noon, as well as wel as the walk to and from school and will not permit their child to bring lunch except in case of stormy weather or sickness.

The board also decided at this meeting that pupils leaving the building would not be permitted to enter again until 1:00, unless given permission to leave and return by the teachers in charge of hall duty.

Please bear this in mind and do not allow your children to return to school until nearly time for the first bell.

E. S. Fyler.

ROUTE ONE NEWS NOTES

O. D. Jenison had the misfortune to fall last week and fracture several ribs. This in connection with a severe cold not only makes it inconvenient but also very painful.

Mrs. C. J. Schmalle visited at the home of her daughter Mrs. Elmer Hofferman near Meservey, last week.

Henry Busick lost a very valuable horse last Saturday.

Miss Gladys Jenison was an over Sunday visitor at the O. D. Jenison home.

Barbara Gealow, Elwood and Alma Anderson, Willie Rabe, Max Nolte and Paul Bohning are out of school on account of measles.

The many friends of Mrs. Herman Frohling were grieved to hear that she had suffered a fall on the ice last Wednesday, fracturing the bones of the leg above the ankle. She was taken to the hospital and the injured member was placed under the ex-ray, where it was found necessary to have it placed in a cast. Owing to her age this is a serious misfortune andher many friends hope for a permanent and speedy recovery.

Several people from this vicinity attended the Engeseth sale in Goodell last week.

Authorities Take Still and Booze In Raid Here

Moonshiner Found In One Of The Old School House Buildings—Get Still And Quart.

23 GALLONS OF MASH TAKEN

Last week Tuesday night the police authorities of the city made a raid on one of the old school house buildings in north Belmond and captured a still, a quart of the real stuff and about 23 gallons of raisin mash.

The raid was made by Marshall Nourse, Nightwatch Rierson, and the man, a Russian with a jawbreaking name, offered no resistance, admitting his guilt. He could not very well help it as the officers found a still on the stove going full blast.

The Russian was taken before Justice Purdy that same evening and entered a plea of guilty to the charge of operating a still. Sheriff Fisher came over the next day and took him to the county seat, where he is now awaiting the pleasure of the court.

The next night, Wednesday, the police made another raid on one of the other houses. They were accompanied by Dr. McClellan and Clyde Jennings, who had been deputized, but the folks evidently had been wised up that they were coming, and altho the officers could smell the stuff in the house and found a quantity of mash outside there was nothing on which to base a charge and they had to let the people go, who strongly denied that they had been operating a still or that they had had anything to do with one.

Belmond Prominent In Cases At the District Court

Wednesday, January 12, the assessors from the various districts of Wright county met at the court house in Clarion on call of county Auditor Walker.

This meeting was called in order that the assessors might receive instructions regarding their duties and that a schedule of valuations might be arrived at to be used as a basis for fixing 1921 values on land and personal property.

The meeting was called to order by E. M. Callender, deputy county auditor. T. R. Beverage was elected chairman and Raymond S. Paine secretary. Assessors were present from the townships of Dayton, Belmond, Troy, Liberty, Lake, Grant, Iowa, Wall Lake, Lincoln, Eagle Grove, Blaine, Vernon, Boone and Norway and from the incorporated towns of Clarion, Belmond, Goldfield, Galt, Rowan, Eagle Grove and Woolstock.

The following values will be used as a basis for the 1921 assessments:

Land $72 an acre.
Stallions, according to value.
Horses, 3 years old and over, $60
Colts, 2 years, $48.
Colts, 1 year old, $32.
Mules, same as horses.
Bulls, according to value.
Cows, $36.
Heifers, 2 years old, $28.
Heifers, 1 year old, $16.
Steers, 3 years old, $40.
Steers, 2 years old, $32.
Steers, 1 year old, $20
Swine, over six months old, 5c per pound.
Sheep, over six months old, $4 each.
Goats, over six months old, $4:00 each.
Tractors and threshing rigs, according to value.

Clipper: The January term of the district court convenes Monday, January 31, and this is the last day for filing cases for the January term. The following cases were filed this week:

Daniel W. Rapp is made the defendant in a ten thousand dollar damage suit brought by Ernest F. Wege. They are Belmond residents, Mr. Wege being president of the United Manufacturing company, engaged in the manufacture of concrete machinery and beet harvesting machinery, and Mr. Rapp manager of the company. The petition alleges that while Mr. Rapp was manager of the company he made false, malicious and slanderous statements against the defendant stating in substance that Mr. Wege never made and could not make any concrete mixers that would be a success; that he had made a failure of everything he had undertaken; that he had never done any thing of value to the company, etc. The statements are alleged to have been made in the presence of C. P. Luick, John Berg and Matt. Barry, directors of the company. Mr. Wege claims the statements were made for the sole purpose of injuring his good standing and character and for the purpose of questioning his ability, and asks judgment in the sum of ten thousand dollars.

Obituary

NORRIS GLENN LATEER

Norris Glenn Lateer was born July 19th, 1896, at Blairsburg, Hamilton County, Iowa, and died January 20th 1921, at the home of his parents six miles Northwest of Belmond, Iowa, at the age of twenty-four years, six months and one day.

He moved with the family from Blairsburg to Alden, Iowa, in 1904 and in 1917 from Alden to Meservey, where they lived until the spring of 1920 when they moved to the present home. He entered the service of his country September 6, 1918, at Camp Dodge, Iowa, and was mustered out December 16, 1918, at Ft. Harrison, Indiana. Since his discharge from the army he has been engaged in business most of the time at Clear Lake, Iowa, selling out his interests there the day he was taken sick. For about three weeks he struggled with an attack of typhoid fever, which he seemed to be going to rally from when he was taken with hemorrhage, from which he died at nine-thirty Thursday morning.

Norris was a member of the M. W. A., the I. O. O. F. subordinate, and the I. O. O. F. Camp, and the American Legion, all of Clear Lake, Iowa.

Norris was preceeded in death by his father just four months and one day. He leaves to mourn his decease his mother, three brothers, Edwin E., Leon J., Earnest F., and one sister, Lucy A. Lateer, a number of other relatives and many friends.

Funeral services in charge of Rev. J. H. Edge were conducted from the Methodist church in Belmond, Iowa, Sunday, January 23, and interment made in the Franklin Grove cemetery.

NORWAY TOWNSHIP MEETING

A township meeting of Norway Farm Bureau members was held at the home of E. J. Maland who lives in the soutwestern portion of Norway township Monday afternoon, Jan. 17. About 35 members were in attendance and were favored by a splendid address by A. L. Middleton of Eagle Grove and Miss Bertha Holden, asst. state leader of home demonstration agents of Ames.

The men who attended the meeting were deeply interested in the report which Mr. Middleton made of the marketing situation of which he has made a thoro study in the past few months. The lady folks listened with interest to the plans and suggestions made by Miss Holden for carrying forward the ladies' work in the Farm Bureau in the absence of a home demonstration agent.

R. M. CAMERON FALLS DEAD AT HOME

Had Eaten Hearty Breakfast And Been Down Town That Morning Apparantly In Good Health.

WAS OVER NINETY YEARS OLD

Came To Belmond About Forty-Two Years Ago, And Was Prominent In The Affairs Of Town.

The people of Belmond were surprised and shocked Monday when it became known that R. M. Cameron had been stricken with a sudden attack of apoplexy, which caused his death.

Mr. Cameron, who was known by everybody in the community and who was a well known figure on the street of the city, ate a hearty breakfast Monday and was apparantly in the usual good health which he enjoyed. He came down town, where he stayed some time, and then went home. He was stricken while in the yard at his home, and died instantly.

Funeral services will be held at the house this (Wednesday) afternoon at 2:30, with the Masonic lodge, of which he was long a member, in charge.

Robert M. Cameron was born near Canton, Ohio, January 2, 1830, and died at his home in Belmond on January 24, 1921, at the age of 90 years, six months and 22 days.

In 1852 his father came from Ohio to Cedar Rapids, Robert following the next winter. During this same winter he went to Cedar Falls, where he purchased a farm and opened up a real estate office. On Feb. 15 he bought the first land sold in Grundy county.

He remained at Cedar Falls for several years, and then returned to Ohio where he engaged in business for a time.

On May 28, 1867 he was united in marriage to Laura E. Beeson. Soon after they were married they moved to his former home at Cedar Falls, where their two children were born and where they stayed until about 1879, when they moved to Belmond.

Mr. Cameron had filled an important place in the building up of the town and community. He was mayor of the town for four terms, and served as a justice of the peace for fifteen years. He was postmaster during President Cleveland's second term of office.

During the time that he was mayor, the city park was laid out, the city well was dug, and the water works thoroly started. At this time also the road leading north from town was laid out.

In the early days he was deputy county surveyor, and he done considerable surveying in connection with his real estate business.

Mr. Cameron was an honest, upright man and citizen, and had a large part in the community's early life and in the building up of Belmond. He made many friends, who extend to his family their sincerest sympathy in his death.

MRS. ARTHUR NELSON

Mrs. Arthur Nelson died of scarlet fever at her home west of town on Monday evening of this week. She and Mr. Nelson had only been married but a short time. Mrs. Nelson was well known in this vicinity, being a daughter of Tom Brooks, and her family and husband have the sympathy of the community in their loss.

THE COUNTY AGENT AND THE IMPLEMENT DEALER

There recently appeared in a number of the papers in the county an article purporting to be an interview with me relative to the attitude of the Farm Bureau and the County Agents of the state toward the implement dealers and manufacturers. The statement credited to me in that article was never made by me at any time. The interview was never held and the publication of the article was unknown to me, and, of course, unauthorized. I regret very keenly the impression the article created relative to my attitude toward the local implement dealers, and the attitude of the Farm Bureau toward them. I known the article was printed without malice on the part of the editors, who have been very generous in the use of their space in furthering the interests of the Farm Bureau in this county. I know the bureau as well as myself has appreciated this hearty co-operation. But in justice to the bureau and myself, I feel that the above statement of the case is necessary. Furthermore, the relations between the Farm Bureau and the implement dealers of the county have been most cordial. We regard them as our friends and hope to have them continue as such.

RALPH M. EDWARDS,
County Agent.

The Independent wishes to say in this matter that it did not publish the article mentioned, and prints the foregoing correction in the interests of Mr. Edwards and the Farm Bureau

MARRIED

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Shurson, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Jessie, to Mr. Oscar Hanson, Thursday, January 20th, 1921, at 2 o'clock p. m. Rev. Jensen officiating.

About 65 guests were present and after the ceremony a most splendid wedding dinner was served. The bride and groom went to Minneapolis for a short honeymoon when the will be at home on the bride's father's farm, Mr. Hanson having rented it for the coming year.

The guests from Belmond were Mr. and Mrs. Hans Hanson, Miss Minnie Johnson, Albert Hanson, Galen Johnson and Adolph Skovlin.

Short Course Now Being Perfected

Committee From Chamber of Commerce Meets Tuesday With Committee From Townships.

MANY PRIZES TO BE AWARDED

A committee composed of M. C. Barry, Cato C. Griesy, and Mr. Moore from the Chamber of Commerce met yesterday afternoon at the city hall with the reprepresentatives from Belmond, Pleasant, Norway, Iowa and Grant townships to perfect the plans for Belmond's big short course to be held here on the 10 and 11 of February.

The county agent was present at the meeting and assisted the two committee in perfecting the plans.

A committee of five, consisting of Cato C. Griesy, Geo. P. Hardwick, C. P. Luick, Geo. Dipple, and Adolph Meinders was appointed to make the necessary arrangements for the buildings and equipment for holding the short course.

It is urged upon every farmer and farmer's wife who expects to exhibit at the short course, whether stock, grain, domestic science or what ever they will enter, to report to their respective township chairmen what they are entering, the township chairmen in turn reporting to the committee mentioned. The men are asked to report to the men's chairman and the ladies to the ladies'.

There will be a number of prizes offered at the short course, and a list of these prizes will be printed in the local papers in the last issue before the short course, which will be the 8th of February. The awarding of these prizes will be based upon the combined amount subscribed by the farmers and business men.

The complete program for the biggest event of the winter will be in next week's issue of the Herald-Press and the Independent. Nothing is being left undone to make it the biggest and best event of its kind ever held in this vicinity, and it is expected that the course will be a howling success from start to finish.

SUGAR BEET GROWERS MEET IN MASON CITY

The sugar beet growers of northwestern Iowa representing Cerro Gordo, Wright, Hancock, Humboldt, Winnebago and Webster counties met in conference at the office of county agent Roy F. O'Donnell at Mason Wednesday, January 19.

Each county was represented by a good delegation and matters of vital interest to all sugar beet growers of northwest Iowa were discussed and some very constructive resolutions were passed.

Practically all the time was spent in discussion of the labor phase of the sugar beet industry. The farmers thruout the sugar beet districts of northwest Iowa seem to feel that the labor conditions in the sugar beet operation could be improved upon materially. The feeling was expressed that the labor clause included in the contracts which have been heretofore entered into between the sugar growers and the sugar company were not drafted in justice to the sugar beet growers.

An organization to be known as the Northwest Iowa Sugar Beet Growers Association was perfected and the chairman of each county organization will be a member of the board of directors of this organization. This board of directors will constitute an executive committee and all directors. The organization plans to have each county organization elect or appoint subcommittees of two members each at each dump. The purpose of this committee being to mediate in all disputes which may arise between the sugar beet growers and the sugar incorporation.

A resolutions committee consisting of Frank W. Senneff of Hancock county, W. J. Elling of Hancock county, and R. M. Edwards of Wright county submitted the following resolutions for adoption:

It is hereby resolved by the Northwestern Iowa Beet Growers Association in assembly at Mason City this 19th day of January 1921, consisting of Cerro Gordo, Wright, Winnebago, Hancock, Kossuth, Humboldt and Webster counties, Iowa, that the following resolution be and is hereby adopted:

First, payment of labor, that the amount to be paid for labor shall be based as follows: The amount paid for weeders shall be based on the thinning and number of beets per rod and all doubles or more counted as missing payments to be based on the final percentage if possible. It shall be based by basing 16 beets per rod as a perfect stand and allowing two or three beets per rod either greater or less as variation. If the farmer damages the beets so that the stand is not perfect the laborer shall have the right to call in the committee hereinafter named to relieve labor of the responsibility

Second: The payment of labor shall be based as follows: It is considered an average yield of beets $8 per ton and that labor shall receive the sum of 50c per ton for each ton raised over 8 ton per acre in addition to the payment on the 8 ton per acre for the first ton, $1 for the second ton over 8 acres and $3 per ton for all tonnage in excess of 10 tons per acre The above amounts to be based upon the actual weight.

Third Price: It is further resolved that the blocking and thinning shall be done by the laborers within ten days after the planting thereof providing that the weather and season are favorable

It is further resolved that the weather conditions may be taken into consideration by the committee hereinafter referred to if called upon to adjust any differences arising by reason of failure to block and thin said beets as herein specified.

Fourth, Responsibility of Labor. Be it further resolved that the company shall be responsible to the grower for procuring good and efficient labor and at the proper time for the caring of the beets of the grower and that the contract between he grower and the company shall obligate the company to the grower to bind itself to procure such labor.

Be it further resolved, that the labor so procured by the company shall be at all times under the supervision of the company but shall be subject to the directions of the grower for work done or ordered to be done by him that said labor be equally responsible to the company and to grower.

Be it further resolved, that there shall be appointed a committee of two men which committee shall serve as a committee from each dump; one of the members of said committee shall be the director of the dump and the other member of said committee shall be chosen by the executive committee of the county in question. That said committee shall have charge of all controversies or questions arising between the grower and labor and the grower or the company and shall act as appraisers in any matter of damages that may arise or determine any questions affecting labor, grower or the company.

Be it further resolved, that the fild representative of the company shall meet with said committee at such reasonable time or times as he may be requested by said committee. Said committee shall hold office for the period of one year from and after the election or appointment.

Be it further resolved, that copies of this resolution be presented to the proper officials of the Northern Sugar Corporation of Mason City and the Iowa Valley Sugar company of Belmond and any other sugar companies in the counties named with the request that said companies include in their contracts for the season of 1921 the matters herein named and that copies of this resolution be sent to each county agent of the counties herein named with the request that the same be presented to the beet growers in his respective county.

Be it further resolved, that any beet companies doing business in the counties herein named shall submit to the executive committee or each county herein named, contract to be executed between said company and the grower before contracts are executed for the season 1921.

The above and foregoing resolutions are hereby adopted and approved this 19th of January, 1921.

R. M. Edwards, W. J. Elling, Frank W. Senneff.

SOILS SERVICE CAMPAIGN

A soils service campaign will be held in Wright county in four district meetings January 27 and 28.

Due to the fact that this service has been requested by so many townships it was thought best to arrange four district meetings at farm homes nearest the central point in each of the four districts.

The townships wanting this service are requested to meet in group or district meetings at the farm which is nearest the central point of the four districts in the sectional meeting according to the following schedule:

Jan. 27—10 a. m.—Farm centrally located—Lincoln-Vernon-Blaine.
Jan. 27—2 p. m.—farm centrally located—Belmond, Pleasant, Iowa, Grant.
Jan. 28—10 a. m.—farm centrally located—Boone, Norway, Liberty, Lake.
Jan. 28—2 p. m.—farm centrally located—Eagle Grove, Troy, Woolstock, Dayton.

The object of the campaign will be to inform the farmers concerning the results obtained from the soil survey of their county and the follow-up laboratory, greenhouse and field experiments and also to recommend methods for the proper management of the soils of the county, whereby increased crop production may be obtained.

The campaign will consist of two talks per day in different localities, each talk to be followed by a general discussion and answers to questions.

An exhibit will be prepared and used thruout the campaign to illustrate results of the survey work. The exhibit will consist of the soil maps, blue prints of experimental fields, bulletins, leaflets and so forth.

GRAIN BEGINS TO MOVE AGAIN

Business in the northwest has taken a turn for the better. The bank credit situation in the country is easing, farmers are again selling their grain, railroad business is picking up and there are evidences on every hand of revival of activity in the industrial and commercial field of the Twin Cities and the Northwest.

Delayed for four months, the "frozen" bank loans of the northwest are beginning to be liquidated. There is a noticeable easing of money though rates may not soften for some time. Manufacturing firms report fewer cancellations and more orders on the basis of new 1921 prices. In short, many business leaders are confidently of the opinion that the opening of a new period of sound business prosperity is virtually at hand.

Wheat has rallied to more than $1.70 per bushel, a full 30 cents above the low mark late in the fall. The present price is attractive to farmers, apparently, and there is a new movement to sell. Today 224 cars of wheat were received. Yesterday 289 cars of wheat arrived in Minneapolis compared with 238 a week ago and 235 a year ago. Country shipping points are calling for more cars.

The Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads today issued orders forbidding any of their grain cars from leaving their lines. The emptes are to be rushed to country points to move the remainder of the grain crop to the terminals.

Fully 38 per cent of the Northwest reserve bank estimates. In this grain on the farms and in the country elevators is much basic wealth. At $1.50 a bushel this represents $81,000,000 in wheat alone. Bankers estimate that with other grains, forage, produce and live stock yet unsold there are sufficient products when converted into cash, to more than liquidate the $95,000,000 of the loans of the federaal reserve bank extended in the district.

The marketing of the remainder of the grain crop at present prices will increase purchasing power in the country. Bankers say this selling operation ought to reduce bank loans in the country sufficiently to relieve the credit strain and leave the banks free to finance the spring and summer agriculture operations.

"We are just beginning to see the liquidation of country bank loans," said Theodore Wold, vice president of the Northwestern National bank. "Loans of city banks to the country have not increased any in the last two weeks. Grain is starting to move again and this will undoubtedly mean liquidation in the country."

Bankers said that heavy movement of grain within the next two weeks is anticipated.

FARMERS NOT ALONE

The farmers are not alone in suffering losses in the general decline of prices to normalcy. The merchants are experiencing a serious loss on stocks of goods purchased for a very much higher retail price than they can now realize and are now selling much of their stocks at much below cost. They are speculators and are expected to take their chances on the ups and downs of the market. But the farmer is a producer, producing the essential foods for the world which all agree in all equity he should never be compelled to do at a less than cost and a fair margin of profit. Food producing should always be remunerative, attractive, from good profits. The trader can quit his business if he finds it unprofitable and no difference to the world, but not so with the food producers. Food must be had, and it is not at all possible its production would cease. Its profits should be such as to attract the intelligent and the skillful. Unless it is kept profitable, the intelligent, the thrifty, the brainy, will abandon it, and the vocation will return to the typical hayseed, the rube and the slouch conceived as the farmer of twenty-five years ago. Food producing of this day needs brains but it will not attract them unless fair profits are possible and assured. The farming will revert to the class formerly typical, a "class who couldn't do anything else," whose homes have no musical instrument, the floors no carpets, the shelves no books, and the "deestrict" four months annual school. "Ill fares the land, to endless ills a prey," where the farmers cannot prosper and the farm life no call for the intelligent, the cultured and the progressive.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

Taking Desperate Chances

It is true that many contract severe colds and recover from them without taking any precaution or treatment, and a knowledge of this fact leads others to take their chances instead of giving their colds the needed attention. It should be borne in mind that every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality, makes the system less able to wthstand each succeeding attck and paves the way for the more serious diseases. Can you afford to take such desperate chances when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of bad colds may be had for a trifle?—For sale at Adams Pharmacy.

ALGONA WOMAN MURDERED AND HUSBAND IS HELD

Mrs. Minnie Benjamin, 40 years old, wife of L. T. Benjamin, for fifteen years organist at the Congregational church, was found dead in the kitchen of her home here Saturday night, with her skull fractured in four places. A bloodspattered ammer was found a few feet from her side. Her husband, who is ten years her senior, is in the county jail charged with her murder.

Benjamin was arrested a few hours after the crime, when the police are alleged to have learned he had quarreled earlier in the day with his wife over another woman. The music teacher stoutly maintains his innocence.

The crime is believed by the police to have been committed between 5:30 and 6 o'clock Saturday evening, as Mrs. Benjamin was preparing the evening meal. They had returned to the house from a trip down town shortly after 5 o'clock. Benjamin is said to have left again about fifteen minutes later.

In his absence a neighbor woman went to the house and altho she is said to have rapped loudly she obtained no response. About half an hour later Benjamin returned in company with Miss Moline who was a roomer at the house. It is said, however, that she is not the woman over whom Benjamin quarreled with his wife. Benjamin had met her on the way home and they walked to the house togeter.

Miss Moline discovered the body as she and Benjamin walked into the kitchen. The body was stretched upon the floor, the face turned partially to the side. It was fully clad.

The police were called and after a brief investigation arrested Benjamin.

A coroner's jury has returned a verdict holding Benjamin guilty of his wife's murder. His clothing, which was examined at the inquest, is said to have been spattered with blood. The police hold to the theory Benjamin knocked his wife unconscious with the first blow of the hammer, weilding three other blows and then left the house.

The organist, who is also a music teacher, appears to be undisturbed over his predicament. In his cell he reiterated he was innocent.

Mrs. Benjamin was widely known thruout Kossuth county having been one of the leaders in the Red Cross work during the war. She also was secretary of the local lodge of the Mystic Workers. Funeral services will be held Tuesday.

A singular incident in connection with the crime is the fact that the Benjamins, who came to Algona twenty years ago, were about to depart for Chicago, where the musician was to accept a big church organist position.

Benjamin resigned his position as organist at the Congregational church here last week and Wednesday evening a farewell reception was tendered in his honor.

INCOME TAX WILL SOON BE DUE

Work has begun on the collection of the income tax for the year 1920. Uncle Sam, thru the bureau of internal revenue, is addressing to every person in the United States the question: "What was your net income for 1920?'" The answer permits of no guesswork. Every single person whose net income for 1920 was $1,000 or more and every married person whose net income was $2,000 or more is required to file a return under oath with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he lives on or before Marc 15, 1921.

The penalty for failure is a fine of not more than $1,000 and an addition assessment of 25 per cent of the amount of tax due. For willful refusal to make a return the penalty is a fine of not more than $10,000 or not exceeding one year's imprisonment, or both, together with the costs of prosecution. A similar penalty is provided for making a false or fraudulent return, together with an additional assessment of 50 per cent of the amount of tax evaded.

The income tax applies to women as well as men. Husband and wife must consider the income of both plus that of minor dependent children, and if the total equals or exceeds $2,000 a return must be filed A minor who has a net income in his own right of $1,000 or more must file a separate return. To be allowed the $2,000 exemption a married person must be living with husband or wife on the last day of the taxable year, December 1, 1920. Divorcees, persons separated by mutual agreement, widows and widowers unless they are the sole support of others living in the same household, in which case they are allowed the $2,000 exemption granted the head of a family, are entitled only to $1,000 exemption.

The normal tax rate for 1920 is the same as for 1919—4 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income above the exemption and 8 per cent on the remaining net income. This applies to every citizen and resident of the United States. In addition to the normal tax a surtax is imposed upon net incomes in excess of $5,000.

Full instructions for making out returns are contained on the forms, copies of which may be obtained from collectors of internal revenue. Persons whose net income for 1920 was $5,000 or less should use Form 1040A. Those with incomes in excess of $5,000 should use Form 1040.

Revenue officers will visit every county in the United States to assist taxpayers in making out their returns. The date of their arrival and the location of their offices will be announced by the press or may be acertained upon inquiry at the office of collectors. This advisory service is without cost to taxpayers.

Thousands of farmers whose net income for 1920 equaled or exceeded the exemptions of $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for married persons will be required to file on or before March 15, 1921, income tax returns for the year 1920.

As an aid to farmers the Bureau of Internal Revenue has prepared a special form, 1040F, for recording sales of live stock, produce, and a summary of income and expenses. This form should be attached to the taxpayer's individual return on Form 1040 or 1040A. Full instructions for making out the forms are contained in each.

Under gross income a farmer is required to include all proceeds derived from the sale of farm products whether produced on a farm or purchased for resale. When he exchanges his produce for groceries, clothing, or other merchandise, he must include in is income the value of the articles received and exchanged. Profit received from the sale of farm land or rent received for the use thereof must also be included.

In determining his net income, upon which the tax is assesesd, the farmer may deduct all necessary expenses incurred in the operation of his farm during the year. These include cost of cultivation, harvesting and marketing crops, the cost of seed and fertilizer used, amount spent in repair to farm buildings other than the dwellings and to fences and machinery. The cost of farm tools used up in the course of the year, the wages paid to employees other than domestic servants, and rent paid for farm land and buildings (other than dwelling) are deductable items.

Farmers who keep no records or only records of cash receipts and disbursements should make their returns on the basis of actual receipts but farmers who keep complete accounts and who take inventories at the beginning and end of the year to determine their profits should report on the accural basis. Both methods are fully explained on Form 1040F, copies of which may be obtained at the offices of collectors of internal revenue.

SIX WHISKEY STILLS FOUND ON A FARM

Omaha, Jan. 12.—A drunken hog, aided by an intoxicated dog, were engaged in a gory battle with three inebriated goats when deputy sheriffs descended on the farm of Geo. Fred, alleged moonshiner, near here yesterday. The goats, which had imbibed more freely than the other animals, got decidedly the worst of the argument, but not before they had inflicted severe punishment on the enemy.

Officers found six stills in full operation and confiscated 600 gallons of corn whiskey, besides large quancome drunk from eating the mash.

REFUSED NATURALIZATION PAPERS

In the district court session of Humboldt county at Dakota city last week, two foreigners were refused naturalization papers and ten were awarded citizenship papers. Regarding the two refused rights of citizenship, the Humboldt Republican said: "The Judge felt different concerning Gunner Voetmann, of Humboldt, and John Lilliskog, of Thor, whent it was shown that these men were of military age and had been in the draft, but that they had escaped military service by pleading their lack of citizenship. Judge Deland made himself very plain on the subject. He felt that a man who would not fight for the United States had no right to be a citizen of the United States. So far as he was concerned he will not make citizens of men who want our benefits but wish to avoid our responsibilities. And so far as the Judge is concerned, these men will never become citizens of the United States."

MEMBER IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
S. U. Leinbach, Pastor

The Ladies Missionary Society will hold their first meeting of the year on next Thursday afternoon at 2:30 Let every member and friend be present. The regular services will be hld next Sunday.

The following article on Going to Church was printed in the Country Gentleman in the issue of Jan. 15, which is well worth the consderation of all:

"Even in dollars and cents a person who attends church is better off than he otherwise would be, for worship quickens those great business virtues—honesty, industry, and thrift.

Church attendance promotes good health and length of life, for it is not work but worry that kills, and yielding the mind and heart to the Most High drives out worry and brings peace.

From an intellectual and cultural point of view he who loafs or visits or motors all day Sunday is vastly poorer than he need be. At church the great hymns of the ages are sung, the Book of Books is read and interpreted, and what Daniel Webster said was the greatest thought which ever filled his mind, man's accountability to God, is constantly emphasized.

The local church, as some one has suggested, is a branch office of the greatest enterprise in the world, which has a host of representatives in every land, which promotes education all over the globe, heals the sick of every clime, seeks to build up a universal human brotherhood and is the greatest single influence for world peace. How narrow is the man who refuses to take an active part in the attempt of the church to make over the world according to the principles of the Supreme Teacher!

Go to church and you will be reminded of the things that are really worth while, you will become a part of the highest and largest of fellowships, the cobwebs will be brushed away from the walls of the chamber of conscience, faded ideals will be brightened up as parched fields by a shower, and religion will become an actual experience of companionship with a heavenly Father who is supremely made real in the Man of Galilee, in whose service there is completest freedom and fullest joy."—
J. Elmer Russell.

The more you meditate upon these great truths the more you will see that they have not been overstated. The more you attend church the more you will see that the church does the things mentioned.

Start in to church next Sunday and let it become a habit of your life. It will be a habit of which you will never have to make an apology for and which will never be a handicap to in any way but will always be a help.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.
Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.
Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m.

There was a fine attendance at the services last Sunday. If you are with out a church home you will find a welcome at every service of the church. Plan to be present next Sunday.

M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL

The attendance of the Sunday school of the M. E. church last Sunday 130 with a collection of $6.14. The secretary gave a very fine report giving the members of the Sunday school the average attendance of the year of 1920. The average for the whole year was 102. The average for the month of January this year so far has been 115. For the quarter October to December 31, was 107. The attendance just a year ago, January 25, 1920, was 82. It is the earnest desire of the Sunday school and the officers to keep the attendance every Sunday above the 100 mark. There are classes open to all ages, men, women and children, even the little tots, so parents, it is up to you to see that he kiddies are here, and you kiddies that come, bring your parents with you. Watch this report every week.

Secretary.

"Go and Get It"

A First National Production

No more appropriate title could be given a play dealing with the perils and excitement of a newspaper reporter's life than "go and get it." And this is just the one that Marshall Neilan has given his newest big photoplay.

When a mysterious crime has been committed and the entire city is on its toes for he solution—when riots and bloodshed are raging—when great strikes are pending—it is then that the reporter is called to the city edior's desk and told to "go and get it." And—the chances are one hundred to one—he'll get it. He may be the worse for wear upon his return but he'll have the story.

And such is the case in the new Neilan picture—Kirk Connelly is told of a series of most mysterious crimes and told to get the story. After a lot of the most fascinating and exciting adventures Connelly not only returns with the story, but he gets the beautiful mystery giirl as well. It's SOME picture!

COMING BACK

YES, he deserves a lot of credit; it is mighty hard to "come back."

We hear this remark frequently. What is meant by coming back?

Simply not losing your grit. It takes a mountain of grit to succeed and those that succeed have it.

It does not take much grit to start a savings account. but it takes some to keep it.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

They were slipping along over the pine needles, their eyes intent on the trail ahead. And then Lennox saw a curious thing. He beheld Dan suddenly stop in the trail and turn his eyes toward a heavy thicket that lay perhaps one hundred yards to their right. For an instant he looked almost like a wild creature himself. His head was lowered, as if he were listening. His muscles were set and ready.

Lennox had prided himself that he had retained all the powers of his five senses, and that few men in the mountains had keener ears than he. Yet it was truth that at first he only knew the silence, and the stir and pulse of his own blood. He assumed then that Dan was watching something that from his position, twenty feet behind, he could not see. He tried to probe the thickets with his eyes.

Then Dan whispered. Ever so soft a sound, but yet distinct in the si-

"There's Something Living in That Thicket."

lence. "There's something living in that thicket."

Then Lennox heard it, too. As they stood still, the sound became ever clearer and more pronounced. Some living creature was advancing toward them; and twigs were cracking beneath its feet. The sounds were rather subdued, and yet, as the animal approached, both of them instinctively knew that they were extremely loud for the usual footsteps of any of the wild creatures.

"What is it?" Dan asked quietly.

Lennox was so intrigued by the sounds that he was not even observant of the peculiar, subdued quality in Dan's voice. Otherwise, he would have wondered at it. "I'm free to confess I don't know," he said. "It's booming right toward us, like most animals don't care to do. Of course it may be a human being. You must watch out for that."

They waited. The sound ended. They stood straining for a long moment without speech.

"That was the dumdest thing!" Lennox went on. "Of course it might have been a bear—you never know what they're going to do. It might have got sight of us and turned off. But I can't believe that it was just a deer—"

But then his words chopped squarely off in his throat. The plodding advance commenced again. And the next instant a gray form revealed itself at the edge of the thicket.

It was Graycoat the coyote, half-blind with his madness, and desperate in his agony.

There was no more deadly thing in all the hills than he. Even the bite of a rattlesnake would have been welcomed beside his. He stood a long instant, and all his instincts and reflexes that would have ordinarily made him flee in abject terror were thwarted and twisted by the fever of his madness. He stared a moment at the two figures, and his red eyes could not interpret them. They were simply foes, for it was true that when this racking agony was upon him, even lifeless trees seemed foes sometimes. He seemed eerie and unreal as he gazed at them out of his burning eyes; and the white foam gathered at his fangs. And then, wholly without warning, he charged down at them.

He came with unbelievable speed. The elder Lennox cried once in warning and cursed himself for venturing forth on the ridge without a gun. He was fully twenty feet distant from Dan; yet he saw in an instant his only course. This was no time to trust their lives to the marksmanship of an amateur. He sprang toward Dan, intending to wrench the weapon from his hand.

But he didn't achieve his purpose. At the first step his foot caught in a projecting root, and he was shot to his face on the trail. But a long life in the wilderness had developed Lennox's reflexes to an abnormal degree; many crises had taught him muscle and nerve control; and only for a fraction of an instant, a period of time that few instruments are fine enough to measure, did he lie supinely upon the ground. He rolled on, into a position of defense. But he knew now he could not reach the younger man before the mad coyote would be upon them. The matter was out of his hands. Everything depended on the aim and self-control of the tenderfoot.

He looked up, and the whole weird picture was thrown upon the retina of his eyes. The coyote was still racing straight toward Dan, a gray demon that in his madness was more terrible than any charging bear or elk. For there is an element of horror about the insane, whether beasts or men, that cannot be denied. Both men felt it, with a chill that seemed to penetrate clear to their hearts. The eyes flamed, the white fangs of Graycoat caught the sunlight. And Dan stood erect in his path, his rifle half raised to his shoulder; and even in that first frenzied instant in which Lennox looked at him, he saw there was a strange impassiveness, a singular imperturbability on his face.

"Shoot, man!" Lennox shouted. "What are you waiting for?"

But Dan didn't shoot. His hand whipped to his face, and he snatched off his thick-lensed glasses. The eyes that were revealed were narrow and deeply intent. And by now, the frenzied coyote was not fifty feet distant.

All that had occurred since the animal charged had possibly taken five seconds. Sometimes five seconds is just a breath; but as Lennox waited for Dan to shoot, it seemed like a period wholly without limit. He wondered if the younger man had fallen into that strange paralysis that a great terror sometimes imbues. "Shoot!" he screamed again.

But it is doubtful if Dan even heard his shout. At that instant his gun slid into place, his head lowered, his eyes seemed to burn along the glittering barrel. His finger pressed back against the trigger, and the roar of the report rocked through the summer air.

The gun was of large caliber; and no living creature could stand against the furious, shocking power of the great bullet. The lead went straight home, full through the neck and slanting down through the breast, and the coyote recoiled as if an irresistible hand had smitten him. It is doubtful if there was even a muscular quiver after Graycoat struck the ground, not twenty feet from where Dan stood. And the rifle report echoed back to find only silence.

Lennox got up off the ground and moved over toward the dead coyote. He looked a long time at the gray body. And then he stepped back to where Dan waited on the trail.

"I take it all back," he said simply.

"You take what back?"

"What I thought about you—that the Failing line had gone to the dogs. I'll never call you a tenderfoot again. But tell me one thing. I saw the way you looked down the barrel. I could see how firm you held the rifle—the way you kept your head. And that is all like your grandfather. But why, when you had a repeating rifle, did you wait so long to shoot?"

"I just had one cartridge in my gun. I didn't think of it until the coyote charged."

Lennox's answer was the last thing in the world to be expected. He opened his straight mouth and uttered a great, boyish yell of joy. His eyes seemed to light. The eyes of the two men met, and Lennox shook him by the shoulder.

"You're not Dan Failing's grandson—you're Dan Failing himself!" he shouted. "No one but him would have had self-control to wait till the game was almost on top of him—no one but him would have kept his head in a time like this. You're Dan Failing himself, I tell you, come back to earth. Grandson nothing! You're a throwback, and now you've got those glasses off, I can see his eyes looking right out of yours. Step on 'em Dan. You'll never need 'em again. And give up that idea of dying in four months right now; I'm going to make you live. We'll fight that disease to a finish—and win!"

And that is the way that Dan Failing came into his heritage in the land of his own people, and in which a new spirit was born in him to fight—and win—and live.

BOOK TWO

The Debt.

CHAPTER I.

September was at its last days on the Umpqua divide—that far wilderness of endless, tree-clad ridges where Dan Failing had gone for his last days. Everywhere the forest people were preparing for the winter that would fall so quickly when these golden September days were done. The Under Plane of the forest—those smaller peoples that live in the dust and have beautiful, tropical forests in the ferns—found themselves digging holes and filling them with stores of food. Of course they had no idea on earth why they were doing it, except that a quiver at the end of their tails told them to do so; but the result was entirely the same. They would have a shelter for the winter.

But the most noticeable change of all, in these days of summer, was a distinct tone of sadness that sounded throughout the forest. Of course the wilderness note is always somewhat sad; but now, as the leaves fell and the grasses died, it seemed particularly pronounced. All the forest voices added to it—the wail of the geese, the sad fluttering of fallen leaves, and even the whisper of the north wind. Of course all the tones and voices of the wilderness sound clearest at night—for that is the time that the forest really comes to life—and Dan Failing, sitting in front of Lennox's house, watching the late September moon rise over Bald mountain, could hear them very plainly.

It was true that in the two months he had spent in the mountains he had learned to be very receptive to the voices of the wilderness. Lennox had not been mistaken in thinking him a natural woodsman. He had imagination and insight and sympathy; but most of all he had a heritage of woodlore from his frontiersmen ancestors. Two months before he had been a resident of cities. Now the wilderness had claimed him, body and soul.

These had been rare days. At first he had to limit his expeditions to a few miles each day, and even then he would come in at night staggering from weariness. He climbed hills that seemed to tear his diseased lungs to shreds. Lennox wouldn't have been afraid, in a crisis, to trust his marksmanship now. He had the natural cold nerve of a marksman, and one twilight he brought the body of a lynx tumbling through the branches of a pine at a distance of two hundred yards. He got so he could shatter a grouse out of the air in the half of a second or so in which its bronze wings glinted in the shrubbery; and when a man may do this a fair number of times out of ten he is on the straight road toward greatness.

Then there came a day when Dan caught his first steelhead in the North Fork. There is no more beautiful thing in the wilderness world than a steelhead trout in action. He simply seems to dance on the surface of the water, leaping again and again, and racing at an unheard-of speed down the ripples. He weighs only from three to fifteen pounds. But now and again amateur fishermen without souls have tried to pull him in with main strength, and are still somewhat dazed by the result. It might be done with a steel cable, but an ordinary line or leader breaks like a cobweb. When his majesty the steelhead takes the fly and decides to run, it can be learned after a time that the one thing that may be done is to let out all the line and with prayer and humbleness try to keep up with him.

Dan no longer wore his glasses. Every day his eyes had strengthened. He could see more clearly now, with his unaided eyes, than he had ever seen before with the help of the lens. And the moonlight came down through a rift in the trees and showed that his face had changed, too. It was no longer so white. The eyes were more intent. The lips were straighter.

"It's been two months," Silas Lennox told him, "half the four that you gave yourself after you arrived here. And you're twice as good now as when you came."

Dan nodded. "Twice! Ten times as good! I was a wreck when I came. Today I climbed halfway up Baldy—within a half mile of Snowbird's cabin—without stopping to rest."

Lennox looked thoughtful. More than once, of late, Dan had climbed up toward Snowbird's cabin. It was true that his guest and his daughter had become the best of companions in the two months; but on second thought, Lennox was not in the least afraid of complications. The love of the mountain women does not go out to physical inferiors. "Whoever gets her," he had said, "will have to tame her," and his words still held good. The mountain women rarely mistook a maternal tenderness for an appealing man for love. It wasn't that Dan was weak except from the ravages of his disease; but he was still a long way from Snowbird's ideal. Although Dan had courage and that same rigid self-control that was an old quality in his breed, he was still a long way from a physically strong man. It was still an even break whether he would ever wholly recover from his malady.

But Dan was not thinking about this now. All his perceptions had sharpened down to the finest focal point, and he was trying to catch the spirit of the endless forest that stretched in front of the house. His pipe had gone out, and for a long time Lennox hadn't spoken. He seemed to be straining too, with ineffective senses, trying to recognize and name the faint sounds that came so tingling and tremulous out of the darkness. As always, they heard the stir and rustle of the gnawing people; the chipmunks in the shrubbery, the gophers who, like blind misers, had ventured forth from their dark burrows; and perhaps even the scaly glide of those most-dreaded poison people that had lairs in the rock piles.

Dan felt that at last the wilderness itself was speaking to him. He had waited a long time to hear its voice. His thought went back to the wise men of the ancient world, waiting to hear the riddle of the universe from the lips of the Sphinx, and how he himself—more in his unconscious self, rather than conscious—had sought the eternal riddle of the wilderness. He had asked questions—never in the form of words but only ineffable yearnings of his soul—and at last it had responded. The strange rising and falling song was its own voice, the articulation of the very heart and soul of the wilderness.

"It's the wolf pack," Lennox told him softly. "The wolves have just joined together for the fall rutting."

"Then this means the end of the summer?" Dan asked.

"In a way, but yet we don't count the summer ended until the rains break. Heavens, I wish they would start! I've never seen the hills so dry, and I'm afraid that either Bert Cranston or some of his friends will decide it's time to make a little money fighting forest fires. Dan, I'm suspicious of that gang. I believe they've got a regular arson ring, maybe with unscrupulous stockmen behind them, and perhaps just a penny-winning deal of their own. I suppose you know about Landy Hildreth—how he's promised to turn state's evidence that will send about a dozen of these vipers to the penitentiary?"

"Dan, I'm Suspicious of That Gang."

"Snowbird told me something about it."

"He's got a cabin over toward the marshes, and it has come to me that he's going to start tomorrow, or maybe has already started today, down into the valley to give his evidence. Of course, that is deeply confidential between you and me. If the gang knew about it, he'd never get through the thickets alive."

But Dan was hardly listening. His attention was caught by the hushed, intermittent sounds that are always to be heard, if one listens keenly enough, in the wilderness at night. "I wish the pack would sound again," he said. "I suppose it was hunting."

"Of course. And there is no living thing in these woods that can stand against a wolf pack in its full strength."

"Except man, of course."

"A strong man, with an accurate rifle, of course, and except possibly in the starving times in winter he'd never have to fight them. All the beasts of prey are out tonight. You see, Dan, when the moon shines, the deer feed at night instead of in the twilights and the dawn. And of course the wolves and the cougars hunt the deer. It may be that they are running cattle, or even sheep."

But Dan's imagination was afire. He wasn't content yet. "They couldn't be—hunting man?" he asked.

"No. If it was midwinter and the pack was starving, we'd have to listen better. It always looked to me as if the wild creatures had a law against killing men, just as humans have. They've learned it doesn't pay—something the wolves and bears of Europe and Asia haven't found out. The naturalists say that the reason is rather simple—that the European peasant, his soul scared out of him by the government he lived under, has always fled from wild beasts. They were tillers of the soil, and they carried hoes instead of guns. They never put the fear of God into the animals and as a result there are quite a number of true stories about tigers and wolves that aren't pleasant to listen to. But our own frontiersmen were not men to stand any nonsense from wolves or cougars. They had guns, and they knew how to use them. And they were preceded by as brave and as warlike a race as ever lived on the earth—armed with bows and arrows. Any animal that hunted men was immediately killed, and the rest found out it didn't pay.

"Just as human beings have found out the same thing—that it doesn't pay to hunt their fellow men. The laws of life as well as the laws of nations are against it."

But the words sounded weak and dim under the weight of the throbbing darkness; and Dan couldn't get away from the idea that the codes of life by which most men lived were forgotten quickly in the shadows of the pines. Even as he spoke, man was hunting man on the distant ridge where Whisperfoot the cougar had howled.

* * * * * * * *

Bert Cranston, head of the arson ring that operated on the Umpqua divide, was not only beyond the pale in regard to the laws of the valleys, but he could have learned valuable lessons from the beasts in regard to keeping the laws of the hills. The moon looked down to find him waiting on a certain trail that wound down to the settlements, his rifle loaded and ready for another kind of game than deer or wolf. He was waiting for Landy Hildreth; and the greeting he had for him was to destroy all chances of the prosecuting attorney in the valley below learning certain names that he particularly wanted to know.

There was no breath of wind. The great pines, tall and dark past belief, stood absolutely motionless, like strange pillars of ebony. Bert Cranston knelt in a brush covert, his rifle loaded and ready in his lean, dark hands.

No wolf that ran the ridges, no cougar that waited on the deer trails knew a wilder passion, a more terrible blood-lust than he. It showed in his eyes, narrow and never resting from their watch of the trail; it was in his posture; and it revealed itself unmistakably in the curl of his lips. Something like hot steam was in his brain, blurring his sight and heating his blood.

The pine needles hung wholly motionless above his head; but yet the dead leaves on which he knelt crinkled and rustled under him. Only the keenest ear could have heard the sound; and possibly in his madness, Cranston himself was not aware of it. And one would have wondered a long time as to what caused it. It was simply that he was shivering all over with hate and fury.

A twig cracked, far on the ridge above him. He leaned forward, peering, and the moonlight showed his face in unsparing detail. It revealed the deep lines, the terrible, drawn lips, the ugly hair long over the dark ears. His strong hands tightened upon the breech of the rifle. His wiry figure grew tense.

Of course it wouldn't do to let his prey come too close. Landy Hildreth was a good shot too, young as Cranston, and of equal strength; and no sporting chance could be taken in this hunting. Cranston had no intention of giving his enemy even the slightest chance to defend himself. If Hildreth got down into the valley, his testimony would make short work of the arson ring. He had the goods; he had been a member of the disreputable crowd himself.

The man's steps were quite distinct by now. Cranston heard him fighting his way through the brush thickets, and once a flock of grouse, frightened from their perches by the approaching figure, flew down the trail in front. Cranston pressed back the hammer of his rifle. The click sounded loud in the silence. He had grown tense and still, and the leaves no longer rustled.

His eyes were intent on a little clearing, possibly one hundred yards up the trail. The trail itself went straight through it. And in an instant more, Hildreth pushed through the buckbrush and stood revealed in the moonlight.

If there is one quality that means success in the mountains it is constant, unceasing self-control. Cranston thought that he had it. But perhaps he had waited too long for Hildreth to come; and the strain had told on him. He had sworn to take no false steps; that every motion he made should be cool and sure. He didn't want to attract Hildreth's attention by any sudden movement. All must be cautious and stealthy. But in spite of all these good resolutions, Cranston's gun simply leaped to his shoulder in one convulsive motion at the first glimpse of his enemy as he emerged into the moonlight.

The end of the barrel struck a branch of the shrubbery as it went up. It was only a soft sound; but in the utter silence it traveled far. The gun barrel caught the moonlight as it leaped, and Hildreth saw its glint in the darkness.

He was looking for trouble. He had dreaded this long walk to the settlements more than any experience of his life. He didn't know why the letter he had written, asking for an armed escort down to the courts, had not brought results. But it was wholly possible that Cranston would have answered this question for him. This same letter had fallen into a certain soiled, deadly pair of hands which was the last place in the world that Hildreth would have chosen, and it had been all the evidence that was needed, at the meeting of the ring the night before, to adjudge Hildreth a merciless and immediate end. Hildreth would have preferred to wait in the hills and possibly to write another letter, but a chill that kept growing at his finger tips forbade it. And all these things combined to stretch his nerves almost to the breaking point as he stole along the moonlit trail under the pines.

A moment before the rush and whir of the grouse flock had dried the roof of his mouth with terror. The tall trees appalled him, the shadows fell upon his spirit. And when he heard this final sound, when he saw the glint that might so easily have been a gun-barrel, his nerves and muscles reacted at once. Not even a fraction of a second intervened. His gun flashed up and a little, angry cylinder of flame darted, as a snake's head darts, from the muzzle.

Hildreth didn't take aim. There wasn't time. The report roared in the darkness; the bullet sang harmlessly and thudded into the earth; and both of them were the last things in the world that Cranston had expected. And they were not a moment too soon. Even at that instant, his finger was closing down upon the trigger, Hildreth standing clear and revealed through the sights. The nervous response that few men in the world would be self-disciplined enough to prevent occurred at the same instant that he pressed the trigger. His own fire answered, so near to the other that both of them sounded as one report.

Most hunters can usually tell, even if they cannot see their game fall, whether they have hit or missed. This was one of the few times in his life that Cranston could not have told. He knew that as his finger pressed he had held as accurate a "bead" as at any time in his life. He did not know still another circumstance—that in the moonlight he had overestimated the distance to the clearing, and instead of one hundred yards it was scarcely fifty. He had held rather high. And he looked up, unknowing whether he had succeeded or whether he was face to face with the prospect of a duel to the death in the darkness.

And all he saw was Hildreth, rocking back and forth in the moonlight—a strange picture that he was never entirely to forget. It was a motion that no man could pretend. And he knew he had not missed.

He waited till he saw the form of his enemy rock down, face half-buried in the pine needles. It never even occurred to him to approach to see if he had made a clean kill. He had held on the breast and he had a world of confidence in his great, shocking, big-game rifle. Besides, the rifle fire might attract some hunter in the hills; and there would be time in the morning to return to the body and make certain little investigations that he had in mind. And running back down the trail, he missed the sight of Hildreth dragging his wounded body, like an injured hare, into the shelter of the thickets.

ROWAN

D. W. WHITTEN

Daniel Whitten was born at Clayton, Ont., Canada, Feb. 21, 1846, and died at Long Beach, California, on Jan. 11, 1921, at the age of 74 years, 10 months and 20 days. In 1866 he went to Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in lumbering and worked on the river, and then in 1875 he came to Wright county, Iowa, and settled on a farm near Rowan.

He became engaged to Miss Mina Brandes whom he married on Jan. 27, 1875, and to this union were born eight children, H. J., D. W., and G. W., all of Rowan; Elsie Ramsey and Lula M. Brinkman, of Latimer, Iowa; Andrew who was killed in the late war; and John and Fred who died in infancy.

On Dec. 19, 1898 his wife died. He continued to operate his farm for a few years with his family, and then he was united in second marriage on April 4, 1900, to Hannah Baines of Dows. He remained on the farm until 1903 and then retired to Rowan where he resided until the time of his death. Until about three years ago he was strong and well, and then he contracted pneumonia, this hastened his death which was the result of heart disease.

Mr. Whitten is survived by three brothers and two sisters, Norman of Winnepeg, James of Bloomfield, Ont; George of Rowan, Elizabeth Klazer of Toronto, and Mary Mathers of Mt. Forest, Ont. These are the only members of a large family of twelve that are still living. He leaves also a wife, three sons, two daughters, one stepdaughter, Angie Baines, and little Laurel who has been with them since infancy.

Bro. Dan Whitten was converted about thirty years ago and five years later experienced the blessing of holiness. He was one of the pioneers of church work in Rowan and was connected with the two churches, Congregational and Methodist Episcopal. He served in the capacity of Sunday school superintendent and before he held that position he had a fine class of boys to whom he greatly endeared himself. It was his express wish many years ago that the members of his Sunday school class be his pall bearers.

Tho his death had been anticipated for some time by those who knew him best, yet when the news came of his passing away, it was a great shock to all. For the last five years he has spent the winter in California and when the time came for his departure in November, it was thought that he would not be able to make the journey; but he finally decided to go in the hope that his health might be improved. But his Heavenly Father saw fit to translate him to that haven of rest where the saints and the spirits of just men and women made perfect forever dwell.

His holy life, his consecrated service, his christian piety, his noble example will be to those with whom he came into contact be an inspiration and incentive.

The funeral services were held from the old home and the M. E. church and were conducted by he Rev. Harold Tomkinson. The town quartette comprised of Mrs. A. O. Pelly, Frances Farren, William Rietz and Howard Box rendered selections suitable to the ocassion. Every part of the church was full of friends who had gathered to pay their respect to the memory of a good christian man. Mr. Tomkinson paid touching tribute to the deceased, having been closely connected with him in church work. The address was based on the words: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished the course. I have kept the faith," which the pastor fitted most beautifully to the experience of Brother Daniel Whitten.

CARD OF THANKS

To the American Legion, the different church organizations, the business men of Rowan and the friends who so kindly assisted us in our late bereavement and for the beautiful floral offerings and the choir for the comforting songs rendered, we wish to extend our sincerest thanks.

Mrs. Dan Whitten and family.

BIRTHDAY DINNER

Mrs. Leanard McCallum entertained at a two-course dinner Tuesday night in honor of her birthday and also the birthday of Mrs. O. F. Braden.

MISSION STUDY CLUB MEETS

The young peoples Mission Study Club met Monday night with Laura McCallum as hostess and leader. The new officers were elected for the year as follows: Gladys Whitten, pres; Mary Rowen, vice pres; Thelma Brooks, sec and treas. After the lesson and business meeting were over refreshments were served, which were enjoyed by all present.

Relatives here have received word of a new baby girl at the home of Archie McCallum at Thornton.

ANNUAL MEETING OF BREEDERS ASSOCIATION

The Wright and Franklin Counties Breeders Association held their annual business meeting Monday for the purpose of electing their new officers for the year, and for other business. The following officers were elected:

Board of Directors: Fred Brooks, Tom Ross, Jr., John Akers, Ed. Azeltine, Oscar Meyers, Frank Drury, Joe Patton, Jr. Fred Brooks was elected president and Tom Ross manager, Fred Sheldon treasurer, and Guy Toyne secretary.

LEGION PLANS BOX SOCIAL

The American Legion held their regular meeting Tuesday night. They are planning a box social for Feb. 4th so ladies be thinking about your boxes and come with one well filled and have a good time. A special program will be given before the sale of baskets.

Mr. and Mrs. George Frank and daughter Mildred drove up from Des Moines on Sunday to visit at the F. B. Sheldon home and with other friends.

Mrs. Guy Sheldon went to Clarion Wednesday to spend the day.

Mrs. G. R. Stumph and Mrs. L. W. McCallum were Belmond shoppers on Wednesday.

J. F. Howell was a business caller at Clarion on Friday.

The town basket ball team played the town team of Dows Thursday night at Dows. The score stood 20 to 28 in favor of Dows.

Byron Bailey, wife and children of Colorado are visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Riley. They are moving from Colorado to Oregon.

Carl Steffens, who is in the Presbyterian hospital at Chicago, expects to be operated on Monday. His parents received word last week that he had fallen and hurt his rib which

The Rev. Harold Tomkinson, pastor of the M. E. church, will speak next Sunday morning on "Pigeons Among the Pots," and in the evening on "The Philosphy of Maggie." The relation of Maggie Jiggs to her husband are well known to us all, but you have little idea what the Methodist pastor will have to say on Maggie's disposition.

The Methodist church was comfortably filled last Sunday morning when the pastor spoke on "Humility and Life's tasks."

The body of Dan Whitten arrived from California last Thursday. The out of town guests at the funeral on Saturday were:

Will Baines, Montgomery, Iowa; J. T. Baines, Montgomery; J. A. Baines, Spirit Lake; Mr. and Mrs. Burrows and son, Dows; Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Baines, Dows; Mrs. G. C. Tutin, Arnott, S. D; Mr. and Mrs. Milt Ramsey and family, Latimer; Mr. and Mrs. Harm Brinkman, Latimer; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Whitten, Thornton; Ralph Whitten, Grinell; Mrs. Anton Hospasks, and daughter, Clarion; C. L. Hall, Clarion; and Mrs. Roy Fitz, Clarion.

Make your home news interesting. Telephone your news items to No. 62.

Fred Hackley, F. M. Meyers, Cecil Harris, Frank Snyder, Wayne Boyington, Harold Virden and Fred Brooks drove to Des Moines and back Tuesday. They say the roads were fine most of the way.

S. Altizer came Monday as supply agent at the Rock Island depot while Mr. Ballou is taking his vacation in sunny California.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown returned to their home at Marengo, Iowa, Monday, after a short visit with Mrs. Brown's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Fowler.

John Reiker returned last week from Missouri where he has been the past month.

Mrs. R. L. Robinson who has been ill at Dows since the holidays, was able to come home Monday.

Mrs. Inman of Dows transferred here Friday enroute to Fort Dodge where she was going to help care for her granddaughter, Carol Vennum, who was to have an operation.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ferguson went to Clarion on Friday to spend the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Farmer. Dan Harris is caring for their milk route during their absence.

Mr. and Mrs. Fuller Bailey of Belmond were Rowan callers Saturday night.

On Sunday, January 30, Rev. Ada Anderson will speak on "The Shepherd Psalm." The Junior talk will be on the "Lead Pencil." As this is Christian Endeavor day, the evening service will be in celebration of the forty years of the society. The sermon will be a C. E. anniversary address.

A. C. Retzi is on the sick list since Friday.

Saturday the high school basket ball teams from Hansell came to Rowan to play the high school teams of this place. As they had to come on the morning train the domestic science girls served dinner to them in the basement of the Congregational church. In the afternoon Mr. Williams put on a matinee which was thoroly enjoyed by the Hansell young people as they have no picture show in their town. At night the games were well attended. The Hansell teams won both games, the scores being, girls' game, 24-7, boys', 57-15. The Hansell teams show fine team work and our teams were outclassed by size and weight. This is Rowan's second game this year.

Miss Hazel Azeltine of Dows was visiting her friend, Miss Izetta Fletcher, Thursday and Friday.

Leslie Andrews and his mother, Mrs. Esther Andrews, went to Highmore, South Dakota, Friday where they were called by the sickness of Mrs. Andrews' daughter, Mrs. Jim Smith, formerly of this place.

Mrs. Bert Pierce of Thompson is sick with the measles at the home of her uncle, Sim Stout. She and her husband were there for a visit when she was taken sick. Mrs. Pierce will be remembered as Miss Zetta Stout.

Mrs. Fred Smith was over from Clarion on Friday to visit her mother, Mrs. Snyder, who has not been enjoying very good health the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ormal Gates entertained Friday night at dinner the following guests: Miss Mildred Frank, Mr. Guy Toyne and Mr. and Mrs. Willard McCallum, in honor of their wedding anniversary.

Edward Rietz, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Rietz, is quite sick with broncial asthma.

Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Ballou were not ablt to go to California as they had expected.

Judge Wright excused LaVonne Ballou from jury duty so she could go to California with her parents.

Gilbert, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Rowen, has been very sick with a cold the past week, but is improving now.

Friday night Mr. and Mrs. Claude Jennings entertained the following young people: Lester Smith, Dollie Riely, Cecil Harris, Lottie Williams, Marjorie Brooks, Edgar Mantle, Thelma Brooks, Chet Moellering, Laura McCallum and Jim Burt. After dainty refreshments they were visited by spooks.

Mrs. E. Bingham has been sick the past week with the lagrippe, but is reported better.

Mrs. Dan Fletcher has been visiting at her daughters' Mrs. Chet Conn.

Ed. Brooks and little daughter called on his mother, Mrs. Lizzie Brooks between trains Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Ballou went to Chicago on Thursday to spend the week end with Mrs. Ballou's brother E. J. Lynk.

Mr. and Mrs. Townsan of Belmond spent the week end at the Harris home.

BELMOND SHORT COURSE PROGRAM READY

Some Interesting Items of the Local Schools

Basket Ball Teams Winning And Losing; To Play Mason City And Dows in Near Future.

LAST LECTURE MONDAY NIGHT

The Home Declamatory Contest last Wednesday night was attended by a small, but interested audience. All were very much interested in the judges' decision as the winner of first place in each class will represent our school in the Wright County Declamatory Contest to be held here Februar 25th.

William Chase won first and William Vestweber second in the Oratorical class. Carol Tyrrell first and Nellie Murphy second in the Dramatic class, and Elaine Rierson first and Irving Madsen second in the humorous class.

Wilma Thompson had a severe case of tonsilitis and could not speak.

The judges agreed that it was a very close contest and difficult to decide.

On Friday afternoon just before dismissal the High School had a pep meeting before the Garner games. Olive Butts wrote a very clever little farce, in poetical form, telling of the efforts of Mr. Victory to choose a wife from among many fair candidates for the honor, Miss Clarion, Miss Garner, Miss Corwith, Miss Dows and Miss Rowan. All wanted Mr. Victory, but of course Miss Belmond won him.

Much credit is to be given to the author, to those who took part and Miss Dodd and Miss Sedman, who directed it. We have discovered that we have a great deal of original talent in our high school.

Faher Eardley was up to the pep meeting and gave a very interesting talk.

LAURANT COMPANY

The last and best number of the 1920-21 Lecture Course will be held in the High School Auditorium Monday night, February 7th. Laurant and Company come to us very highly recommended. He has been with the Redpath Bureau for sixteen years and has played many return dates. Laurant carries his own stage settings with him. Remember the date. Monday, February 7th, and come and see if "The Hand Is Quicker Than the Eye." Let's have a capacity house.

Friday night of this week the Boys and Girls Basket Ball teams will go to Garner to uphold Belmond's reputation.

The Garner floor is smaller and there are no out-of-bounds, nevertheless we expect to play the best game of the season and hope to be victorious.

Friday night, February 11th the Boys' basket ball team will play Mason City on the local floor. This promises to be a fast game, and if we don't win, Mason City will know that they have been thru a game. Our teams are improving every week and deserve your patronage. Why not get behind them?

The Girls' baske ball game last Friday night resulted in a defeat for the home players. It was the fastest game the local girls have played. Garner have a clever system of floor placement plays, which they worked most successfully. The score 19 to 4, in their favor, does not show the good playing the local girls did. The third ten minutes of playing gave Garner only one basket.

The Garner school requires every student to take physical training. They are reported to have five girls' teams, from which they choose their players. We go to Garner this Friday and expect a much closer score.

Belmond 15, Garner 8, tells the score of the fastest and cleanest game of basket ball our boys have played this season. Eight men played in the game, and, though but four scored points, it was the work of the rest of the team that made the baskets possible, not star playing on the part of these individuals. Wm. Vestweber though not fully recovered from his bout with the measles, added considerably to our strength in the first half. Everett Parsons, who substituted for Vestweber the second half, also played a good game.

On account of he basket ball teams leaving for Garner on Friday afternoon, the Literary Society will hold its meeting on Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, in the auditorium. The first division will give the program which follows:

Sugar Company Makes Several Changes In Officers

Board Of Directors At Meeting On January 26th Makes Several Changes In Officials.

W. C. TYRRELL NOW PRESIDENT

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Iowa Valley Sugar company held January 26, 1921, W. C. Tyrrell, Jr., of Belmond was elected President of the company and H. J. Klemme of Belmond was elected a director and a member of the Executive Committee, consisting of W. C. Tyrrell, Jr., H. J. Klemme, A. L. Luick and C. T. Fenton. C. T. Fenton was elected vice president and general manager in charge of operations and A. L. Luick was elected secretary and treasurer.

Plans for financing and operating the factory this year were formulated at this meeting. Beet contracts will be made eminently fair to grower and company, price for beets based on price of sugar. Field agents will be put to work writing acreage within a few days and it is expected that a larger acreage than 1920 will be written and a maximum run for the factory provided. 8000 acres is needed for this.

The sugar factory operations have been a big asset to this part of Iowa and everyone is vitally interested in its success.

MRS. ARTHUR O. NELSON

Merle Janette Brooks Nelson, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Brooks, was born October 3, 1899, at the family home near Belmond, and died at her home west of Belmond on Tuesday morning at 12:00 o'clock, January 25, 1921, aged twenty-one years, three months and twenty-two days.

She was a member of the Norwegian Lutheran church, having been baptised and confirmed in that faith. She attended school at Belmond and was a graduate of the class of 1916, after which she taught one year.

On the 25th of December in the year 1917, she was united in marriage to Arthur O. Nelson of Jewell, Iowa, by

Two Of A Kind Bluff Out A Full House

A Late Dinner, A Wrathy Frow, A Full House, Hizzoner, All Figure In The Deal.

AND HIZZONER TAKES THE POT

Usually two of a kind are pretty small spuds in a poker game, but Sunday they proved to be some Murphies and bluffed out a full house.

It happened thus, according to reports:

Dinner was ready. It was more than ready, it was getting stale, and friend wife became peeved because hubby came not. Now she was not of the old fashioned kind who flop in a rocker and warbled "Where Is My Wandering Boy," instead she flopped into a rage and warbled to Hizzoner that an investigation must be conducted.

Accordingly, Marshal Hal Nourse and Nightwatchman Rierson, being two of a kind, were appointed a committee of two.

With stealthy steps they approached the forbidden door. With keen cunning Old Sleuth listened. The door was locked, and from the other side came sounds as of a family gathering, talk of antes, of raisin' the ante, of twins, triplets and of full houses.

Boldly Old Sleuth knocked upon the door. A sudden hush! Then sounds of subdued rustlings, of whispered mutterings and a scraping as of a body dragging on the floor. The door opened!

There was a full house present. That much has come to the public. The details no man knoweth but those who were there, and they sayth not. Suffice it to say, that a thoro investigation was made, the evidence confiscated, and everybody—in sight—rounded up and warned to appear before Hizzoner in the morning.

But they say that when the smoke of batlle had cleared away there came from under the bed a strange and weird sight, with clothes mussed, eyes bulging, hair tousled and dirt on his form from head to foot.

The boy stood on the burning deck
Whence all but him had fled,
Shook from his neck
Of dirt a peck,
And to the air he said:
"Never again!"

Monday, anon or oftener, there appeared before his Hizzoner visitors. Came the great and the small, the short and the tall, all classes, kinds, and conditions.

Some held a flush; some were straigt; some wanted a new deal; some tried to pull a bluff; but Hizzoner stood pat, called their hands and showed a pair against a full house—and took the pot.

One fellow's ante was fifty bucks; others in proportion, until by the fall of night eleven rabbits had been skinned. And they say that the end is not yet!

NEW LEGION OFFICERS

At a meeting of the local Post of the American Legion the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Dr. Geo. Steele ---------- Post Com.
Floyd Bailey -------- Vice Post Com.
Adolph Skovlin -------------- Adj.
Geo. Heginger ------------ Fin Off.
Cato C. Griesy -------- Post Hist.
Jack Finn -------- Athletic Director.

The Legion has in its new set of officers men who are live wires and who will push the post to the position in public life which it deserves and should occupy.

The boys are planning on making things lively in the coming months, and have a hall under advisement where they can hold their meetings and where they can have their good times. It is understood that some dances, a home talent play, and several similar affairs are under consideration for the spring and summer.

It is to be hoped that they make an entire success of their plans, for the American Legion, while already occupying a prominent place in the life of the community, can be much greater and more influential for the betterment of the community and the community life.

LAVERNE JESSE NELSON

Laverne Jesse, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Nelson, died Saturday, January 29, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Hanson in this city. The child was born on July 18, 1919, and was one year, six months and eleven days old at the time of his death. The little one had scratched its thumb with a silver fork and had later had tonsilitis, blood poisoning setting in and the little one only lived a few days after being taken ill. They brought him to the home of Mrs. Nelson's brother, Hans Hanson, for treatment. Funeral services were held at the Hanson home and at the Lutheran church, Rev. Jensen officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have three children left, who wyith them mourn the loss of a baby brother.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Nelson wish to thank all the friends and neighbors wyho wyere so kind to them during the illness and death of their little son, and also the many who sent beautiful floral offerings.

Fred C. Veeder, Old Settler, Dies Suddenly

One Of Belmond's Oldest Settlers Dies Suddenly At Home; Had Been Ill For Some Time.

WELL KNOWN IN THE COUNTY

Fred C. Veeder was born at Belmond, Iowa, June 11, 1872, and died at his home in Belmond, January 26, 1921, at the age of 48 years, 7 months, and 15 days.

Mr. Veeder's family moved with their family from Prairie DuChien, Wis., and located on the farm southeast of Belmond in 1860. They were the parents of 12 children, only two of whom are living. Mrs. Minnie Veeder of Saux Center, Minn., and Mrs. Cora Gray, of Rochester, Minn.

Fred was married to Matilda W. Foss on April 11, 1893. To this union five sons were born, Harry, Joseph, Roy, Glenn and Frederick. Mrs. Veeder died on October 1, 1919.

It fell to Fred's lot to become owner of the home place which he farmed until he moved to town about three years ago. While running the farm he engaged extensively in the cattle business buying and selling hundreds of head. This gave him a wide business acquaintance. His health began to fail about four years ago and after a year he gave up farming and moved to town. While able to be about most of the time he has not enjoyed good health. About a year ago he had a long spell of sickness from which it was thought for a time that he could not recover, but his strong constitution was able to fight death off for a season. This winter he has been able to be about most of the time and the day before his death he returned from a trip to Fort Dodge. On Wednesday he was not feeling very well and did not get up. No one thought the end was near, but at 5:30 the summons came and he departed out of this life.

His life from a boy was spent in this community. He was a true friend and had a big heart that was ever ready to help anyone in need. It was the writer's privilege to have known him since a boy, having been members of the same Sunday school class in the old Congregational church of Belmond.

The funeral services were held in

The Chamber of Cemmerce of the city of Belmond, in co-operation with the Farm Bureau will stage a two-day short course at Belmond on Thursday and Friday, February 10 and 11.

Arrangements are being made by each of the five townships taking part to prepare a booth for the home exhibits in cooking, canning, and sewing by the ladies and all who wish to enter products for this exhibit are urged to notify their lady township chairman. A prize will be awarded the township having the best display of home products by the ladies. Five townships will be represented, and the competition will undoubtedly be quite keen.

Exhibits will also be held of corn, oats, potatoes, and sugar beets. Single ear and ten ear samples ot yellow and white corn, peck samples of early and late oats, peck samples of barley, peck samples of potatoes and single and ten beet samples will be displayed at the farm crops exhibit. The following classes in livestock (any breed) will be held:

Mares over three years old; mares under three years old; geldings over three years; geldings under three years; boars over one year old; boars under one year old; cows over two years and cows under two years old; bulls under two years and bulls over three years old; sows over one year old and sows under one year old; hens one year or over (pen of three.)

The lady chairman and the man chairman in each township represented in the short course is asked to be responsible for holding a township meeting to make arrangements for the exhibits in home products, farm crops and livestock from his or her respective township and to take subscriptions for the premiums.

The premium list for all exhibits will be published in next week's issue of the papers, and will be based upon the combined amounts of money contributed by the farmers of the five townships and the business men of Belmond.

The program as here shown will be followed in the main altho there may be a few additions which will be added in next week's issue of the county papers.

Ladies Division of the Short Course

The housekeeper who says, "This is our fair and I must do my part toward making it a success," understands the real purpose of the exhibit. She knows that its success depends upon the generous co-operation, good fellowship and friendly spirit of contest that is shown by the housekeepers.

If the household exhibit in this shor t course is not larger and better than at any preceeding time, the only logical conclusion is that the housekeepers fail to look upon the exhibit as a means of education.

It is the chief purpose of all contests to create a greater desire for improvements, thru the recognition of defects, the recognition of higher ideals, the recognition of better meth ods.

The following rules must be observed in making entries:

1—All entries must be entered in the name of the maker.
2—Articles may not have been entered in any other exhibit.
3—Only one entry can be made in each class.
4—Name of owner may not be placed on any article.
5—Articles having no competition will not receive prize unless worthy.
6—The judge will not award prize to any article unless worthy.
7—All needlework will be judged with regard to beauty, degree of perfection, amount of work and suitability for the purpose for which it is intended.
8—All canned goods must be labeled.

Community Welfare Club Making Many Advances

Splendid Meeting Of Belmond's Most Progressive Club Much Enjoyed By Large Attendance.

MAKING MANY IMPROVEMENTS

The Community Club held a very interesting meeting last Friday. There was much business to attend to and Mrs. W. R. Ramsay acting as chairman, handled the many questions in a most efficient manner.

A bronze tablet in honor of the boys who died in the World War will be placed on a boulder on the city hall grounds. The tablet has arrived and is very beautiful. The names of the boys are engraved on the tablet.

The club has decided to purchase more play ground equipment. The lying rings were chosen.

Two concrete benches and one concrete table will be built in the park next spring. A few shrubs will be planted on the city hall grounds. The plan to plant shrubrey on the school grounds was placed on the table for further discussion.

Mrs. Rosecrans had charge of the program which was on Modern Philanthropists.

Mrs. C. O. Fitts sang "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," which was very appropriate. The program was enjoyed very much by everyone. And for once, considering he is now in Honolula, the name of Belmond's Philanthropist was spoken out loud.

Refreshments were served by the committee and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed.

WOMAN BUYS AUTO; FAILS TO RECORD IT; ARRESTED

Charged with violation of the state law governing licensing and regulation of motor vehicles, Mrs. Mabel Blessing, former Muscatine woman, was indicted by the grand jury of Scott county. Her bonds were fixed at $1,000.

Mrs. Blessing is the first woman in Iowa to be tried under this charge. The case is also the first one of this nature to rise in this part of Iowa.

The young woman was arrested for failing to record a transfer of ownership as provided by law, after purchasing a second hand automobile.

SUGAR BEET GROWERS OF WRIGHT COUNTY TO MEET

All sugar beet growers of Wright county are urged to be at the sugar beet meeting which will be held at the court house in Clarion Saturday the 5th at 1:30. The purpose of the meeting is to organize a county association of beet growers and to elect officers for the same.

It will be remembered that the northwest Iowa district conference was held recently at Mason City for the puprose of perfecting a sugar beet growers association for northwest Iowa. It is hoped that all Wright county farmers who are interested in producing sugar beets will attend this meeting Saturday and assist in organizing an association in Wrght county in order that our home county may be in a position to cooperate with the other counties in the northwest Iowa association.

FARM MANAGEMENT SHORT COURSE FEBRUARY 7 & 8

John C. Galloway, from the farm management section of the Extension Staff will conduct a short course in farm management thruout Wright county on February 7 and 8.

The purpose of these short courses will be to give the farmers instructions in keeping accurate records of all farm operations and for special instruction in method of transferring from the cash basis to the inventory basis of keeping records for income tax returns.

Farmers who make a practice of keeping accurate farm records in carrying on their work should plan to hear Mr. Galloway's talk and get his suggestions on keeping farm records. Those who heard Mr. Galloway last year realize the value of his suggestions along this line.

The schedule for holding these farm management short course meetings has been arranged as follows:
Feb. 7, Woolstock town hall, 2 p. m.
Feb. 7, Commercial Club rooms in Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove 7:30 p. m.
Feb. 8, Pleasant township center school, 2 p. m.
Feb. 8, Vernon, center school, 7:30.

IOWA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION ANNUAL CONVENTION

The second annual convention of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation was held at Des Moines on January 5 and 6. The total attendance exceeded 1200 farmers many bringing their wives They came from all parts of the state. It was really larger than was anticipated by those who had the arrangements in charge and this gave the officers great encouragement. Inasmuch as it caused them to feel that the Federation was filling a place at this time whiich is measuring up to the farmer's needs and expectations, and showed to them that he wanted to come and consult with those in charge in order that the activities of the Federation might be so conducted as to meet the present day situation

The delegates and visitors commenced reporting at the headquarters on Tuesday afternoon. A very pleasant evening was spent in registering them and in their visiting together. The committees that were appointed begun their sessions at once, particularly the resolutions committee, and also the committee to amend the Federation constitution.

The opening session was called to order at the auditorium Wednesday morning by President G. W. Hunt of Logan. The audience readily fell into line by the singing together of some community songs of a patriotic nature and some parodies pertaining to Farm Bureau organization work. Mr. Hunt in his opening address reviewed the work of the past year and brought out the plans for the future.

Secretary-Treasurer Cunningham had prepared a lengthy and complete report of his activities during the nine months that he was in charge. An astounding amount of work was brought to the attention of the delegates and members present. While the Federation has done a great many lines of work, perhaps the biggest thing was putting the cause of the farmers of the state in the proper light before the public and establishing its relationship with other associations and organizations. Mr. Cunnngham brought out the point that the great amount of good, inasmuch as it had tided us over a critical financial situation that might have been disastrous if a proper understanding had not been brought about.

The meeting Wednesday afternoon was one that those who attended will remember for some time to come. Mrs. C. W. Sewell of Otterbein, Indiana, brought out vividly in her talk "Keeping up with Father and the Boys," the part that the farm women must play in the Farm Bureau and in the sphere which they occupy. The pleasing and entertaining manner, together with the great amount of good sense which Mrs. Sewell's talk contained has brought unlimited requests for copies of her address from various parts of the state.

County agent leader McDonald gave a very complete report of the program of work which the county Farm Bureaus have conducted this past year.

President L. A. Andrews of the State Bankers' Association deplored the necessity of farmers marketing their crops in two or three months, and declared that properly stored, graded and insured the products could be made a sound basis of credit for short time investments.

The evening program of the first day was one that those who attended considered well worth their trip there. Ex-Congressman A. F. Lever of South Carolina spoke of rural credits, advancing the idea of farmers pooling warehouse receipts under government supervision and issuing short time bonds for sale. He told how the wheat growers of Idaho and Washington are selling a bond issue of this kind at eight percent quite freely.

C. E. Gunnels, assistant secretary of the A. F. B. F, spoke on the National organization and its relationship to the state organizations, and especially urged that Iowa keep its great good work going, as it was undoubtedly the pivotal state in the Federation.

The second day program during the morning begun with a report of C. L. Harlan who told of his investigations as an employee of the Federation and the Corn Belt Meat Producers in Chicago regarding the marketing of live stock. His conclusions were that farmers must be organized in order that they could bring about the correction of many abuses, cause improvements, and hope to succeed in legislative ways. The need of the individual making a sacrifice to the organization and settng aside his own desires and wishes was well brought out in this discussion.

COST OF PRODUCING A BUSHEL OF CORN 90c

The preliminary report on producing corn in three hundred thirty-seven farms in Iowa which were scattered about in seven different representative counties in the work conducted by the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation co-operating with the farm management section of the Iowa Experiment Station has been received.

A very careful lot of work was done by men who were well qualified to do it with the result that the average was 93 cents a bushel. Some of our would-be economists who are sponsoring anything but the farmer's cause might say that this is due to the fact that we have put the land in a very high valuation, but if they will study the figures which we have in the Federation office they will find that the operating costs are over 56 cents per bushel. The land in the 337 farms used in this figuring was valued at $302.00 per acre on the average, and taking the interest rate at five and one-half percent makes the use of the land come to $18.03, which includes the taxes, the latter being considered a land charge. The present prices that are being offered makes it look like the farmer would be lucky to get the cost of the operating expenses, to say nothing about the rent or the use of the land.

TRACTOR SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Clarion and Eagle Grove will hold tractor schools of instruction Thursday and Friday, Feb. 3 and 4, for the purpose of instructing tractor owners and operators in the operation, upkeep and repairing of the different types of tractors.

Clarion tractor dealers have planned to hold the school of instruction at the O'Dea Motor company (Ford) garage, Thursday, Feb. 3, all day. All tractor owners and operators and those interested in tractors are cordially invited to attend this free school of instruction which will be conducted by H. H. Sunderlin, agricultural engineer expert, from the Extension Staff at Ames. All types of tractors which are sold in the vicinity of Clarion will be exhibited on the floor at the school and valuable points of information will be given out by the tractor expert.

Tractor dealers of Eagle Grove have planned to hold the one day school of instruction at the O'Dea Motor company (Ford) garage on Friday, Feb. 4, and farmers who are interested in having any types of tractors explained to them should attend this school and hear what the agricultural engineering expert, Mr. H. H. Sunderlin, has to say in connection with the tractor and its operation.

HOME EQUIPMENT LECTURES

Miss Bertha Holden, assistant state leader, home demonstration agents, will conduct a series of home equipment lectures in Wright county, Feb. 16 and 17.

Farm ladies who are interested in getting hints and suggestions along the line of home equipment should arrange to attend one of the meetings which Miss Holden will put on.

Miss Holden has been in Wright county before on a number of occasions and those who have had the opportunity of hearing her know that she has valuable suggestions on any subject which concerns the home.

The schedule for holding these lectures in the county will be as follows:
Wed. Feb. 16, center school, E. G. twp., 10:00 a. m.
Wed. Feb. 16, Troy church, Troy twp. 2:00 p. m.
Thurs. Feb. 17, center school, Grant twp. 2:00 p. m.

STATE FARM LOAN BANK PROPOSED

The following clipping from the Marshalltown Times-Republican of a recent date will be of interest to all farmers. The proposed bill was the product of A. O. Hauge, representative from Polk county. This is the same gentleman who is president of the First National Bank in Belmond and who is well known by many of the farmers in this viciniy.

The article says:

Representative A. O. Hauge of Polk count, has drafted a bill to be introduced in the house of the Iowa legislature soon which would provide for the creation of a statewide rural credits system to be adminstered by the state.

I would virtually create a state farm loan bank under the direction of a state rural credits bureau of four. The bank would have a capitalization of $650.000 and the state agricultural college endowment fund would be used for this purpose.

The plan, in fact, is much the same as that followed by the South Dakota farm bank, which in one year loaned more than thirty-one million dollars to farmers in South Dakota.

The governor would be president of the rural credits bureau board, the secretary of the state board of education its secretary and the treasurer of state would be its treasurer. The active manager of the board, however, would be a commissioner of rural credits, to be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate and would receive a salary of $5,000 a year.

The board would have the right to issue bonds subject only to the maintainence of a $750.000 surplus above outstanding issues and the usual safeguards on public bond issues by the public.

First mortgages would be issued to secure the loans only after the rural credits commissioner had appraised the land on which the loan was to be placed. The amount of the mortgage could not exceed 50 percent of the value of the farm land as appraised plus 35 per cent of the value of the improvements.

Loans would be made to farmers exclusively and for the following purposes only: First, to buy farm land; second, to buy equipment fertilizer or livestock; third, to erect buildings and improvements; fourth, to liquidate other mortgages.

The bonds would be issued in blocks of $100,000, or more to run twenty years and the profits of the bank, arising from the difference between the bond and mortgage interest rates, would form a reserve fund. The surplus of this fund would go to the credit of the endowment fund of the agricultural college.

PORE OLD DAD

Ye kin sca'ce pick up a paper
An' at its "poets corner greet,
'Cept ye'll see er pirty poem
'Bout the mother, saintly, sweet;
But ye'll have a time, a-say—
Eyes will be er-achin' bad
Ere ye'll overtake er poem
At this time for pore old dad!

No, it isn't willful in 'em—
Them that write of mother dear—
That thar's never notice taken
Of her old man settin' near.
No, it's never meant to slight him,
But hit looks a little sad—
All the bouquets made for mother,
Not a bloom for pore old dad!

True, our mother watched above us
Till her gray old eyes would ache,
But old dad he humped to feed us
Till his back would nearly break.
Mother croonel above the cradle,
Gave devotion, all she had;
Still, that wasn't any circus
At this time for pore old dad!

Do not take one line from mother
When you write the soul's sweet song,
But if thar's a word for father
Now and then it won't be wrong.
Pore old soul! He's bent and wrinkled
An' I know 'twould make him glad
If, while you're praisin' mother,
Something's said for pore old dad!

A Judicious Inquiry

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whooping cought it is unsurpassed.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

SOLE SURVIVOR OF SPIRIT LAKE MASSACRE DIES

Mrs. Abbie Gardner Sharp, sole survivor of the famous Spirit Lake massacre of 1857, died Friday evening at the Colfax sanitarium, at Colfax, Iowa. She was 77 years old. Mrs. Sharp had been a patient at the Colfax institution for the past six months, and had been confined to her bed during the past two months, following a stroke of paralysis which was directly responsible for her death.

Before entering the sanitarium, Mrs. Sharp resided at Arnold's Park, Iowa, where she lived in the original log cabin in which her parents were massacred by the Indians. Thousands of Iowa people have visited the cabin which was kept open to visitors by Mrs. Sharp during the summer months.

Several years ago Mrs. Sharp wrote a book, 'The History of the Spirit Lake Massacre," in which she described the early days of Iowa, the hardships of pioneer life and the Indian wars.

Mrs. Abbie Sharp was born in New York in 1843, and was fourteen years old at the time of the famous Iowa massacre in 1857.

Her father, Rowland Gardner, had migrated west in 1856, building his log cabin finally at what is now Pillsbury's Point, West Okoboji lake. It was at this cabin, which is still standing, that one of the grewsome episodes of the 1857 massacre took place.

There was constant trouble between the Sioux and the Winnebagoes. A neutral zone running north ad south in Iowa had been established to keep he Sioux and their enemies, the Sacs and Foxes, apart. Winnebagoes had been put in possession of this neutral zone.

In March, 1857, a band of fourteen Sioux under Inkpaduta raided the settlers' cabins in the Dickinson county lake region, massacring one family after another. They started their raid at Smithland, but reached the climax at the lakes. Their procedure at the Gardner cabin was typical. Here they entered under pretense of friendliness, but after eating and squabbling awhile they murdered Mr. Gardner and all the others except Abbie. The women were beaten and mangled. Three children, one a baby, were torn from little Abbie and butchered also.

Twenty settlers were killed on the first day at the lakes, March 6, and others later. Four young women, three wives of white settlers and Abbie Gardner, were taken off as captives. They were painted like the reds, forced to braid their hair, given heavy packs to carry, and were treated as slaves.

Voluntary military companies and regulars from Fort Ridgley pursued, and once were almost in touch with Inkpaduta's fleeing band, but no battle occurred.

The flight was west and northwest. Mrs. Thatcher was brutally killed in the Big Sioux river. A brave pushed her into the stream. As she approached first one shore and then the other in her frenzied efforts to escape, she was beaten away with sticks and stones. Finally she was shot. Mrs. Marble was traded to another band of Sioux and eventually found her way back to freedom.

Finally Abbie and Mrs. Noble were sold to a Yankton Sioux, but the remained with Inkpaduta's band and took them along. Mrs. Noble was beaten to death, despite her owner's objections, by Roaring Cloud, a son of Inkpaduta, because she rebelled his overtures.

After Abbie, the only remaining captive, had been taken into a great Yankton village, she was ransomed by friendly Indians who represented the government of Minnesota. Mrs. Marble's escape had led to this successful effort on Abbie's behalf.

STATEMENT OF THE EUROPEAN RELIEF COUNCIL

Wright county is one of only fifteen in the state that has not been definitely organized in the drive to save the lives of starving children in central Europe, and we are taking this method of presenting to the people of this county the needs of all these children whose story has been told during the past few weeks in your county, state and national papers.

Iowa has been asked for one million dollars. Of this, something over one-third has already been pledged, or subscribed and paid.

America has in its warehouses and granaries food for eighteen months. These children are in lands with a five to a seven months' supply on hand, of such food as they have, but lacking the starches and fats necessary to sustain child life.

We appeal to you thru your churches, your schools, your organizations of every kind, co-operating with these newspaper men who are devoting all their space to this cause, to see that your county does her part. If you have no money but have hogs, put one on the market and turn in its return to this cause. A load of grain can be readily turned into cash to save a few babies lives.

Do what you can NOW for the emergencies on us.

Credit is given your county for all money sent no matter thru what channel.

Lafayette Young, Sr., Chairman for Iowa European Relief Council.

TEN DOLLARS SAVES A HUMAN LIFE

The European Relief Council is an emergency organization and when the present need is past will automatically go out of business. The eight organizations, namely the American Friends Service Committee, American Red Cross, American Relief Adminstration, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, were all engaged in relief work in various central European countries—some in relief of students in the colleges as the Y. M. C. A., and Y. W. C. A. and Knights of Columbus, some in hospital work as the Red Cross, some in food relief work as the American Food Adminstration, and others as the Jewish Joint Committee and Freinds Society in general work in particular countries. These organizations were confronted as were all who were engaged in charitable work there with the catastrophe threatening Europe because of the danger to its childhood. With an idea of saving these children all individually and bending every energy toward averting the disaster theatening, they formed the European Relief Council and underwrote the expense of making the appeal to the American people so that every dollar that is raised goes toward saving the life of some starving child. This is the organization that under the chairmanship of Mr. Hoover with the kind of program that administered millions of dollars worth of relief at a cost of three eights of one per cent that is asking you to make possible the saving of lives in central Europe.

HANCOCK COUNTY LETS 10-MILE PAVING CONTRACT

Garner Signal: Hancock county is to have over 10 miles of paved road this season. The contract was let last Friday for the construction of the paving of the road from the county line this side of Ventura to Garner and from the corporation limits of Britt to the town of Hutchins. This is less han half of the amount that was up for letting but Hancock county has already made the most forward step along this line of any county in the state except Cerro Gordo, and it is hoped that at a future letting the balance of the primary road from the east to the west line of the county will be contracted for. The bids were asked for by sections.

We are informed that the board of supervisors will call another letting as soon as they can be assured that bond payments will get as good bids as cash payments. So that it is possible that the other 13 or 14 miles of the North Iowa Pike may yet be contracted for this season.

SPROUTED OATS FOR POULTRY TO MAINTAIN HEALTH

Successful poultrymen everywhere appreciate the necessity for green feed during the winter to maintain the health, vigor and productivity of poultry.

In this climate sprouted oats are equal to the green field crops used in milder climates and are very economical and nutritious. This method of feeding helps to dispose of a greater quantity of a cheap grain which poultry little care for as usually fed.

At present prices of oats the green feed can be produced for less han $8 per ton, a figure that forces out of competition everything but roots, which have, however, only half the food value of the oat sprouts.

A homemade frome with seven racks each about 18 inches square will furnish a continuous supply of green feed for a flock of 300 hens.

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals — makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration — makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly — and have great wearing quality.

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes— oils and greases.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

HARK! A SOUND!

The American Railway Express company appear to have heard a little sound, and are coming to town to see what makes it. At least, that is what they say.

Recently J. S. White, agent for the company at this place, sent them a package by express—we presume—containing the red hot opinions of the Chamber of Commerce, the sugar com pany, several citizens, and the majority of business men from Belmond, on the matter of better service to Belmond via the C. G. W. The company, it is understood, acknowledges receipt of the present, and says that their man will be here sometime and look the field over.

Just as a little reminder, to let the man know Belmond means business, the average business of the American Railway Express company in Belmond in one month comes around two thousand dollars. In 12 months that is close to $25.000 business. Not half bad, for a little town.

And almost deserving of a little service in return.

The logical thing to do with the express business in Belmond is to consolidate the three offices into one, cutting down on the overhead, giving better service, saving money, and in he long run doing a bigger business. This paper is informed that Floyd Dibble will furnish a team, wagon and man for delivery anywhere in the triangle of railroads for $125 a month, which is cheaper than the express company could do it and furnish everything themselves.

At Mason City, when the offices at company cut down on the overhead that place were consolidated, the of the offices about one-third, the work was done by fewer employees and the people got better service.

Belmond is simply plumb tired of the way things are being run here, and if the American Railway Express company wants to maintain and increase their business in this town they have got to give something for the money. Otherwise, there is going to be a greater percentage of goods sent by parcels post and freight from this town.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL

J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Dr. G. H. Meyer of the Board of Foreign Missions, who has made a world trip in the interests of the work of the church abroad, will give an address at the church Thursday, Feb. 3, at 8:00 p. m. There will be no admission charges, offering or subscription taken. Dr. Meyer has recently lectured at a number of cities in Iowa and he is reported to be a speaker of great ability and has a message worth while and timely. Hear him Thursday night!

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m. Two new scholars enrolled last Sunday. Many more ought to enroll and become regular attendants. Start next Sunday.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Epworth League devotonial meeting at 6:30 p. m.

A welcome awaits you at any or all of the services of the church. We believe that if this community needs churches that every man, woman and child in the community ought to be affiliated with the church and its work in some way.

The W. F. M. S. will hold their February meeting at the home of Mrs. Edge, Thursday afternoon. An interesting lesson on India and Burma will be coducted by Mrs. Russell. You are welcome whether a member of the society or not.

M. E. Sunday School

In spite of bad weather and slippery sidewalks the attendance of Sunday school was very good. The attendance for Sunday school Sunday, January 30, was 131. A year ago the attendance was only 74. The average attendance for the month of January 1920 was 104 while the average for January this year was 118. We are very pleased to give a report like this, and it is the earnest desire of the officers to have a report like this every Sunday. Right now we are hampered some by the shortage of teachers, but by next Sunday we trust this can be made up. Remember there are classes for both old and young, men, women, and children. See that your kiddies come out, and better yet, come with the kiddies. You will find a cordial welcome in any of the classes.

S. E. Cretary.

CONGREGATIONAL

Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

We had the largest attendance at Sunday school last Sunday that we have had so far this year. Next Sunday we want to go over the top and we ask that every member of the Sunday school be present with someone else who is not now in Sunday school. There are quite a number of boys and girls who should be enjoying the benefits of our Sunday school who are not now. Let us get them.

We take this means of assuring our city officials that we are behind them in every move that they make for law enforcement. Let the good work go until every den is depopulated and every still destroyed and ever law of the state and ordinance of the town respected.

The services for next Sunday are as follows: Sabbath school at 10:00 o'clock; Morning Worship at 11:00; and the evening services at 7:30. Next Sunday is China Relief Day in all the churches of the United States and at the close of the service in the morning an opportunity witll be given for anyone who desires to contribute to help the starving of China.

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright county
April Term, A. D. 1921.

H. A. Koefed, Plaintiff,
vs
Fred Staehle,
Mrs. Fred Staehle, Defendants.
The Iowa Valley Sugar Company, Inc, Garnishee.

To Fred Staehle and Mrs. Fred Staehle, Defendants:

You are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiff in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright County, claiming of you the sum of sixty-six and eight-one-hundred dollars, as money justly due from you, and interest thereon at six per cent from the sixth day of November, A. D. 1920, for fresh, salt, and smoked meats, together with other merchandise sold and delivered to you during the year of 1920, at your special instance and request, and for the joint use and benefit of your family; that plaintiff has filed his bond asking that a writ of attachment issue against your goods, chattels, credits and property; that said bond has been approved; said writ granted; and the Iowa Valley Sugar Company, Inc., attached as garnishee.

And that unless you appear thereto and defend before noon of the second day of the next term, being the March term of said court, which will commence at Clarion on the fourth day of April A. D. 1921, default will be entered against you and judgement and decree rendered thereon as provided by law.

W. E. Bullard, Attorney for Plaintiff.

"The Six Best Cellars"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Bryant Washburn

She was a leading light in the W. C. T. U. She shouted against booze from the housetops and wept for joy when Prohibition was passed. Yet down in her cellar were ten cases of the rarest wine in existance. Hypocrite? Nope. Just didn't know the secret that her late lamented half-brother had been hiding from her. So she sent for Henry Carpenter, her nephew, and— It's a screamingly funny picture about Prohibition and society.

"John Petticoats"

William S. Hart

When you mention the name Hart, you think at once of the Golden West of former days. He is the foremost delineator of western character parts on the screen today. Reared in North Dakota, Mr. Hart is thoroly familiar with the roles he enacts, and one of the features of his work is his absolute sincerity and true-to-lifeness. He earned considerable reputation on the stage before entering motion pictures and came to the screen a finished actor.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

Whisperfoot, that great coward, came out of his brush-covert when the moon rose. It was not his usual rising time. Ordinarily he found his best hunting in the eerie light of the twilight hour; but for certain reasons, his knowledge of which would be extremely difficult to explain, he let this time go by in slumber. Whisperfoot had slept almost since dawn. It is a significant quality in the felines that they simply cannot keep in condition without hours and hours of sleep. In this matter of sleeping, they are in a direct contrast to the wolves, who seemingly never sleep at all, unless it is with one eye open, and in still greater contrast to the king of all beasts, the elephant, who is said to slumber less per night than that great electrical wizard whom all men know and praise.

The great cat came out yawning, as graceful a thing as treads upon the earth. He was almost nine feet long from the tip of his nose to the end of his tail, and he weighed as much as many a full-grown man. He stood and yawned insolently, for all the forest world to see. He rather hoped that the chipmunk, staring with beady eyes from his doorway, did see him. He would just as soon that Woof's little son, the bear cub, should see him too. But he wasn't so particular about Woof himself, or the wolf pack whose song had just wakened him. And above all things, he wanted to keep out of the sight of men.

For when all things are said and done, there were few bigger cowards in the whole wilderness world than Whisperfoot. A good many people think that Graycoat the coyote could take lessons from him in this respect. But others, knowing how a hunter is brought in occasionally with almost all human resemblance gone from him because a cougar charged in his death agony, think this is unfair to the larger animal. And it is true that a full-grown cougar will sometimes attack horned cattle, something that no American animal cares to do unless he wants a good fight on his paws and of which the very thought would throw Graycoat into a spasm; and there have been even stranger stories, if one could quite believe them. A certain measure of respect must be extended to any animal that will hunt the great bull elk, for to miss the stroke and get caught beneath the churning, lashing, slashing, razor-edged front hoofs is simply death, painful and without delay. But the difficulty lies in the fact that these things are not done in the ordinary, rational blood of hunting. What an animal does in its death agony, or to protect its young, what great game it follows in the starving times of winter, can be put to neither its debit nor its credit. A coyote will charge when mad. A raccoon will put up a wicked fight when cornered. A hen will peck at the hand that robs her nest. When hunting was fairly good, Whisperfoot avoided the elk and steer almost as punctiliously as he avoided men, which is saying very much indeed; and any kind of terrier could usually drive him straight up a tree.

But he did like to pretend to be very great and terrible among the smaller forest creatures. And he was Fear itself to the deer. A human hunter who would kill two deer a week for fifty-two weeks would be called a much uglier name than poacher; but yet this had been Whisperfoot's record, on and off, ever since his second year. Many a great buck wore the scar of the full stroke—after which Whisperfoot had lost his hold. Many a fawn had crouched panting with terror in the thickets at just a tawny light on the gnarled limb of a pine. Many a doe would grow great-eyed and terrified at just his strange, pungent smell on the wind.

He yawned again, and his fangs looked white and abnormally large in the moonlight. His great, green eyes were still clouded and languorous from sleep. Then he began to steal up the ridge toward his hunting grounds. It was a curious thing that he walked straight in the face of the soft wind that came down from the snow fields, and yet there wasn't a weathercock to be seen anywhere. And neither had the chipmunk seen him wet a paw and hold it up, after the approved fashion of holding up a finger. He had a better way of knowing—a chill at the end of his whiskers.

The little, breathless night sounds in the brush around him seemed to madden him. They made a song to him, a strange, wild melody that even such frontiersmen as Dan and Lennox could not experience. A thousand smells brushed down to him on the wind, more potent than any wine or lust. He began to tremble all over with rapture and excitement. But unlike Cranston's trembling, no wilderness ear was keen enough to hear the leaves rustling beneath him.

CHAPTER II.

Shortly after nine o'clock, Whisperfoot encountered his first herd of deer. But they caught his scent and scattered before he could get up to them. He met Woof, grunting through the underbrush, and he punctiliously, but with wretched spirit, left the trail. A fight with Woof the bear was one of the most unpleasant experiences that could be imagined. He had a pair of strong arms of which one embrace of a cougar's body meant death in one long shriek of pain. Of course they didn't fight often. They had entirely opposite interests. The bear was a berry-eater and a honey-grubber, and the cougar cared too much for his own life and beauty to tackle Woof in a hunting way.

A fawn leaped from the thicket in front of him, startled by his sound in the thicket. The truth was, Whisperfoot had made a wholly unjustified misstep on a dry twig, just at the crucial moment. Perhaps it was the fault of Woof, whose presence had driven Whisperfoot from the trail, and perhaps because old age and stiffness was coming upon him. But neither of these facts appeased his anger. He could scarcely suppress a snarl of fury and disappointment.

He continued along the ridge, still stealing, still alert, but his anger increasing with every moment. The fact that he had to leave the trail again to permit still another animal to pass, and a particularly insignificant one too, didn't make him feel any better. This animal had a number of curious stripes along his back, and usually did nothing more desperate than steal eggs and eat bird fledglings. Whisperfoot could have crushed him with one bite, but this was one thing that the great cat, as long as he lived, would never try to do. He got out of the way politely when Stripe-back was still a quarter of a mile away; which was quite a compliment to the little animal's ability to introduce himself. Stripe-back was familiarly known as a skunk.

Shortly after ten, the mountain lion had a remarkably fine chance at a buck. The direction of the wind, the trees, the thickets and the light were all in his favor. It was old Blacktail, wallowing in the salt lick; and Whisperfoot's heart bounded when he detected him. No human hunter could have laid his plans with greater care. He had to cut up the side of the ridge, mindful of the wind. Then there was a long dense thicket in which he might approach within fifty feet of the lick, still with the wind in his face. Just beside the lick was another deep thicket, from which he could make his leap.

His body lowered. The tail lashed back and forth, and now it had begun to have a slight vertical motion that frontiersmen have learned to watch for. He placed every paw with consummate grace, and few sets of human nerves have sufficient control over leg muscles to move with such astonishing patience. He scarcely seemed to move at all.

But when scarcely ten feet remained to stalk, a sudden sound pricked through the darkness. It came from afar, but it was no less terrible. It was really two sounds, so close together that they sounded as one. Neither Blacktail nor Whisperfoot had any delusions about them. They recognized them at once, in strange ways under the skin that no man may describe, as the far-off reports of a rifle. Just today Blacktail had seen his doe fall bleeding when this same sound, only louder, spoke from a covert from which Bert Cranston had poached her—and he left the lick in one bound.

Terrified though he was by the rifle shot, still Whisperfoot sprang. But the distance was too far. His outstretched paw hummed down four feet behind Blacktail's flank. Then forgetting everything but his anger and disappointment, the great cougar opened his mouth and howled.

The long night was almost done when he got sight of further game. Once a flock of grouse exploded with a roar of wings from a thicket; but they had been wakened by the first whisper of dawn in the wind, and he really had no chance at them. Soon after this, the moon set.

The larger creatures of the forest are almost as helpless in absolute darkness as human beings. It is very well to talk of seeing in the dark, but from the nature of things, even vertical pupils may only respond to light. No owl or bat can see in absolute darkness. It became increasingly likely that Whisperfoot would have to retire to his lair without any meal whatever.

But still he remained, hoping against hope. After a futile fifteen minutes of watching a trail, he heard a doe feeding on a hillside. Its footfall was not so heavy as the sturdy tramp of a buck, and besides, the bucks would be higher on the ridges this time of morning. He began a cautious advance toward it.

For the first fifty yards the hunt was in his favor. He came up wind, and the brush made a perfect cover. But the doe unfortunately was standing a full twenty yards farther, in an open glade. Under ordinary circumstances, Whisperfoot would not have made an attack. A cougar can run swiftly, but a deer is light itself. The big cat would have preferred to linger, a motionless thing in the thickets, hoping some other member of the deer herd to which the doe must have belonged would come into his ambush. But the hunt was late, and Whisperfoot was very, very angry. Too many times this night he had missed his kill. In desperation, he leaped from the thicket and charged the deer.

In spite of the preponderant odds against him, the charge was almost a success. He went fully half the distance between them before the deer perceived him. Then she leaped. There seemed to be no interlude of time between the instant that she beheld the dim, tawny figure in the air and that in which her long legs pushed out in a spring. But she didn't leap straight ahead. She knew enough of the cougars to know that the great cat would certainly aim for her head and neck in the same way that a duck-hunter leads a fast-flying duck—hoping to intercept her leap. Even as her feet left the ground she seemed to whirl in the air, and the deadly talons whipped down in vain. Then, cutting back in front, she raced down wind.

It is usually the most unmitigated folly for a cougar to chase a deer against which he has missed his stroke; and it is also quite fatal to his dignity. And whoever doubts for a minute that the larger creatures have no dignity, and that it is not very dear to them, simply knows nothing about the ways of animals. They cling to it to the death. But tonight one disappointment after another had crumbled, as the rains crumble leaves, the last vestige of Whisperfoot's self-control. Snarling in fury, he bounded after the doe.

She was lost to sight at once in the darkness, but for fully thirty yards he raced in her pursuit. If he had stopped to think, it would have been one of the really great surprises of his life to hear the sudden, unmistakable stir and movement of a large, living creature not fifteen feet distant in the thicket.

He didn't stop to think at all. He didn't puzzle on the extreme unlikelihood of a doe halting in her flight from a cougar. It is doubtful whether, in the thickets, he had any perceptions of the creature other than its movements. He was running down wind, so it is certain that he didn't smell it. If he saw it at all, it was just as a shadow, sufficiently large to be that of a deer. It was moving, crawling as Woof the bear sometimes crawled, seemingly to get out of his path. And Whisperfoot leaped straight at it.

It was a perfect shot. He landed high on its shoulders. His head lashed down, and the white teeth closed. All the long life of his race he had known that pungent essence that flowed forth. His senses perceived it, a message shot along his nerves to his brain. And then he opened his mouth in a high, far-carrying squeal of utter, abject terror.

He sprang a full fifteen feet back into the thickets; then crouched. The hair stood still at his shoulders, his claws were bared; he was prepared to fight to the death. He didn't understand. He only knew the worst single terror of his life. It was not a doe that he had attacked in the darkness. It was not Urson the porcupine, or even Woof. It was that imperial master of all things, man himself. Unknowing, he had attacked Landy Hildreth, lying wounded from Cranston's bullet beside the trail. Word of the arson ring would never reach the settlements, after all.

And as for Whisperfoot—the terror that choked his heart with blood began to wear off in a little while. The man lay so still in the thickets. Besides, there was a strange, wild smell in the air. Whisperfoot's stroke had gone home so true there had not even been a fight. The darkness began to lift around him, and a strange exultation, a rapture unknown before in all his hunting, began to creep into his wild blood. Then, as a shadow steals, he went creeping back to his dead.

* * * * * * * * *

Dan Failing had been studying nature on the high ridges; and he went home by a back trail that led to old Bald mountain. The trail was just a narrow serpent in the brush; and it had not been made by gangs of laborers, working with shovels and picks. Possibly half a dozen white men, in all, had ever walked along it. It was just the path of the wild creatures, worn down by hoof and paw and cushion since the young days of the world.

It was a roundabout trail home, but yet it had its advantages. It took him within two miles of Snowbird's lookout station, and at this hour of day he had been particularly fortunate in finding her at a certain spring on the mountain side. It was rather a singular coincidence. Along about four he would usually find himself wandering up that way. Strangely enough, at the same time, it was true that she had an irresistible impulse to go down and sit in the green ferns beside the same spring. They always seemed to be surprised to see one another. In reality, either of them would have been considerably more surprised had the other failed to put in an appearance. And always they had long talks as the afternoon drew to twilight.

"But I don't think you ought to wait so late before starting home," the girl would always say. "You're not a human hawk, and it is easier to get lost than you think."

And this solicitude, Dan rightly figured, was a good sign. There was only one objection to it. It resulted in an unmistakable inference that she considered him unable to take care of himself—and that was the last thing on earth that he wanted her to think. He understood her well enough to know that her standards were the standards of the mountains, valuing strength and self-reliance above all things. He didn't stop to question why, every day, he trod so many weary miles to be with her.

She was as natural as a fawn; and many times she had quite taken away his breath. And once she did it literally. He didn't think that so long as death spared him he would ever be able to forget that experience. It was her birthday, and knowing of it in time he had arranged for the delivery of a certain package, dear to a girlish heart, at her father's house. In the trysting hour he had come trudging over the hills with it, and few experiences in his life had ever yielded such unmitigated pleasure as the sight of her, glowing white and red, as she took off its wrapping paper. It was a jolly old gift, he recollected—and when she had seen it, she fairly leaped at him. Her warm, round arms around his neck, and the softest, loveliest lips in the world pressed his. But in those days he didn't have the strength that he had now. He felt he could endure the same experience again with no embarrassment whatever. His first impression then, besides abounding, incredible astonishment, was that she had quite knocked out his breath. But let it be said for him that he recovered with notable promptness. His own arms had gone up and closed around her, and the girl had wriggled free.

"But you mustn't do that!" she told him.

"But, good Lord, girl! You did it to me! Is there no justice in women?"

"But I did it to thank you for this lovely gift. For remembering me—for being so good—and considerate. You haven't any cause to thank me."

He had many serious difficulties in thinking it out. And only one conclusion was obtainable—that Snowbird kissed as naturally as she did anything else, and the kiss meant exactly what she said it did and no more. But the fact remained that he would have walked a good many miles farther if he thought there was any possibility of a repeat.

But all at once his fantasies were suddenly and rudely dispelled by the intrusion of realities. Dan had been walking silently himself in the pine needles. As Lennox had wondered at long ago, he knew how by instinct; and instinctively he practiced this attainment as soon as he got out into the wild. The creature he had heard was fully one hundred yards distant, yet Dan could hear him with entire plainness. And for a while he couldn't even guess what manner of thing it might be.

A cougar that made so much noise would be immediately expelled from the union. A wolf pack, running by sight, might crack brush as freely; but a wolf pack would also bay to wake the dead. Of course it might be an elk or a steer, and still more likely, a bear. He stood still and listened. The sound grew nearer.

Soon it became evident that the creature was either walking with two legs, or else was a four-footed animal putting two feet down at the same instant. Dan had learned to wait. He stood perfectly still. And gradually he came to the conclusion that he was listening to the footfall of another man.

But it was rather hard to imagine what a man might be doing on this lonely hill. Of course it might be a deer hunter; but few were the valley sportsmen who had penetrated to this far land. The footfall was much too heavy for Snowbird. The steps were evidently on another trail that intersected his own trail one hundred yards farther up the hill. He had only to stand still, and in an instant the man would come in sight.

He took one step into the thickets, prepared to conceal himself if it became necessary. Then he waited. Soon the man stepped out on the trail.

Even at the distance of one hundred yards, Dan had no difficulty whatever in recognizing him. He could not mistake this tall, dark form, the soiled, slouchy clothes, the rough hair, the intent, dark features. It was a man about his own age, his own height, but weighing fully twenty pounds more, and the dark, narrow eyes could belong to no one but Bert Cranston. He carried his rifle loosely in his arms.

Dan Saw His Purpose

He stopped at the forks in the trail and looked carefully in all directions.

Dan had every reason to think that Cranston would see him at first glance. Only one clump of thicket sheltered him. But because Dan had learned the lesson of standing still, because his olive-drab sporting clothes blended softly with the colored leaves, Cranston did not detect him. He turned and strode on down the trail.

He didn't move quite like a man with innocent purposes. There was something stealthy, something sinister in his stride, and the way he kept such a sharp lookout in all directions. Yet he never glanced to the trail for deer tracks, as he would have done had he been hunting. Without even waiting to meditate on the matter, Dan started to shadow him.

Before one hundred yards had been traversed, he could better understand the joy the cougar takes in his hunting. It was the same process—a cautious, silent advance in the trail of prey. He had to walk with the same caution, he had to take advantage of the thickets. He began to feel a curious excitement.

Cranston seemed to be moving more carefully now, examining the brush along the trail. Now and then he glanced up at the tree tops. And all at once he stopped and knelt in the dry shrubbery.

At first all that Dan could see was the glitter of a knife blade. Cranston seemed to be whittling a piece of dead pine into fine shavings. Now he was gathering pine needles and small twigs, making a little pile of them. And then, just as Cranston drew his match, Dan saw his purpose.

Cranston was at his old trade—setting a forest fire.

For two very good reasons, Dan didn't call to him at once. The two reasons were that Cranston had a rifle and that Dan was unarmed. It might be extremely likely that Cranston would choose the most plausible and effective means of preventing an interruption of his crime, and by the same token, prevent word of the crime ever reaching the authorities. The rifle contained five cartridges, and only one was needed.

But the idea of backing out, unseen, never even occurred to Dan. The fire would have a tremendous headway before he could summon help. Although it was near the lookout station, every condition pointed to a disastrous fire. The brush was dry as tinder, not so heavy as to choke the wind, but yet tall enough to carry the flame into the tree tops. The stiff breeze up the ridge would certainly carry the flame for miles through the parched Divide before help could come. In the meantime stock and lives and homes would be endangered, besides the irreparable loss of timber. There were many things that Dan might do, but giving up was not one of them.

After all, he did the wisest thing of all. He simply came out in plain sight and unconcernedly walked down the trail toward Cranston. At the same instant, the latter struck his match.

As Dan was no longer stalking, Cranston immediately heard his step. He whirled, recognized Dan, and for one long instant in which the world seemed to have time in plenty to make a complete revolution, he stood perfectly motionless. The match flared in his dark fingers, his eyes—full of singular conjecturing—rested on Dan's face. No instant of the latter's life had ever been fraught with greater peril. He understood perfectly what was going on in Cranston's mind. The fire-fiend was calmly deciding whether to shoot or whether to bluff it out. One required no more moral courage than the other. It really didn't make a great deal of difference to Cranston. But he decided that the killing was not worth the cartridge. The other course was too easy. He did not even dream that Dan had been shadowing him and had seen his intention. He would have laughed at the idea that a "tenderfoot" could thus walk behind him, unheard. Without concern, he scattered with his foot the little heap of kindling, and slipping his pipe into his mouth, he touched the flaring match to it. It was a wholly admirable little piece of acting, and would have deceived any one who had not seen his previous preparations. Then he walked on down the trail toward Dan.

Dan stopped and lighted his own pipe. It was a curious little truce. And then he leaned back against the great gray trunk of a fallen tree.

"Well, Cranston," he said civilly. The men had met on previous occasions, and always there had been the same invisible war between them.

"How do you do, Failing," Cranston replied. No perceptions could be so blunt as to miss the premeditated insult in the tone. He didn't speak in his own tongue at all, the short, guttural "Howdy" that is the greeting of the mountain men. He pronounced all the words with an exaggerated precision, an unmistakable mockery of Dan's own tone. In his accent he threw a tone of sickly sweetness, and his inference was all too plain. He was simply calling Failing a milksop and a white-liver; just as plainly as if he had used the words.

The eyes of the two men met. Cranston's lips were slightly curled in an unmistakable leer. Dan's were very straight. And in one thing at least, their eyes looked just the same. The pupils of both pairs had contracted to steel points, bright in the dark gray of the irises. Cranston's looked somewhat red; and Dan's were only hard and bright.

Dan felt himself straighten; and the color mounted somewhat higher in his brown cheeks. But he did not try to avenge the insult—yet. Cranston was still fifteen feet distant, and that was too far. A man may swing a rifle within fifteen feet. The fact that they were in no way physical equals did not even occur to him. When the insult is great enough, such considerations cannot possibly matter. Cranston was hard as steel, one hundred and seventy pounds in weight. Dan did not touch one hundred and fifty, and a deadly disease had not yet entirely relinquished its hold upon him.

"I do very well, Cranston," Dan answered in the same tone. "Wouldn't you like another match? I believe your pipe has gone out."

Very little can be said for the wisdom of this remark. It was simply human—that age-old creed to answer blow for blow and insult for insult. Of course the inference was obvious—that Dan was accusing him, by innuendo, of his late attempt at arson. Cranston glanced up quickly, and it might be true that his fingers itched and tingled about the barrel of his rifle. He knew what Dan meant. He understood perfectly that Dan had guessed his purpose on the mountain side. And the curl at his lips became more pronounced.

"What a smart little boy," he scorned. "Going to be a Sherlock Holmes when he grows up." Then he half turned and the light in his eyes blazed up. He was not leering now. The mountain men are too intense to play at insult very long. Their inherent savagery comes to the surface, and they want the warmth of blood upon their fingers. His voice became guttural. "Maybe you're a spy?" he asked. "Maybe you're one of those city rats—to come and watch us, and then run and tell the forest service. There's two things, Failing, that I want you to know."

MRS. ARTHUR O. NELSON

the Rev. Omer Brenne of the United Lutheran church. To this union was born a little girl, who died in infancy.

Merle was taken suddenly ill last Friday, January 21, with that dreaded disease, scarlet fever. Everything that loving hands, medical skill and tender nursing could do was done, and it was thought on Monday that she had passed the danger point, but a change took place on Monday night and Merle knew then that her stay with loved ones was short and she talked to her husband and mother, whom she so dearly loved, and who were so constantly at her bedside, and when she knew that death was so near she clasped her husband's hands and asked him to live so that he could meet her in heaven. To her mother, she said:

"I want to kiss my good mamma goodbye. And my dear papa, tell him goodbye for me. And tell Sherley and Eloise goodbye and Oralee, how I love her."

She had a message of love for each one of the family and all her friends, "O, I love so many!"

Her parting words to all were, that they live so that they would meet her in heaven and her last words were:

"I see Jesus; I am going to heaven to be with Jesus."

Then she smiled and her face shone with a heavenly light as she passed on to meet her reward.

As she lived, so she died, quietly, cheerfully.

We never miss the sunshine until the shadows fall.
We ne'er regret the bitter words, 'till,
  passed beyond recall.
We never miss the laughter until the eyes are wet,
We never miss the happiness 'till love's bright sun has set.
We never miss the singing until the birds have flown,
We never miss the blossoms until the spring has gone.
We never miss our joyousness 'till sorrow bids us wake,
We never know we have a heart 'till it begins to break.
Dear Love, bring back the sunshine,
  My bitter words forget,
Bring back the old time happiness,
  my eyes with tears are wet.
Bring back the birds soft singing:
  Dear love, why should we part?
Bid spring time blossoms bloom again
  In the garden of my heart.

Merle was an exceptionally bright and lovable girl, and her loving and sweet disposition made all who knew her love her. She was always kind and thoughtful of others and during her illness she would often urge those about her to go and rest, that she was all right. She was always thankful for every little favor done for her.

Merle was a great lover of music, flowers, and of all the beauties of nature. Her home was the pride of her heart and the haven of her husband. She was never happier than when her home was filled with her many friends of whom she loved so dearly.

Funeral services were conducted at the grave at 2:00 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, by Rev. J. M. Jensen. Mr. Varland sang "Face to Face" and "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," which were most beautifully rendered. The beautiful floral tributes are evidence of the high esteem in which Merle was held by her friends and the community in which she had made her home.

Interment was made in the Franklin Grove cemetery by the side of her little girl.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our warmest thanks to the many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted and comforted us during the illness and death of our loved one and to those who sent flowers and other expressions of love and sympathy.

M. & ST. L. TO RUN GRAVEL TRAINS THIS SUMMER?

Hampton Chronicle: C. E. Hill, local agent for the M. & St. L. railroad, was in Minneapolis last Friday consulting with the general manager and heads of departments in regard to the company's business at this station. Mr. Hill states that through trains for the northwest, for transfer at Corwith, will be routed through Hampton again as soon as the branch line is put in shape to handle the traffic. It is expected that gravel trains will soon be put to work on the Hampton-Algona branch again. The gravel crews were laid off last fall when the railroad company began to feel the pinch of decreased business.

They Appeal to Our Sympathies

The bilious and dyspeptic are constant sufferers and appeal to our sym pathies. Many such, however, have been completely restored to health by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. These tablets strengthen the stomach, invigorate the liver and improve the digestion. They also cause a gentle movement of the boweus. When you have any trouble with your stomach, give them a trial.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

BEET GROWERS CONFERENCE

County Agent Edwards and A. W. R. Schultz, of Clarion, attended the beet growers conference at Mason City Wednesday. Preliminary steps have already been taken for an organization of growers in the counties of Wright, Humboldt, Webster, Hancock, Cerro Gordo, Winnebago, and Kossuth County directors will elect district officers soon, and work will be taken up in earnest. A set of resolutions was adopted at the meeting Wednesday, touching mainly on labor problems. The growers feel that the co-operation of the sugar men was not all it should have been last year, labor not being regulated and supplied at the right time,and the returns falling below expectations as a result. The price for the sugar beet for 1921 has not been fixed as yet, but the growers expect favorable contracts. County Agent Edwards was on the resolution committee.

FARM SALES GOING GOOD

The farm sales being held in this part of the county are all going at good prices. Stock seems to be selling at much higher prices than was anticipated in the fall, and machinery sells for fair prices. At the Kallestad, Benson and Abels sales very good prices were received on most of the machinery and stock, and in instances the grain sold at market or higher prices. The sales listed for the immediate future are Bonte, a mile east and two north of Belmond; Allan, six miles west of town; Barkema near Alexander, all on the third of the month, and Shurson, near Olaf on the second. E. G. Reed & Son and Geo. Thompson will hold their blooded hog sale in a tent at the Rock Island on the 18th. of this month.

Mrs. J. W. Brooks, Miss Laura Brooks and Bert Trumbell, a grandson of Mrs. Brooks, moved to Klemme last week from Belmond and are living in rooms in the old Schaffer building formerly occupied by the Dr. Thomas family. Mrs. Brooks is the mother of Mrs. Millie Smith of this city and the other Miss Brooks is her sister. We welcome the family to Klemme.—Times.

HOLDING UP THE PUBLIC

(Oelwein Iowan.)

When a city wants a certain piece of land for a school house, park or other purpose, the owners of the same often get enlarged ideas of its value. They feel that the community will pay a high price rather than take some other property, and that the additional cost will be so divided up that the tax payers will never notice.

Other persons when such a proposition comes up, are so anxious to help on the cause of civic improvement, that they will gladly turn over any private property that is wanted, for what it cost them.

When it comes to getting up any public enterprise, some people will charge a handsome profit on supplies or a big price for services. Others will freely give their time, and work twice as hard as they would for their own business.

In a town where individuals are eager to make money at the expense of the community, public improvements cost high. It becomes less possible to get things done, because a constant burden of taxation has to be borne for betterments of the past. Public spirit is chilled by the spectacle of citizens whose first thought is personal enrichment.

In a community where people are willing to sink immediate advantage to help on public causes, a greater rate of progress is possible. A fine example of public spirit has been set, and new improvements are constantly being added. This creates civic enthusiasm and people emulate each other in co-operation. With this feeling dominant, mountains of difficulty roll away, and things that would seem impossible elsewhere prove perfecty within reach. Much of this spirit of civic co-operation has in the past been manifested in Oelwein and in so far as it can be developed the town will go ahead.

M. & ST. L. TO HAVE NEW EQUIPMENT

Hampton Recorder: Wonders will never cease. It is authoritively announced that the M. & St. L. railroad has purchased fifteen Mikado freight engines and five Pacific type passenger locomotives, and the same are to be delivered to the road the first of the new year, and are to be distributed along the eastern division which runs through Hampton It is also announced that the road has just received 250 freight gondolas and is about to contract for 100 refrigerator cars.

The Mikado type engine is the largest freight locomotive in use on the M. & St. L. They each weigh 260,000 pounds and the maximum hauling capacity is approximately 4,000 tons of about eighty cars with average loads of 40,000 pounds to a car.

We believe that this new rolling stock is the first that the company has purchased in fifteen or twenty years.

Nature

Medicines that aid nature are always most effectual. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy acts on this plan. SHORT COURSE PRIZES TO BE AWARDED

Some Interesting Items Of The Local Schools

Senior Class To Put Annual This Year And Are Now Busy With Work On It.

TWO BASKET BALL GAMES

Why not make use of the gymnasium on Community Night? A few are enjoying the privilege and there is no reason why others should not.

Community night is open to the men of the community and high school graduates. Students in school and those of school age that have quit school of their own accord will not be granted the use of the gym. on Tuesday night.

Volley ball, indoor baseball, boxing, horizontal bars, and basket ball are some of the sports which may be enjoyed. Should enough interest be shown it might be possible to secure a wrestling mat. If you don't want to get into the games, come up and watch the fun from the balcony.

Friday night, Feb. 11, he high school boys play the Mason City team on the local floor. Come out Friday night and see a real game of basket ball and boost for B. H. S.

On Wednesday night, Feb. 10, Belmond will play Swaledale Consolidated school on the local floor. Swaledale is reported to have a fast team for a small school.

The boys and girls teams went to Garner, Friday, and met the Garner teams on their home floor. The boys' game was an especially good game and altho the score was 16 to 6 in Garner's favor, that does not mean the Belmond boys did not play a good game. It was a hard fought game from start to finish, and our boys had the ball two-thirds of the time, but could not seem to hit a basket.

The girls' team were defeated. The score was 35 to 16 in their favor. Our girls put up a good clean game, altho the score spells defeat for Belmond, the local girls played the best game to the contesting teams, as well as the best they have played this season.

After the games at Garner, the players and coaches were served refreshments by the home economics department of the Garner high school. Belmond appreciates the courteous treatment received at Garner.

It is the hope of the local committee that we may have a lecture course in Belmond next year. We can if each citizen does his part and orders his season ticket now. We have selected four good numbers for next year, which will cost $400. Adult season tickets will be sold for $1.50 each.

We must have at least 200 season tickets signed for before March 1, to hold the course ordered. Be a booster for something worth while.

This year the Wright County Declamatory Contest is to be held in Belmond, on Feb. 25. All high schools of the county will have their contestants here. The school that wins will be given the loving cup that is now being displayed in the window of the Belmond Savings Bank. Belmond will be represented by William Chase, Carol Tyrrell, and Elaine Rierson. Let everyone attend the contest and support the home school. WE WANT THE CUP!

Miss Kate Liddle, County Nurse, showed a set of very interesting slides at the school last Tuesday night. The slides were some sent out from Iowa University, showing proper methods of lighting, heating and ventilations, correct and incorrect positions in sitting, standing, writing and sleeping and some simple ways of folding paper to make a drinking cup, and the dangers of the common drinking cups and pail. The meeting was well attended and appreciated by those who were present.

Last Thursday afternoon the first division of the High School Literary Society presented a splendid program. The farce, "Hans Von Smash," was excellently given. The pupils had Marriage licenses for the past week Glen F. Boyington and Mina May Harris, Irwin E. Stark and Dorothy Esther Moncel, Kenneth Toon and Ruby I. Warren, Oscar J. Hansen and Jessie Shurson, Selmer Lewis and Blanche Tegland, Harry Trumbell and Nettie O. Johnson, Thomas F. Moore and Ernest Shurtz.

L. C. Kesterson vs. Percy C. Newcomb of Eagle Grove; plaintiff asks judgement for $1403.44 for note given on motor truck.

G. W. Hansen, a Galt merchant, brings suit against Albert Babst for an account of $36.82.

K. J. Wilson is suing John T. Johnson and T. Jacobson for $677.32, balance due on labor while employed on defendant's farm near Blearsburg this summer. The labor consisted of tiling and of $1077.32 the agreed value of the labor, only $400 has been paid.

F. J. Wenck vs. George Gruis; judgement is asked for $140.40 for 108 bushels of corn at $1.30 per bushel, sold and delivered a year ago by John C. Mull, who has since assigned the debt to the plaintiff.

Suit has been brought against Rufus C. Bjelland by Ole and Amos Nervig for $229.20, due on a land lease. The petition recites that according to the contract 41.6 acres of land in sec. 30-92-24, hay and paspure land, was leased for $12 an acre from March 1, 1920 to March of this year. $200 has been paid on the cash rental of $499.20. In January of this year Mr. Bjelland abandoned the premises and moved to Minnesota where he now resides.

The Solberg Farmers Elevator Co. is suing Al Abels for $285.85, for goods sold and delivered; and O. R. Meyers has assigned to the company a bill against defendant for $33.00 for threshing 1,100 bushels of oats at three cents a bushel.

L. E. Goslin of Clarion asks a divorce from his wife Bunah Irene Goslin. They were married April 20, 1920, at Rockport, Mo., following Mrs. Goslin's divorce from her first husband Roy Ross. Adultery is the grounds for divorce. Mrs. Goslin is now working, or has been working, at Allison, Ia., as telephone operator.

Another case brought for wages due is that of Lawrence Dorr vs. Joseph Patton, Jr. During the year 1917 and 1918 plaintiff worked for Patton as a farm laborer, and under an oral agreement was to receive $400 a year. At the time the contract terminated, plaintiff had a balance of $149.14 coming to him, for which he asks judgment and interest from August 1, 1919.

Authorities Shut Down On The Cigarette Selling

Mayor Gives Warning That No Selling To Minors Will Be Tolerated And Throws Big Scare.

HOW LONG WILL IT LAST THO?

Mayor Barry served notice on the various dealers in town handling the coffin nail last week, that there would be no further toleration of the sale of the cigarette.

As a result things are closed up tight, for the present. A good sized scare was thrown into some of them, and every "pill" disappeared from the show cases, or from sight.

Several complaints had been made lately about young boys smoking the weeds, and some people were getting up on their ear about the matter. A few of the school boys of tender years were relieved of cigarette recently and the school authorities had also complained.

AN EARLY SCHOOL HOUSE

H. H. Barker came over from Rowan the other day on one of his periodical business trips and during a short conversation with him our reporter gleaned an interesting item of news to the older inhabitants. It concerns the little one room log school house located northeast of Belmond sixty odd years ago. The seats or benches were made by splitting a log in two and after smoothing off the top with an adz, four wooden legs were driven into holes in the underside. The pupil's books were placed on the floor for safe keeping. It was here that Mr. Barker learned his A. B. C.'s sixty years ago. A remarkable fact is that his first teacher, now Mrs. Frances Thatcher, is enjoying fairly good health and resides at Chelsa, Michigan.—Monitor.

Obituary

GUY DEFORREST REESE

Guy Deforrest Reese was born in Belmond, April 22, 1900, and died at Waterloo, February 5, 1921, death being caused by sleeping sickness.

The young man would have been 21 years old the 22d of next April, and his untimely demise, from the unusual and deadly disease, was a great shock to his family and his may friends. He suffered from the sleeping sickness but a short time, and altho everything possible was done for him, he could not rally from the disease.

Deceased was a son of Mrs. Sadie Reese, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Baldridge of this place. He was an ex-service man, having served with the 2nd field artillery, in which outfit he saw two and one-half months' service overseas. Since his return from the army he had been employed as night baggage man in the union station at Waterloo, making his home at 617 West Wellington, that city.

Funeral services were held at the home in Waterloo on Sunday, and at the Methodist church here on Monday of this week, the American Legion having charge of the services. Full military honors were accorded the young man, burial being in the Franklin Grove cemetery.

He leaves to mourn his loss, his mother, four sisters, grandparents, and many other relatives, besides a host of friends.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks and appreciation to the American Legion, the choir and the many friends for their kindly help and sympathy in he loss of our beloved one, and for the beautiful floral tributes.

SUGAR BEET GROWERS MET AT CLARION, FEBRUARY 5TH

Sugar beet growers of Wright county met at the County Agent's office Saturday afternoon, February 5th, for the purpose of organizing a county association of beet growers and for the election of officers for the organization.

Resolutions which were passed by the Northwest Iowa Beet Growers Association conference were read and discussed at this meeting and a number of constructive resolutions were recommended for addition to this list by the members in conference at Clarion.

A. W. R. Schultz, Clarion, was elected president, to head the local county organization and G. R. Dial, of Eagle Grove, was elected secretary-treasurer. Mr. Schultz and Mr. Dial urge all sugar beet growers of Wright county to watch for the announcement of the next county meeting of sugar beet growers, which will be held in the very near future. The officers especially urge that each beet grower hold off from signing up a contract until the next meeting of the beet growers of the county.

CHANGE IN HOME EQUIPMENT SCHEDULE

Wed. Feb. 16, Troy church, Troy twp. 2 p. m.
Thurs. Feb. 17, Lake twp. (place of meeting announced later) 2 p. m.
Thurs. Feb. 17, Center school, Grant twp., 7:30 p. m.

THE FARMER'S COGITATION

When we entered the war after just provocation,
The government started an agitation,
That we farmers must raise for every nation
The food required to save civilization.
We promptly responded with great jubilation,
And with never a thought as to compensation;
Bought Liberty bonds, to say naught of donations
To Red Cross funds and associations.
Now we've grain enough to feed all creation
And pork and beef beyond expectation
But what has happened to market quotation?
We realize now that we need relaxation.
The wool market sure is an aggravation,
The cotton growers are facing starvation,
Producers now question the justification
Of all this talk about food conservation.
Vast fortunes were made in ammunition
And on our grain thru speculation.
The federal reserve administration
Gave U. S. currency great inflation.
The law was changed income taxation
Till it worries the farmer beyond endurance.
We cannot tolerate such a condition,
To get relief is our greatest ambition.
With markets in such demorilzation,
We farmers must voice a strong protestation.
And make our demands without cessation
Until we secure just representation.
Then out of all this dissatisfaction
There surely will come a great reaction,
It will take its course thru that organization
Known as the Farm Bureau Federation.
If the farmer wishes emancipation
From biased and unjust legislation
He must acknowledge his obligation
Support and stick to "The Federation."

CORN BELT FARMERS DISCUSS FARM WAGES

A few farmers in the corn belt believe that it will be impossible to use the farm-hand wage scale as a whittling stick this spring.

The majority hold different views, however, and insist that the farmer must do a lot of paring along wage lines before he starts his drive in the spring to put out this year's crops.

Unless the reduction is accepted many declare they will either curtail their acreage or farm the same amount the best way they can without help.

Some of the farmers say they intend to cut their hired men's wages in the same fashion that farm prices have been lowered—in half. Others suggest a 20 per cent drop. Already a few farmers are contracting their men, the wages to be determined later on the basis of the 'going wage" in the community.

A sprinkling of men from the country who have usually hired during the busy season say they are going to hit the ball a little harder this spring and do all the work themselves.

Floyd Arnold, a farmer in Hahaska county, Iowa, who keeps help the year around, expects to pay $60 a month this spring for a married man.

"This is the figure I have been paying since corn skucking, and I really do not want to ask a man to work for less. If this farming business reaches a basis that a man can not pay his help what they ought to have he had better change occupations."

"Well, I hire single men and I do not expect to pay over $40 this spring The way stock and grain are selling I believe that is pretty good wages." This is the belief of Ray Lloyd, a young farmer aso from Mahaska county.

"The farmer who pays more than $35 a month for a hired man this spring is just like the fellow who paid $400 an acre for land a few months ago—he is paying too much," declared James Cudhy, a big farmer and feeder of Greene county, Iowa.

On the other hand, F. W. Roberts, who farms, feeds and daries in Kenosha county, Wis., is of the opinion that there will be practically no reduction in the monthly stipends alowed to farm hands this spring, especially in his section. He has three men, and he expects to pay them their present wages—$85. He says he will not run the risk of disgruntling his hired men by cutting their wages and probably driving them to a town job when business improves there.

Clay Rowen, Bert Templeton and R. N. Knott, all farmers and feeders in Hardin county, Iowa, believe that $45 will be the outside figure for married men on the farms this spring, with the single help getting $10 or less. They refer to their own district.

Ora Rice, down in Knox county, Ill., gave his married help $75 last year, but he says that $50 is all he is going to pay this spring. Then if farm commodity prices improve he will make up a part of the cut to his men in the way of a bonus at the end of the season. Thomas Butler, from the same section, agrees with these figures. Both farmers place single men's wages this spring at $40.

Down in Pike county, Mo., J. H. Caldwell owns two big farms, as well as land in Canada. He has tenants on his Missouri hoding and they tell him they prefer letting some of the land lie idle rather than pay high prices for labor. The farm hand, Mr. Caldwell believes, must take a substantial reduction this spring.—Chicago Drovers Journal.

FARM CONDITIONS BETTERING

That we have reached the bottom of the period of depression which has taken Iowa farmers in the slide and that we will have better times from now on is the opinion expressed by R. A. Pearson, president of Iowa State College in an address to farmers at the Short Course.

"We have reached the bottom in the period we have just gone thru and we are bound to start up grade soon." The horizon for agriculture is brighter than ever before and the new year promises to bring good things for the farmers.

"The farmer has been accused of increasing production in Iowa without bothering about the markets and this has caused some of the trouble," continued Dr. Pearson. "This is all wrong. What we are trying to do is to increase the production per acre and to reduce the minor costs of production so that in the long run the farmers will be benefited.

CORN SILAGE ABSOLUTE NECESSITY TO DAIRYMAN

For dairy purposes corn silage is second to none, and its value as a dairy feed is no longer an experiment with successful dairymen, it is an absolute necessity, suggests Thomas M. Olson, instructor in dairy husbandry at the state college of South Dakota.

No silo which was properly built and filled with corn at the right stage of maturity he says, has ever been discarded. Neither is there any farmer who had a silo on his farm and used its succulent, nutritious feed that is willing to do without one.

In addition to being nutritious, succulent feed, corn silage is one of the cheapest feeds for dairy cows. According to the best authorities corn silage made from corn ensiled at the proper stage of maturity contains 22 pounds of digestible crude protein and 354 pounds of total digestible carbohydrate equivalent, per ton. A farm in the average state of fertility will produce from 6 to 8 tons of silage per acre. Many farmers produce 12 to 14 tons per acre on good soil.

Corn should be ensiled at the proper stage of maturity to get the best results. If it is allowed to get too ripe it will be too dry and difficult to pack.

JOTTINGS BY THE OFFICE BOY

When you have arrived at the conklusion that you cannot make advertising pay, you have lost your grip.

A customer will come into your store today and buy a georgette waiste for the simple reason that she saw a pair of shoes avedrtised by you last week. So don't get discouraged when you run a shoe ad that it doesn't bring sufficient direct results.

Always put your best foot forward in advertising and then follow it up with the other foot.

If you are in buziness you should either advertise or quit.

Advertising is the short straight line between you and the customer.

We all have to eat to live. Advertising is the food for the business.

People will judge your store by the kind of advertising you do. They will judge it still more by the amount of advertising you do regularly.

The man who succeeds must have the nerve to take a chance.

It is not the store that makes good, it is the individual behind it.

For every man that fails on account of too much advertising, ninety-nine fail on account of too little advertising.

If you want pleasant visitors in your emporium, see to it that they have a pleasant visit with you.

If all our troubles really happened to us, we should not be here to tell about it.

The merchant who is so busy that he forgets to advertise or feels that he hasn't time to advertise will probably have plenty of time some of these days to entertain a special salesman at a closing out sale.

The merchant who knows nothing about advertising and doesn't want to know any more, sees just as much of the world's possibilities as does the man in jail.

Great things always follow in the trail of small things well done.

You can make advertising pay if you have a store that is worth trading at twice. Otherwise you cannot make advertising pay.

If the public can see your merchandise at a profit to you, your foolish to keep it. Advertising is the connecting line between you and the public. When you stop advertising the connection is broken.

If you refuse to keep your stock up because you are waiting for the prices to go down, you're making it all the easier for your competitor to get the order.

The more a business man depends upon advertising, the more certain he is of getting along. Of course, you are the best buyer in town, we all know that. What of it? In the end it's selling the goods that counts.

If you want the customer to come back and not as a complainer, always tell the customer the truth.

The best business year for yourself must also be by a natural law the best year for your customers, your clerks and your printers.

Men in business do not stand still. They either make things better or worse. If you are simply satisfied to make a living for yourself, you are a hindrance to the town and a drain on your community.

Throw away your blue goggles and most everything will look funny to you. Things that formerly irritated you will now only amuse you.

It is a fine thing to climb upward—if you can be sure to hold on.

You can't learn to swim by keeping out of the water.—Dry Goods Reporter.

USE CARE WITH ELECTRICITY

Simple Precautions Will Prevent Many Accidents With Appliances

People who have electrical appliances and electricity on the farm need not be afraid of it. No damage can come if a few simple precautions are taken. E. C. Kurtz of the electrical engineering department of Iowa State College offers a few suggestions for the beginners

In the household where washers are used be careful not to get the wires wet. That will short circuit the motor.

Do not take hold of switches with wet hands. Water is among the best conductors.

Do not pour water over the motor. A few drops are likely to put it out of commission.

When insulation on any wire becomes worn or broken, get a new cord, It's cheaper than burning out fuses.

Remember that 110 or 220 volts do not kill if the person has a strong heart but it does not pay to fool with the current because no one is sure of the intensity of the current. High tension wires often are dropped on other wires.

If appliances or wiring need repairing, get an electrician. Do not try to rearrange wiring on appliances unless you are sure of what you are going to do, then do it with the current turned off.

Do not go away and leave electrical toasters, flat irons and other simple applances turned on. The children like to investigate and a knife poked in on toaster coils will give bad results.

Read the directions that come with appliances and remember the man that put them there is an expert on those things.

SUGAR BEET GROWERS MET AT CLARION, FEBRUARY 5TH

Sugar beet growers of Wright county met at the County Agent's office Saturday afternoon, February 5th, for the purpose of organizing a county association of beet growers and for the election of officers for the organization.

Resolutions which were passed by the Northwest Iowa Beet Growers Association conference were read and discussed at this meeting and a number of constructive resolutions were recommended for addition to this list by the members in conference at Clarion.

A. W. R. Schultz, Clarion, was elected president, to head the local county organization and G. R. Dial, of Eagle Grove, was elected secretary-treasurer. Mr. Schultz and Mr. Dial urge all sugar beet growers of Wright county to watch for the announcement of the next county meeting of sugar beet growers, which will be held in the very near future. The officers especially urge that each beet grower hold off from signing up a contract until the next meeting of the beet growers of the county.

CHANGE IN HOME EQUIPMENT SCHEDULE

The schedule for the home equipment lectures by Miss Bertha Holden, asst. state leader home demonstration agents, has been changed slightly and the ladies who were intending to attend these lectures are asked to take notice of this change. The schedule has been rearranged and added as follows:

Wednesday, Feb. 16, Center school, Eagle Grove twp., 10 a. m.
Wed. Feb. 16, Troy church, Troy twp. 2 p. m.
Thurs. Feb. 17, Lake twp, (place of meeting announced later) 2 p. m.
Thurs. Feb. 17, Center school, Grant twp., 7:30 p. m.

THE FARMER'S COGITATION

When we entered the war after just provocation,
The government started an agitation,
That we farmers must raise for every nation
The food required to save civilization.
We promptly responded with great jubilation,
And with never a thought as to compensation;
Bought Liberty bonds, to say naught of donations
To Red Cross funds and associations.
Now we've grain enough to feed all creation
And pork and beet beyond expectation
But what has happened to market quotation?
We realize now that we need relaxation.
The wool market sure is an aggravation,
The cotton growers are facing starvation,
Producers now question the justification
Of all this talk about food conservation.
Vast fortunes were made in ammunition
And on our grain thru speculation.
The federal reserve administration
Gave U. S. currency great inflation.
The law was changed income taxation
Till it worries the farmer beyond enduration.
We cannot tolerate such a condition,
To get relief is our greatest ambition.
With markets in such demorilzation,
We farmers must voice a strong protestation.
And make our demands without cessation
Until we secure just representation.
Then out of all this dissatisfaction
There surely will come a great reaction,
It will take its course thru that organization
Known as the Farm Bureau Federation.
If the farmer wishes emancipation
From biased and unjust legislation
He must acknowledge his obligation
Support and stick to "The Federation.'

CORN BELT FARMERS DISCUSS FARM WAGES

A few farmers in the corn belt believe that it will be impossible to use the farm-hand wage scale as a whittling stick this spring.

The majority hold different views. however, and insist that the farmer must do a lot of paring along wage lines before he starts his drive in the spring to put out this year's crops.

Unless the reduction is accepted many declare they will either curtail their acreage or farm the same amount the best way they can without help.

Some of the farmers say they intend to cut their hired men's wages in the same fashion that farm prices have been lowered—in half. Others suggest a 20 per cent drop. Already a few farmers are contracting their men, the wages to be determined later on the basis of the 'going wage" in the community.

A sprinkling of men from the country who have usually hired during the busy season say they are going to hit the ball a little harder this spring and do all the work themselves.

Floyd Arnold, a farmer in Hahaska county, Iowa, who keeps help the year around, expects to pay $60 a month this spring for a married man.

"This is the figure I have been paying since corn skucking, and I really do not want to ask a man to work for less. If this farming business reaches a basis that a man can not pay his help what they ought to have he had better change occupations."

"Well, I hire single men and I do not expect to pay over $40 this spring The way stock and grain are selling I believe that is pretty good wages." This is the belief of Ray Lloyd, a ycung farmer aso from Mahaska county.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to 'Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

Dan puffed at his pipe, and his eyes looked curiously bright through the film of smoke. "I'm not interested in hearing them," he said.

"It might pay you," Cranston went on. "One of 'em is that one man's word is good as another's in a court—and it wouldn't do you any good to run down and tell tales. A man can light his pipe on the mountain side without the courts being interested. The second thing is—just that I don't think you'd find it a healthy thing to do."

"I suppose, then, that is a threat?"

"It ain't just a threat." Cranston laughed harshly—a single, grim syllable that was the most terrible sound he had yet uttered. "It's a fact. Just try it, Failing. Just make one little step in that direction. You couldn't hide behind a girl's skirts, then. Why, you city sissy, I'd break you to pieces in my hands!"

Few men can make a threat without a muscular accompaniment. Its very utterance releases pent-up emotions, part of which can only pour forth in muscular expression. And anger is a primitive thing, going down to the most mysterious depths of a man's nature. As Cranston spoke, his lip curled, his dark fingers clenched on his thick palm, and he half leaned forward.

Dan knocked out his pipe on the log. It was the only sound in that whole mountain realm; all the lesser sounds were stilled. The two men stood face to face, Dan tranquil, Cranston shaken by passion.

"I give you," said Dan with entire coldness, "an opportunity to take that back. Just about four seconds."

He stood very straight as he spoke, and his eyes did not waver in the least. It would not be the truth to say that his heart was not leaping like a wild thing in his breast. A dark mist was spreading like madness over his brain; but yet he was striving to keep his thoughts clear. Stealthily, without seeming to do so, he was setting his muscles for a spring.

The only answer to his words was a laugh—a roaring laugh of scorn from Cranston's dark lips. In his laughter, his intent, catlike vigilance relaxed. Dan saw a chance; feeble though it was, it was the only chance he had. And his long body leaped like a serpent through the air.

The Battles of the Mountains were Battles to the Death.

Physical superior though he was Cranston would have repelled the attack with his rifle if he had had a chance. His blood was already at the murder heat—a point always quickly reached in Cranston—and the dark, hot fumes in his brain were simply nothing more nor less than the most poisonous, bitter hatred. No other word exists. If his class of degenerate mountain men had no other accomplishment, they could hate. All their lives they practiced the emotion: hatred of their neighbors, hatred of law, hatred of civilization in all its forms. Besides, this kind of hillman habitually fought his duels with rifles. Hands were not deadly enough.

But Dan was past his guard before he had time to raise his gun. The whole attack ws one of the most astounding surprises of Cranston's life. Dan's body struck his, his fists flailed, and to protect himself, Cranston was obliged to drop the rifle. They staggered, as if in some weird dance, on the trail; and their arms clasped in a clinch.

For a long instant they stood straining, seemingly motionless. Cranston's powerful body had stood up well under the shock of Dan's leap. It was a hand-to-hand battle now. The rifle had slid on down the hillside, to be caught in a clump of brush twenty feet below. Dan called on every ounce of his strength, because he knew what mercy he might expect if Cranston mastered him. The battles of the mountains were battles to the death.

They flung back and forth, wrenching shoulders, lashing fists, teeth and feet and fingers. There were no Marquis of Queensberry rules in this battle. Again and again Dan sent home his blows; but they all seemed ineffective. By now, Cranston had completely overcome the moment's advantage the other had obtained by the power of his leap. He hurled Dan from the clinch and lashed at him with hard fists.

It is a very common thing to hear of a silent fight. But it is really a more rare occurrence than most people believe. It is true that serpents will often fight in the strangest, most eerie silence; but human beings are not serpents. They partake more of the qualities of the meat-eaters—the wolves and felines. After the first instant, the noise of the fight aroused the whole hillside. The sound of blows was in itself notable, and besides, both of the men were howling the primordial battle cries of hatred and vengeance.

For two long minutes Dan fought with the strength of desperation, summoning at last all that mysterious reserve force with which all men are born. But he was playing a losing game. The malady with which he had suffered had taken too much of his vigor. Even as he struggled, it seemed to him that the vista about him, the dark pines, the colored leaves of the perennial shrubbery, the yellow path were all obscured in a strange, white mist. A great wind roared in his ears—and his heart was evidently about to shiver to pieces.

But still he fought on, not daring to yield. He could no longer parry Cranston's blows. The latter's arms went around him in one of those deadly holds that wrestlers know; and Dan struggled in vain to free himself. Cranston's face itself seemed hideous and unreal in the mist that was creeping over him. He did not recognize the curious thumping sound as Cranston's fists on his flesh. And now Cranston had hurled him off his feet.

Nothing mattered further. He had fought the best he could. This cruel beast could pounce on him at will and hammer away his life. But still he struggled. Except for the constant play of his muscles, his almost unconscious effort to free himself that kept one of Cranston's arms busy holding him down, that fight on the mountain path might have come to a sudden end. Human bodies can stand a terrific punishment; but Dan's was weakened from the ravages of his disease. Besides, Cranston would soon have both hands and both feet free for the work, and when these four terrible weapons are used at once, the issue—soon or late—can never be in doubt.

But even now, consciousness still lingered. Dan could hear his enemy's curses—and far up the trail, he heard another, stranger sound. It sounded like some one running.

And then he dimly knew that Cranston was climbing from his body. Voices were speaking—quick, commanding voices just over him. Above Cranston's savage curses another voice rang clear, and to Dan's ears, glorious beyond all human utterance.

He opened his tortured eyes. The mists lifted from in front of them, and the whole drama was revealed. It had not been sudden mercy that had driven Cranston from his body, just when his victim's failing unconsciousness would have put him completely in his power. Rather it was something black and ominous that even now was pointed squarely at Cranston's breast.

None too soon, a ranger of the hill had heard the sounds of the struggle, and had left the trysting place at the spring to come to Dan's aid. It was Snowbird, very pale but wholly self-sufficient and determined and intent. Her pistol was cocked and ready.

CHAPTER III

Dan Failing was really not badly hurt. The quick, lashing blows had not done more than severely bruise the flesh of his face; and the mists of unconsciousness that had been falling over him were more nearly the result of his own tremendous physical exertion. Now these mists were rising.

"Go—go away," the girl was commanding. "I think you've killed him."

Dan opened his eyes to find her kneeling close beside him, but still covering Cranston with her pistol. Her hand was resting on his bruised cheek. He couldn't have believed that a human face could be as white, while life still remained, as hers was then. All the lovely tints that had been such a delight to him, the play of soft reds and browns, had faded as an afterglow fades on the snow.

Dan's glance moved with hers to Cranston. He was standing easily at a distance of a dozen feet; and except for the faintest tremble all over his body, a muscular reaction from the violence of his passion, he had entirely regained his self-composure. This was quite characteristic of the mountain men. They share with the beasts a passion of living that is wholly unknown on the plains; but yet they have a certain quality of imperturbability known nowhere else. Nor is it limited to the native-born mountaineers. No man who intimately knows a member of that curious, keen-eyed little army of naturalists and big-game hunters who go to the north woods every fall, as regularly and seemingly as inexorably as the waterfowl go in spring, can doubt this fact. They seem to have acquired from the silence and the snows an impregnation of that eternal calm and imperturbability that is the wilderness itself. Cranston wasn't in the least afraid. Fear is usually a matter of uncertainty, and he knew exactly where he stood.

It is extremely doubtful if a plainsman would have possessed this knowledge. But a plainsman has not the knowledge of life itself that the mountaineer has, simply because he does not see it in the raw. And he has not half the intimate knowledge of death, an absolute requisite of self-composure. The mountaineer knows life in its simple phases with little tradition or convention to blur the vision. Death is a very intimate acquaintance that may be met in any snowdrift, on any rocky trail; and these conditions are very deadly to any delusions that he has in regard to himself. He acquires an ability to see just where he stands, and of course that means self-possession. This quality had something to do with the remarkable record that the mountain men, such as that magnificent warrior from Tennessee, made in the late war.

Cranston knew exactly what Snowbird would do. Although of a higher order, she was a mountain creature, even as himself. She meant exactly what she said. If he hadn't climbed from Dan's prone body, she would have shot quickly and very straight. If he tried to attack either of them now, her finger would press back before he could blink an eye, and she wouldn't weep any hysterical tears over his dead body. If he kept his distance, she wouldn't shoot at all. He meant to keep his distance. But he did know that he could insult her without danger to himself. And by now his lips had acquired their old curl of scorn.

"I'll go, Snowbird," he said. "I'll leave you with your sissy. But I guess you saw what I did to him—in two minutes."

"I saw. But you must remember he's sick. Now go."

"If he's sick, let him stay in bed—and have a wet nurse. Maybe you can be that."

The lids drooped halfway over her gray eyes, and the slim finger curled more tightly about the trigger. "Oh, I wish I could shoot you, Bert!" she said. She didn't whisper it, or hiss it, or hurl it, or do any of the things most people are supposed to do in moments of violent emotion. She simply said it, and her meaning was all the clearer.

"But you can't. And I'll pound that milk-sop of yours to a jelly every time I see him. I'd think, Snowbird, that you'd want a man."

He started up the trail; and then she did a strange thing. "He's more of a man than you are, right now, Bert," she told him. "He'll prove it some day." Then her arm went about Dan's neck and lifted his head upon her breast; and in Cranston's plain sight, she bent and kissed him, softly, on the lips.

Cranston's answer was an oath. It dripped from his lips, more poisonous, more malicious than the venom of a snake. His features seemed to tighten, the dark lips drew away from his teeth. No words could have made him such an effective answer as this little action of hers. And as he turned up the trail, he called down to her a name—that most dreadful epithet that foul tongues have always used to women held in greatest scorn.

Dan struggled in her arms. The kiss on his lips, the instant before, had not called him out of his half-consciousness. It had scarcely seemed real, rather just an incident in a blissful dream. But the word called down the trail shot out clear and vivid from the silence, just as a physician's face will often leap from the darkness after the anesthesia. Something infinitely warm and tender was holding him, pressing him back against a holy place that throbbed and gave him life and strength; but he knew that this word had to be answered. And only actions, not other words, could be its payment. All the voices of his body called to him to lie still, but the voices of the spirit, those higher, nobler promptings from which no man, to the glory of the breed from which he sprung, can ever quite escape, were stronger yet. He tugged upward, straining. But he didn't even have the strength to break the hold that the soft arm had about his neck.

"Oh, if I could only pull the trigger!" she was crying. "If I could only kill him—"

"Let me," he pleaded. "Give me the pistol. I'll kill him—"

And he would. There was no flinching in the gray eyes that looked up to her. She leaned forward, as if to put the weapon in his hands, but at once drew it back. And then a single sob caught at her throat. An instant later they heard Cranston's laughter as he vanished around the turn of the trail.

For long minutes the two of them were still. The girl still held the man's head upon her breast. The pistol had fallen in the pine needles, and her nervous hand plucked strangely at the leaves of a mountain flower. To Dan's eyes, there was something trancelike, a hint of paralysis and insensibility about her posture. He had never seen her eyes like this. The light that he had always beheld in them had vanished. Their utter darkness startled him.

He sat up straight, and her arm that had been about his neck felt at her side. He took her hand firmly in his, and their eyes met.

"We must go home, Snowbird," he told her simply. "I'm not so badly hurt but that I can make it."

She nodded; but otherwise scarcely seemed to hear. Her eyes still flowed with darkness. And then, before his own eyes, their dark pupils began to contract. The hand he held filled and throbbed with life, and the fingers closed around his. She leaned toward him.

"Listen, Dan," she said quickly. "You heard—didn't you—the last thing that he said?"

"I couldn't help but hear, Snowbird."

Her other hand sought for his. "Then if you heard—payment must be made. You see what I mean, Dan. Maybe you can't see, knowing the girls that live on the plains. You were the cause of his saying it, and you must answer—"

It seemer to Dan that some stern code of the hills, unwritten except in the hearts of their children, inexorable as night, was speaking through her lips. This was no personal thing. In some dim, half-understood way, it went back to the basic code of life.

"People must fight their own fights, up here," she told him. "The laws of the courts that the plains people can appeal to are all too far away. There's no one that can do it, except you. Not my father. My father can't fight your battles here, if your honor is going to stand. It's up to you, Dan. You can't pretend that you didn't hear him. Such as you are, weak and sick to be beaten to a pulp in two minutes, you alone will have to make him answer for it. I came to your aid—and now you must come to mine."

Her fingers no longer clasped his. Strength had come back to him, and his fingers closed down until the blood went out of hers, but she was wholly unconscious of the pain. In reality, she was conscious of nothing except the growing flame in his face. It held her eyes in passionate fascination. His pupils were contracting to little bright dots in the gray irises. The jaw was setting, as she had never seen it before.

"Do you think, Snowbird, that you'd even have to ask me?" he demanded. "Don't you think I understand? And it won't be in your defense—only my own duty."

"But he is so strong—and you are so weak—"

"I won't be so weak forever. I never really cared much about living before. I'll try now, and you'll see—oh, Snowbird, wait and trust me: I understand everything. It's my own fight—when you kissed me, and he cried down that word in anger and jealousy, it put the whole thing on me. No one else can make him answer; no one else has the right. It's my honor, no one else's, that stands or falls."

He lifted her hand to his lips and kissed it again and again.

And for the first time he saw the tears gathering in her dark eyes. "But you fought here, didn't you, Dan?" she asked with painful slowness. "You didn't put up your arms—or try to run away? I didn't come till he had you done, so I didn't see." She looked at him as if her whole joy of life hung on his answer.

"Fought! I would have fought till I died! But that isn't enough, Snowbird. It isn't enough just to fight, in a case like this. A man's got to win! I would have died if you hadn't come. And that's another debt that I have to pay—only that debt I owe to you."

She nodded slowly. The lives of the mountain men are not saved by their women without incurring obligation. She attempted no barren denials. She made no effort to pretend he had not incurred a tremendous debt when she had come with her pistol. It was an unavoidable fact. A life for a life is the code of the mountains.

"Two things I must do before I can ever dare to die," he told her soberly. "One of them is to pay you; the other is to pay Cranston for the thing he said. Maybe the chance will never come for the first of the two; only I'll pray that it will. Maybe it would be kinder to you to pray that it wouldn't; yet I pray that it will! Maybe I can pay that debt only by being always ready, always watching for a chance to save you from any danger, always trying to protect you. You didn't come in time to see the fight I made. Besides—I lost, and little else matters. And that debt to you can't be paid until sometime I fight again—for you—and win." He gasped from his weakness, but went on bravely. "I'll never be able to feel at peace, Snowbird, until I'm tested in the fire before your eyes! I want to show you the things Cranston said of me are not true—that my courage will stand the test.

"It wouldn't be the same, perhaps, with an Eastern girl. Other things matter in the valleys. But I see how it is here; that there is only one standard for men and by that standard they rise or fall. Things in the mountains are down to the essentials."

He paused and struggled for strength to continue. "And I know what you said to him," he went on. "Half-unconscious as I was, I remember every word. Each word just seems to burn into me, Snowbird, and I'll make every one of them good. You said I am a better man than he, and sometime it would be proved—and it's the truth! Maybe in a month, maybe in a year. I'm not going to die from this malady of mine now, Snowbird. I've got too much to live for—too many debts to pay. In the end, I'll prove your words to him."

His eyes grew earnest, and the hard fire went out of them. "It's almost as if you were a queen, a real queen of some great kingdom," he told her, tremulous with a great awe that was stealing over him, as a mist steals over water. "And because I had kissed your fingers, for ever and ever I was your subject, living only to fight your fights—maybe with a dream in the end to kiss your fingers again. When you bent and kissed me on that hillside—for him to see—it was the same: that I was sworn to you, and nothing mattered in my life except the service and love I could give you. And it's more than you ever dream, Snowbird. It's all yours, for your battles and your happiness."

The great pines were silent above them, shadowed and dark. Perhaps they were listening to an age-old story, those vows of service and self-gained worth by which the race has struggled upward from the darkness.

"But I kissed you—once before," she reminded him. The voice was just a whisper, hardly louder than the stir of the leaves in the wind.

"But that kiss didn't count," he told her. "It wasn't at all the same. I loved you then, I think, but it didn't mean what it did today."

"And what—" she leaned toward him, her eyes full on his, "does it mean now?"

"All that's worth while in life, all that matters when everything is said that can be said, and all is done that can be done. And it means, please God, when the debts are paid, that I may have such a kiss again."

"Not until then," she told him, whispering.

"Until then, I make oath that I won't even ask it, or receive it if you should give it. It goes too deep, dearest—and it means too much."

This was their pact. Not until the debts were paid and her word made good would those lips be his again. There was no need for further words. Both of them knew.

In the skies, the gray clouds were gathering swiftly, as always in the mountains. The raindrops were falling one and one, over the forest. The summer was done, and fall had come in earnest.

The rains fell unceasingly for seven days: not a downpour but a constant drizzle that made the distant ridges smoke. The parched earth seemed to smack its lips, and little rivulets began to fall and tumble over the beds of the dry streams. All danger of forest fire was at once removed, and Snowbird was no longer needed as a lookout on old Bald mountain. She went to her own home, her companion back to the valley; and now that his sister had taken his place as housekeeper, Bill had gone down to the lower foothills with a great part of the live stock. Dan spent these rainy days in toil on the hillsides, building himself physically so that he might pay his debts.

It was no great pleasure, these rainy days. He would have greatly liked to have lingered in the square mountain house, listening to the quiet murmur of the rain on the roof and watching Snowbird at her household tasks. She could, as her father had said, make a biscuit. She could also roll up sleeves over trim, brown arms and with entire good humor do a week's laundry for three hard-working men. He would have liked to sit with her, through the long afternoons, as she knitted beside the fireplace—to watch the play of her graceful fingers and perhaps, now and then, to touch her hands when he held the skeins. But none of these things transpired. He drove himself from daylight till dark, developing his body for the tests that were sure to come.

The first few days nearly killed him. He over-exercised in the chill rain, and one anxious night he developed all the symptoms of pneumonia. Such a sickness would have been the one thing needed to make the doctor's prophecy come true. But with Snowbird's aid, and numerous hot drinks he fought it off.

She had made him go to bed, and no human memory could be so dull as to forget the little, whispered message that she gave him with his last spoonful of medicine. She said she'd pray for him, and she meant it too—literal, entreating prayer that could not go unheard. She was a mountain girl, and her beliefs were those of her ancestors—simple and true and wholly without affectation. But he hadn't relaxed thereafter. He knew the time had come to make the test. Night after night he would go to bed half-sick from fatigue, but the mornings would find him fresh. And after two weeks, he knew he had passed the crisis and was on the direct road to complete recovery.

Sometimes he cut wood in the forest: first the felling of some tall pine, then the trimming and hewing into two-foot lengths. The blisters came on his hands, broke and bled, but finally hardened into callosities. He learned the most effective stroke to hurl a shower of chips from beneath the blade. His back and limbs hardened from the handling of heavy wood—and the cough was practically gone. His frame filled out. His face became swarthy from constant exposure. He gained in weight.

One cloudy afternoon in early November found Silas Lennox cutting wood on the ridge behind his house. It was still an open question with him whether he and his daughter would attempt to winter on the Divide. Dan of course wanted to remain, yet there were certain reasons, some very definite and others extremely vague, why the prospect of the winter in the snow fields did not appeal to the mountaineer. In the first place, all signs pointed to a hard season. Although the fall had come late, the snows were exceptionally early. The duck flight was completed two weeks before its usual time, and the rodents had dug their burrows unusually deep. Besides, too many months of snow weigh heavily upon the spirit. The wolf packs sing endlessly on the ridges, and many unpleasant things may happen. On previous years, some of the cabins on the ridges below had human occupants; this winter the whole region, for nearly seventy miles across the mountains to the foothills, would be wholly deserted by human beings. Even the ranger station, twelve miles across a steep ridge, would soon be empty. Of course a few ranchers had homes a few miles beyond the river, but the wild cataracts did not freeze in the coldest of seasons, and there were no bridges. Besides, most of the more prosperous farmers wintered in the valleys. Only a few more days would the road be passable for his car; and no time must be lost in making his decision.

Once the snows came in reality, there was nothing to do but stay. Seventy miles across the uncharted ridges on snowshoes is an undertaking for which even a mountaineer has no fondness. It might be the wisest thing, after all, to load Snowbird and Dan into his car and drive down to the valleys. The fall roundup would soon be completed, Bill would return for a few days from the valleys with new equipment to replace the broken lighting system on the car, and they could avoid the bitter cold and snow that Lennox had known so long. He chopped at a great log and wondered what would suit him better—the comfort and safety of the valleys or the rugged glory of the ridges.

But at that instant, the question of whether or not he would winter on the Divide was decided for him. And an instant was all that was needed. For the period of one breath he forgot to be watchful—and a certain dread Spirit that abides much in the forest saw its chance. Perhaps he had lived too long in the mountains and grown careless of them: an attitude that is usually punished with death. He had just felled a tree, and the trunk was still attached to the stump by a strip of bark to which a little of the wood adhered. He struck a furious blow at it with his ax.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to 'Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

Dan puffed at his pipe, and his eyes looked curiously bright through the film of smoke. "I'm not interested in hearing them," he said.

"It might pay you," Cranston went on. "One of 'em is that one man's word is good as another's in a court—and it wouldn't do you any good to run down and tell tales. A man can light his pipe on the mountain side without the courts being interested. The second thing is—just that I don't think you'd find it a healthy thing to do."

"I suppose, then, that is a threat?"

"It ain't just a threat." Cranston laughed harshly—a single, grim syllable that was the most terrible sound he had yet uttered. "It's a fact. Just try it, Failing. Just make one little step in that direction. You couldn't hide behind a girl's skirts, then. Why, you city sissy, I'd break you to pieces in my hands!"

Few men can make a threat without a muscular accompaniment. Its very utterance releases pent-up emotions, part of which can only pour forth in muscular expression. And anger is a primitive thing, going down to the most mysterious depths of a man's nature. As Cranston spoke, his lip curled, his dark fingers clenched on his thick palm, and he half leaned forward.

Dan knocked out his pipe on the log. It was the only sound in that whole mountain realm; all the lesser sounds were stilled. The two men stood face to face, Dan tranquil, Cranston shaken by passion.

"I give you," said Dan with entire coldness, "an opportunity to take that back. Just about four seconds."

He stood very straight as he spoke, and his eyes did not waver in the least. It would not be the truth to say that his heart was not leaping like a wild thing in his breast. A dark mist was spreading like madness over his brain; but yet he was striving to keep his thoughts clear. Stealthily, without seeming to do so, he was setting his muscles for a spring.

The only answer to his words was a laugh—a roaring laugh of scorn from Cranston's dark lips. In his laughter, his intent, catlike vigilance relaxed. Dan saw a chance; feeble though it was, it was the only chance he had. And his long body leaped like a serpent through the air.

Physical superior though he was Cranston would have repelled the attack with his rifle if he had had a chance. His blood was already at the murder heat—a point always quickly reached in Cranston—and the dark, hot fumes in his brain were simply nothing more nor less than the most poisonous, bitter hatred. No other word exists. If his class of degenerate mountain men had no other accomplishment, they could hate. All their lives they practiced the emotion: hatred of their neighbors, hatred of law, hatred of civilization in all its forms. Besides, this kind of hillman habitually fought his duels with rifles. Hands were not deadly enough.

But Dan was past his guard before he had time to raise his gun. The whole attack ws one of the most astounding surprises of Cranston's life. Dan's body struck his, his fists flailed, and to protect himself, Cranston was obliged to drop the rifle. They staggered, as if in some weird dance, on the trail; and their arms clasped in a clinch.

For a long instant they stood straining, seemingly motionless. Cranston's powerful body had stood up well under the shock of Dan's leap. It was a hand-to-hand battle now. The rifle had slid on down the hillside, to be caught in a clump of brush twenty feet below. Dan called on every ounce of his strength, because he knew what mercy he might expect if Cranston mastered him. The battles of the mountains were battles to the death.

They flung back and forth, wrenching shoulders, lashing fists, teeth and feet and fingers. There were no Marquis of Queensberry rules in this battle. Again and again Dan sent home his blows; but they all seemed ineffective. By now, Cranston had completely overcome the moment's advantage the other had obtained by the power of his leap. He hurled Dan from the clinch and lashed at him with hard fists.

It is a very common thing to hear of a silent fight. But it is really a more rare occurrence than most people believe. It is true that serpents will often fight in the strangest, most eerie silence; but human beings are not serpents. They partake more of the qualities of the meat-eaters—the wolves and felines. After the first instant, the noise of the fight aroused the whole hillside. The sound of blows was in itself notable, and besides, both of the men were howling the primordial battle cries of hatred and vengeance.

For two long minutes Dan fought with the strength of desperation, summoning at last all that mysterious reserve force with which all men are born. But he was playing a losing game. The malady with which he had suffered had taken too much of his vigor. Even as he struggled, it seemed to him that the vista about him, the dark pines, the colored leaves of the perennial shrubbery, the yellow path were all obscured in a strange, white mist. A great wind roared in his ears—and his heart was evidently about to shiver to pieces.

But still he fought on, not daring to yield. He could no longer parry Cranston's blows. The latter's arms went around him in one of those deadly holds that wrestlers know; and Dan struggled in vain to free himself. Cranston's face itself seemed hideous and unreal in the mist that was creeping over him. He did not recognize the curious thumping sound as Cranston's fists on his flesh. And now Cranston had hurled him off his feet.

Nothing mattered further. He had fought the best he could. This cruel beast could pounce on him at will and hammer away his life. But still he struggled. Except for the constant play of his muscles, his almost unconscious effort to free himself that kept one of Cranston's arms busy holding him down, that fight on the mountain path might have come to a sudden end. Human bodies can stand a terrific punishment; but Dan's was weakened from the ravages of his disease. Besides, Cranston would soon have both hands and both feet free for the work, and when these four terrible weapons are used at once, the issue—soon or late—can never be in doubt.

But even now, consciousness still lingered. Dan could hear his enemy's curses—and far up the trail, he heard another, stranger sound. It sounded like some one running.

And then he dimly knew that Cranston was climbing from his body. Voices were speaking—quick, commanding voices just over him. Above Cranston's savage curses another voice rang clear, and to Dan's ears, glorious beyond all human utterance.

He opened his tortured eyes. The mists lifted from in front of them, and the whole drama was revealed. It had not been sudden mercy that had driven Cranston from his body, just when his victim's failing unconsciousness would have put him completely in his power. Rather it was something black and ominous that even now was pointed squarely at Cranston's breast.

None too soon, a ranger of the hill had heard the sounds of the struggle, and had left the trysting place at the spring to come to Dan's aid. It was Snowbird, very pale but wholly self-sufficient and determined and intent. Her pistol was cocked and ready.

CHAPTER III

Dan Failing was really not badly hurt. The quick, lashing blows had not done more than severely bruise the flesh of his face; and the mists of unconsciousness that had been falling over him were more nearly the result of his own tremendous physical exertion. Now these mists were rising.

"Go—go away," the girl was commanding. "I think you've killed him."

Dan opened his eyes to find her kneeling close beside him, but still covering Cranston with her pistol. Her hand was resting on his bruised cheek. He couldn't have believed that a human face could be as white, while life still remained, as hers was then. All the lovely tints that had been such a delight to him, the play of soft reds and browns, had faded as an afterglow fades on the snow.

Dan's glance moved with hers to Cranston. He was standing easily at a distance of a dozen feet; and except for the faintest tremble all over his body, a muscular reaction from the violence of his passion, he had entirely regained his self-composure. This was quite characteristic of the mountain men. They share with the beasts a passion of living that is wholly unknown on the plains; but yet they have a certain quality of imperturbability known nowhere else. Nor is it limited to the native-born mountaineers. No man who intimately knows a member of that curious, keen-eyed little army of naturalists and big-game hunters who go to the north woods every fall, as regularly and seemingly as inexorably as the waterfowl go in spring, can doubt this fact. They seem to have acquired from the silence and the snows an impregnation of that eternal calm and imperturbability that is the wilderness itself. Cranston wasn't in the least afraid. Fear is usually a matter of uncertainty, and he knew exactly where he stood.

It is extremely doubtful if a plainsman would have possessed this knowledge. But a plainsman has not the knowledge of life itself that the mountaineer has, simply because he does not see it in the raw. And he has not half the intimate knowledge of death, an absolute requisite of self-composure. The mountaineer knows life in its simple phases with little tradition or convention to blur the vision. Death is a very intimate acquaintance that may be met in any snowdrift, on any rocky trail; and these conditions are very deadly to any delusions that he has in regard to himself. He acquires an ability to see just where he stands, and of course that means self-possession. This quality had something to do with the remarkable record that the mountain men, such as that magnificent warrior from Tennessee, made in the late war.

Cranston knew exactly what Snowbird would do. Although of a higher order, she was a mountain creature, even as himself. She meant exactly what she said. If he hadn't climbed from Dan's prone body, she would have shot quickly and very straight. If he tried to attack either of them now, her finger would press back before he could blink an eye, and she wouldn't weep any hysterical tears over his dead body. If he kept his distance, she wouldn't shoot at all. He meant to keep his distance. But he did know that he could insult her without danger to himself. And by now his lips had acquired their old curl of scorn.

"I'll go, Snowbird," he said. "I'll leave you with your sissy. But I guess you saw what I did to him—in two minutes."

"I saw. But you must remember he's sick. Now go."

"If he's sick, let him stay in bed—and have a wet nurse. Maybe you can be that."

The lids drooped halfway over her gray eyes, and the slim finger curled more tightly about the trigger. "Oh, I wish I could shoot you, Bert!" she said. She didn't whisper it, or hiss it, or hurl it, or do any of the things most people are supposed to do in moments of violent emotion. She simply said it, and her meaning was all the clearer.

"But you can't. And I'll pound that milk-sop of yours to a jelly every time I see him. I'd think, Snowbird, that you'd want a man."

He started up the trail; and then she did a strange thing. "He's more of a man than you are, right now, Bert," she told him. "He'll prove it some day." Then her arm went about Dan's neck and lifted his head upon her breast; and in Cranston's plain sight, she bent and kissed him, softly, on the lips.

Cranston's answer was an oath. It dripped from his lips, more poisonous, more malicious than the venom of a snake. His features seemed to tighten, the dark lips drew away from his teeth. No words could have made him such an effective answer as this little action of hers. And as he turned up the trail, he called down to her a name—that most dreadful epithet that foul tongues have always used to women held in greatest scorn.

Dan struggled in her arms. The kiss on his lips, the instant before, had not called him out of his half-consciousness. It had scarcely seemed real, rather just an incident in a blissful dream. But the word called down the trail shot out clear and vivid from the silence, just as a physician's face will often leap from the darkness after the anesthesia. Something infinitely warm and tender was holding him, pressing him back against a holy place that throbbed and gave him life and strength; but he knew that this word had to be answered. And only actions, not other words, could be its payment. All the voices of his body called to him to lie still, but the voices of the spirit, those higher, nobler promptings from which no man, to the glory of the breed from which he sprung, can ever quite escape, were stronger yet. He tugged upward, straining. But he didn't even have the strength to break the hold that the soft arm had about his neck.

"Oh, if I could only pull the trigger!" she was crying. "If I could only kill him—"

"Let me," he pleaded. "Give me the pistol. I'll kill him—"

And he would. There was no flinching in the gray eyes that looked up to her. She leaned forward, as if to put the weapon in his hands, but at once drew it back. And then a single sob caught at her throat. An instant later they heard Cranston's laughter as he vanished around the turn of the trail.

For long minutes the two of them were still. The girl still held the man's head upon her breast. The pistol had fallen in the pine needles, and her nervous hand plucked strangely at the leaves of a mountain flower. To Dan's eyes, there was something trancelike, a hint of paralysis and insensibility about her posture. He had never seen her eyes like this. The light that he had always beheld in them had vanished. Their utter darkness startled him.

He sat up straight, and her arm that had been about his neck felt at her side. He took her hand firmly in his, and their eyes met.

"We must go home, Snowbird," he told her simply. "I'm not so badly hurt but that I can make it."

She nodded; but otherwise scarcely seemed to hear. Her eyes still flowed with darkness. And then, before his own eyes, their dark pupils began to contract. The hand he held filled and throbbed with life, and the fingers closed around his. She leaned toward him.

"Listen, Dan," she said quickly. "You heard—didn't you—the last thing that he said?"

"I couldn't help but hear, Snowbird."

Her other hand sought for his. "Then if you heard—payment must be made. You see what I mean, Dan. Maybe you can't see, knowing the girls that live on the plains. You were the cause of his saying it, and you must answer—"

It seemer to Dan that some stern code of the hills, unwritten except in the hearts of their children, inexorable as night, was speaking through her lips. This was no personal thing. In some dim, half-understood way, it went back to the basic code of life.

"People must fight their own fights, up here," she told him. "The laws of the courts that the plains people can appeal to are all too far away. There's no one that can do it, except you. Not my father. My father can't fight your battles here, if your honor is going to stand. It's up to you, Dan. You can't pretend that you didn't hear him. Such as you are, weak and sick to be beaten to a pulp in two minutes, you alone will have to make him answer for it. I came to your aid—and now you must come to mine."

Her fingers no longer clasped his. Strength had come back to him, and his fingers closed down until the blood went out of hers, but she was wholly unconscious of the pain. In reality, she was conscious of nothing except the growing flame in his face. It held her eyes in passionate fascination. His pupils were contracting to little bright dots in the gray irises. The jaw was setting, as she had never seen it before.

"Do you think, Snowbird, that you'd even have to ask me?" he demanded. "Don't you think I understand? And it won't be in your defense—only my own duty."

"But he is so strong—and you are so weak—"

"I won't be so weak forever. I never really cared much about living before. I'll try now, and you'll see—oh, Snowbird, wait and trust me: I understand everything. It's my own fight—when you kissed me, and he cried down that word in anger and jealousy, it put the whole thing on me. No one else can make him answer; no one else has the right. It's my honor, no one else's, that stands or falls."

He lifted her hand to his lips and kissed it again and again.

And for the first time he saw the tears gathering in her dark eyes. "But you fought here, didn't you, Dan?" she asked with painful slowness. "You didn't put up your arms—or try to run away? I didn't come till he had you done, so I didn't see." She looked at him as if her whole joy of life hung on his answer.

"Fought! I would have fought till I died! But that isn't enough, Snowbird. It isn't enough just to fight, in a case like this. A man's got to win! I would have died if you hadn't come. And that's another debt that I have to pay—only that debt I owe to you."

She nodded slowly. The lives of the mountain men are not saved by their women without incurring obligation. She attempted no barren denials. She made no effort to pretend he had not incurred a tremendous debt when she had come with her pistol. It was an unavoidable fact. A life for a life is the code of the mountains.

"Two things I must do before I can ever dare to die," he told her soberly. "One of them is to pay you; the other is to pay Cranston for the thing he said. Maybe the chance will never come for the first of the two; only I'll pray that it will. Maybe it would be kinder to you to pray that it wouldn't; yet I pray that it will! Maybe I can pay that debt only by being always ready, always watching for a chance to save you from any danger, always trying to protect you. You didn't come in time to see the fight I made. Besides—I lost, and little else matters. And that debt to you can't be paid until sometime I fight again—for you—and win." He gasped from his weakness, but went on bravely. "I'll never be able to feel at peace, Snowbird, until I'm tested in the fire before your eyes! I want to show you the things Cranston said of me are not true—that my courage will stand the test.

"It wouldn't be the same, perhaps, with an Eastern girl. Other things matter in the valleys. But I see how it is here; that there is only one standard for men and by that standard they rise or fall. Things in the mountains are down to the essentials."

He paused and struggled for strength to continue. "And I know what you said to him," he went on. "Half-unconscious as I was, I remember every word. Each word just seems to burn into me, Snowbird, and I'll make every one of them good. You said I am a better man than he, and sometime it would be proved—and it's the truth! Maybe in a month, maybe in a year. I'm not going to die from this malady of mine now, Snowbird. I've got too much to live for—too many debts to pay. In the end, I'll prove your words to him."

His eyes grew earnest, and the hard fire went out of them. "It's almost as if you were a queen, a real queen of some great kingdom," he told her, tremulous with a great awe that was stealing over him, as a mist steals over water. "And because I had kissed your fingers, for ever and ever I was your subject, living only to fight your fights—maybe with a dream in the end to kiss your fingers again. When you bent and kissed me on that hillside—for him to see—it was the same: that I was sworn to you, and nothing mattered in my life except the service and love I could give you. And it's more than you ever dream, Snowbird. It's all yours, for your battles and your happiness."

The great pines were silent above them, shadowed and dark. Perhaps they were listening to an age-old story, those vows of service and self-gained worth by which the race has struggled upward from the darkness.

"But I kissed you—once before," she reminded him. The voice was just a whisper, hardly louder than the stir of the leaves in the wind.

"But that kiss didn't count," he told her. "It wasn't at all the same. I loved you then, I think, but it didn't mean what it did today."

"And what—" she leaned toward him, her eyes full on his, "does it mean now?"

"All that's worth while in life, all that matters when everything is said that can be said, and all is done that can be done. And it means, please God, when the debts are paid, that I may have such a kiss again."

"Not until then," she told him, whispering.

"Until then, I make oath that I won't even ask it, or receive it if you should give it. It goes too deep, dearest—and it means too much."

This was their pact. Not until the debts were paid and her word made good would those lips be his again. There was no need for further words. Both of them knew.

In the skies, the gray clouds were gathering swiftly, as always in the mountains. The raindrops were falling one and one, over the forest. The summer was done, and fall had come in earnest.

The rains fell unceasingly for seven days: not a downpour but a constant drizzle that made the distant ridges smoke. The parched earth seemed to smack its lips, and little rivulets began to fall and tumble over the beds of the dry streams. All danger of forest fire was at once removed, and Snowbird was no longer needed as a lookout on old Bald mountain. She went to her own home, her companion back to the valley; and now that his sister had taken his place as housekeeper, Bill had gone down to the lower foothills with a great part of the live stock. Dan spent these rainy days in toil on the hillsides, building himself physically so that he might pay his debts.

It was no great pleasure, these rainy days. He would have greatly liked to have lingered in the square mountain house, listening to the quiet murmur of the rain on the roof and watching Snowbird at her household tasks. She could, as her father had said, make a biscuit. She could also roll up sleeves over trim, brown arms and with entire good humor do a week's laundry for three hard-working men. He would have liked to sit with her, through the long afternoons, as she knitted beside the fireplace—to watch the play of her graceful fingers and perhaps, now and then, to touch her hands when he held the skeins. But none of these things transpired. He drove himself from daylight till dark, developing his body for the tests that were sure to come.

The first few days nearly killed him. He over-exercised in the chill rain, and one anxious night he developed all the symptoms of pneumonia. Such a sickness would have been the one thing needed to make the doctor's prophecy come true. But with Snowbird's aid, and numerous hot drinks he fought it off.

She had made him go to bed, and no human memory could be so dull as to forget the little, whispered message that she gave him with his last spoonful of medicine. She said she'd pray for him, and she meant it too—literal, entreating prayer that could not go unheard. She was a mountain girl, and her beliefs were those of her ancestors—simple and true and wholly without affectation. But he hadn't relaxed thereafter. He knew the time had come to make the test. Night after night he would go to bed half-sick from fatigue, but the mornings would find him fresh. And after two weeks, he knew he had passed the crisis and was on the direct road to complete recovery.

Sometimes he cut wood in the forest: first the felling of some tall pine, then the trimming and hewing into two-foot lengths. The blisters came on his hands, broke and bled, but finally hardened into callosities. He learned the most effective stroke to hurl a shower of chips from beneath the blade. His back and limbs hardened from the handling of heavy wood—and the cough was practically gone. His frame filled out. His face became swarthy from constant exposure. He gained in weight.

One cloudy afternoon in early November found Silas Lennox cutting wood on the ridge behind his house. It was still an open question with him whether he and his daughter would attempt to winter on the Divide. Dan of course wanted to remain, yet there were certain reasons, some very definite and others extremely vague, why the prospect of the winter in the snow fields did not appeal to the mountaineer. In the first place, all signs pointed to a hard season. Although the fall had come late, the snows were exceptionally early. The duck flight was completed two weeks before its usual time, and the rodents had dug their burrows unusually deep. Besides, too many months of snow weigh heavily upon the spirit. The wolf packs sing endlessly on the ridges, and many unpleasant things may happen. On previous years, some of the cabins on the ridges below had human occupants; this winter the whole region, for nearly seventy miles across the mountains to the foothills, would be wholly deserted by human beings. Even the ranger station, twelve miles across a steep ridge, would soon be empty. Of course a few ranchers had homes a few miles beyond the river, but the wild cataracts did not freeze in the coldest of seasons, and there were no bridges. Besides, most of the more prosperous farmers wintered in the valleys. Only a few more days would the road be passable for his car; and no time must be lost in making his decision.

Once the snows came in reality, there was nothing to do but stay. Seventy miles across the uncharted ridges on snowshoes is an undertaking for which even a mountaineer has no fondness. It might be the wisest thing, after all, to load Snowbird and Dan into his car and drive down to the valleys. The fall roundup would soon be completed, Bill would return for a few days from the valleys with new equipment to replace the broken lighting system on the car, and they could avoid the bitter cold and snow that Lennox had known so long. He chopped at a great log and wondered what would suit him better—the comfort and safety of the valleys or the rugged glory of the ridges.

But at that instant, the question of whether or not he would winter on the Divide was decided for him. And an instant was all that was needed. For the period of one breath he forgot to be watchful—and a certain dread Spirit that abides much in the forest saw its chance. Perhaps he had lived too long in the mountains and grown careless of them: an attitude that is usually punished with death. He had just felled a tree, and the trunk was still attached to the stump by a strip of bark to which a little of the wood adhered. He struck a furious blow at it with his ax.

The Most Modern Beet Sugar Plant In the World Is At Belmond, Iowa

THE plant is completed and has just finished its first campaign with over 7,400,000 pounds of sugar, 3,900,000 pounds dried beet pulp, and 3,800,000 pounds of molasses.

It has been said that, having a sugar plant within a radius of thirty miles of a farm, makes that farm worth from $50 to $100 an acre more than the same land without a sugar plant.

This plant is operated and controlled by expert sugar men of proven worth, and business men known throughout the country for their conservative, honest and good business judgment.

The plant was organized without the large promotion expenses of enterprises of this kind and EVERY DOLLAR SUBSCRIBED WAS USED IN THE PLANT.

At the time of subscription, thousands of dollars were returned to prospective investors, because the management wanted to keep the capitalization SMALL. Not like other concerns, they would not take money which they thought would be a surplus and thereby lead to extravagances.

The Capitalization was too small, and did not fully cover cost of land, plant and equipment.

The plant, in it's entirety, cost over $1,500,000, and total capitalization was $1,100,000. Therefore, the Officers and Directors are herewith launching a campaign for the disposal of

$400,000 WORTH OF 7 PER CENT CUMULATIVE PREFERRED STOCK WITH A BONUS OF COMMON STOCK

The people of Wright County are justly proud of this plant, and want to keep it a home industry. Other communities are clamoring for such a plant. SHOW YOUR LOYALTY. THIS IS A MOBILIZATION. Just like everyone bought Liberty Bonds to mobilize our Government's forces against aggressors, so we, the people of Belmond and it's vicinity, are mobilizing our forces, physically, financially and morally, to make Belmond a place to earn more money, grow, make property values worth what they should be worth, and stand up for successful industry. We have faith in the community and the United States and know that the foundations that have been laid are RIGHT, and that as long as America is always to be the Leading Nation of the World, Belmond is to be the Home of the Most Modern Sugar Beet Plant in the World.

SHORT COURSE GOES THRU IN FINE SHAPE

Ex-Service Man Starts Campaign For Post Office

Leo. R. Kenefick, Well Known Local Soldier, Circulates Petition For Office Next Term.

WHOLE TOWN IS BEHIND HIM

Last week Thursday the local Post of the American Legion started the ball rolling for placing Leo R. Kenefick, one of this city's best known young men and ex-soldiers, for the office of postmaster during the next term. In an emphatic resolution the candidacy of Kenefick was heartily endorsed and the full power and strength of the Legion in every way pledged to back him up.

Kenefick a day or two later circulated a petition among the business men of Belmond for their support in his candidacy, and without hardly an exception secured the names of practically every business man, merchant and professional man in the city in hearty endorsement.

Kenefick will make one of the best men in the place that Belmond has ever had. He is thoroly qualified in all ways to successfully conduct the affairs of the office, has had experience in the office before, and is more or less familiar with the duties of the place. He is one of this city's best known ex-service men, having enlisted at the beginning of the war in the first division, and was among the first American soldiers overseas and in the trenches. He saw heavy fighting in numerous battles, and was by mustard gas in the Argonne.

There seems but little doubt of the office being granted to him. He has the unqualified endorsement of the great majority of Belmond citizens, as his petition testifies. The necessary steps will be taken to let the proper political men know of his standing here, and they will doubtless see the matter in the same light as Bemond people.

Following are the names of the business men who have placed their endorsement on Kenefick's candidacy for the office of post master:

C. O. Fitts, C. C. Benson, H. F. Luick, D. E. Packard, C. N. Hildebrand, J. P. Byers, M. C. Barry, C. M. Morse, A. L. Luick, E. L. Madsen, W. T. Gfeller, O. L. Varland, R. A. Rankins, Lee W. Stacy, C. W. Miller, J. S. White, H. G. Nordschow.

Louis Rierson, Claude H. Veeder, Crist Rise, John Zook, Wm. H. Wolle, S. U. Leinbach, F. P. Dibble, C. M. White, A. B. Cuppett, B. J. Johnson, Dora Wright, Nellie Robinson, C S. Robinson, O. R. Hanson, George Potiriades. A. H. Foss, L. O. Skovlin, W. H. Purdy, Cato C. Griesy.

The present postmaster, R. C. Morse, has conducted the affairs of the office in a manner that has been universally pleasing and satisfactory, and the candidacy of Kenefick is not in any way seeking to take the office from him. The change in administration makes it probable that there will be a change in the office here, and in such case Mr. Kenefick should be given the place. Mr. Morse has made one of the best post masters the town has ever had, and his successor will have a high standard to follow to conduct the duties of the office in s satisfactory a manner as has "Rufe."

There are no other announced candidates for the place, and therefore the candidacy of Mr. Kenefick, coming first, should be given first consideration by those who have the filling of the office in charge. With the united support of the town, it is evident that the people want him as their next servant.

Belmond's biggest event of the winter, the two-day Short Course, went thru as planned, and was entirely successful from every standpoint.

There was a large crowd in attendance during both days, and much interest and enthusiasm was shown by the farmers.

The exhibits were many and varied and drew a large amount of comment for their excellance. A number of articles not on the list of premiums were brought in, notably some from Grant township, which, while they could not draw a premium, nevertheless drew many compliments from the admiring crowds.

The success of the short course was due in a large measure to the untiring efforts of the executive committee to enlist the services of city and country folks in putting the short course across. This was the first of its kind for several years and it is hoped that its success will result in making it an annual affair.

The following list of winners at the short course will show the wide variety of exhibits, and the interest in the course. The amounts on some of the exhibits could not be given, as several classes were added during the course and the amount of the premiums had not been determined.

Pleasant township took first place, with Grant running it a close second.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Judgement in the sum of $492.89 and costs has been awarded Geo. A. Pabts vs. H. G. Nordschow of Belmond. Suit was brought to recover on a note.

Judgement in favor of the Farmers Savings Bank (?) of Belmond and against W. J. Humphrey in the sum of $269.76 and costs has been entered of record.

The case of T. R. Beveredge vs. Consumers Oil Co. of Goldfield has been settled and case dismissed. Action was brought in the sum of $65 for labor plant, etc., furnished said company.

Deputy collector Weiser will be at the court house in Clarion from February 11th to the 23rd, inclusive, for the purpose of asisting tax payers in making out their 1920 income tax reports.

The grand jury made its report Monday, having returned several indictments. Alix Sozorsky, of Belmond, who is already in the county jail, was held for further investigation for the alleged manufacture and sale of whiskey.

The Franklin county sheriff came to Clarion, Tuesday, and arrested Frank Corbin, who was wanted at Hampton on statutory charges preferred by a young girl. Corbin had been here but a day or two and was engaged in hauling tile.

Herbert Bige was indicted by the grand jury on four counts in connection with the Goldfield and Woolstock robberies. For breaking and entering his bond was fixed at $2000 on each count; for larceny from buildings the amounts were fixed at $1200 and $1300, respectively. Bonds for all of above offenses have already been filed.

Contractor Bailey of Belmond has had his case against the Great Western transferred to the federal court. Plaintiff alleged damages from the raildroad company in the sum of $4,280 for the failure to deliver empty cars for the loading of gravel. Damages are computed at the rate of $120 for each twenty-four hour day that men, teams and machinery were idle by the alleged non-delivery of cars according to contract.

An action for divorce was placed on file in the clerk's office by Beulah Keena against James A. Keena. Plaintiff's petition states that the parties to the case were married in Clarion on November 29, 1914, and have been residents of Eagle Grove the past eight years. Cruel and inhuman treatment is alleged and plaintiff and three children are now living with her mother. An absolute divorce is asked by Mrs. Keena. She also asks for possession of the household goods, $60 a month alimony, costs of case and attorney fees and the care and custody of the children.

Tuesday morning a jury was empaneled to try the case of Frank Haupt vs. Fred Meyers et al. A special interest attached to the court routine since the venire included a number of women citizens, the first time in Wright county history. Only a few of these sought to evade jury duty, some teachers being excused and others for family reasons. Thru fault of defendant, verdict was rendered plaintiff for the sum asked, $60.

In the case of Jack Hogan, a minor, by his next friend, Fred Lynch, vs. Harry Brooks, the jury secured consisted of ten men and two women. In this case, young Hogan, who is a son of "Sis" Brooks Hogan Ottinger, of Des Moines, lays claim to $1,000, said to be due him from his uncle, Harry Brooks, of Cornelia, the same being part of the estate of the plaintiff's grandmother, Mary Brooks, deceased. The case is one of a series of litigations brought before both district and supreme court in the past several years. When the testimony was about concluded, Judge Wright took the case from the jury because of insufficient evidence, and directed a verdict for the defendant.

Thursday and part of Friday were consumed in taking testimony in the divorce case of Aleta McDowell vs. W. H. McDowell. Both parties have been residents of Clarion for the past two years. In her petition the wife alleges her husband to have been cruel and inhuman. The case was tried before Judge Wright. A goodly number of witnesses were called on each side, but the evidence seemed not to be conclusive on either. Considerable interest has been taken in this case, and the court room was filled with spectators. Recess was taken Friday until Monday morning, when the testimony was resumed and concluded shortly after dinner. The pleas of the attorneys followed and were both eloquent and forceful at times. The plaintiff was represented by Hill, Price and Burnquist and for the defendant Birdsall, McGrath & Archerd. The judge has the matter under advisement at the time of going to press.

Farm Bureau Notes

EVERGREEN SHORT COURSE VERY SUCCESSFUL

The people of Evergreen district, Eagle Grove township, believe in living up to their reputation in Wright county in putting on real community affairs. The short course which they just completed Saturday night is evidence that people are still on the job in putting on community entertainments.

It is quie widely known hruout the county that Evergreen district has an organization of its own and is quite capable of putting on its own entertainments and talent which it has at its command at all times. This community organization lagged some what during the war period but since then the old time spirit has returned and now the people of Evergreen are working again in full sway for all movements which are for the betterment of the entire community.

The outside talent which was used in putting on the Evergreen short course consisted of Harry W. Warner, who lectured on Wright county soils and gave actual demonstrations of testing samples of soil brought by local farmers; also, F. G. Churchill who lectured on farm crops and who judged the farm crops exhibits which were brought by the local farmers. Despite the bad weather and poor roads the first day session of this short course was well attended and the people who are always loyal to community spirit turned out in a body.

The second day of the short course which was held Saturday was well attended and the farmers who had the pleasure of attending listened with interest to the lecture by Miss Pertha Holden, assistant state leader home demonstration agents. E. L. Quaife, animal husbandry expert from Ames, and Peder Pederson, the Cedar Falls farmer, who gave a splendid address in the evening.

It is hoped that the short course spirit will continue to grow in Eagle Grove township and that the successful short course which has just passed will be kept in mind in making plans for the short course for next year, which will no doubt be planned by the committee very soon in order to make a great success for next season.

WAGES OF HIRED MAN TRIPLE IN TEN YEARS

Wages of men hired on farms have more than doubled in the last ten years, tripled in the last twenty and were more than four times higher last year than they were in 1879. These changes are shown by statistics of the department of agriculture at Washington.

Wages paid by the month, without board, averaged $64.95 for the country as a whole last year; 10 years ago they averaged $27.50 and in 1879 they were $10.43.

Day labor at harvest time last year averaged $4.36 without board and at other than harvest time $3.59. Ten years ago harvest time labor was paid $1.82 and at other than harvest time $1.38. In 1894 harvest time labor was paid $1.13 and nonharvest time labor 81 cents a day.

California and Nevada farmers paid their labor the highest prices for labor without board, the average in those states last year having been $107 a month. The lowest average was in Mississippi, where $41 was paid.

AGRICULTURAL GRADUATES GO BACK TO THE FARM

Of 599 young men who graduated in animal husbandry course at Iowa State College in the period from 1910 to 1920, 82 per cent, or 490, are today engaged in agricultural work, the in farming.

That's the answer that is given at Ames to the criticism sometimes urged, that graduates of agricultural courses do not go into agriculture. It is doubtful if the proportion of college graduates trained for other fields or professions and who stick to those fields is as large as this record of animal husbandry graduates.

Of the 490 men in agricultural work, 309 are giving themselves wholly to farming, while eight others are interested in farming along with other activities. Twenty-four of the animal husbandry graduates of the past ten years are connected with farm journals. Sixty-one are connected with agricultural colleges, experiment stations, extension departments, secondary school instruction in agriculture, and in work with the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Forty-four of the graduates are county agriculture agents. About 31 are connected with farm equipment companies, packing companies, feed companies and similar businesses as agricultural specialists. Six are secretaries of breed associations. There is no accurate record of about 9 per cent of the total number of graduates and a little more than 2 per cent are deceased, most of them losing their lives in the recent war.

THE AFFECT OF AMERICAN CHARITY

Child-feeding in Vienna and the Austrian provinces, financed by the European Relief Council, is saving the lives of thousands of boys and girls, according to a report received here by Lafayette Young, Sr., state chairman. Since the feeding began more than a year ago, great improvement has been observed in the appearance of the children. They now are bright-eyed, and fat-cheeked, and clothed sufficiently to come to the stations for their daily ration. School attendance has increased 25 per cent.

The report of existing conditions in Vienna were made by Dr. Pirquet, who is the medical expert in charge of the Austrian capital. He says 300,000 boys and girls are being fed in Austria. This is about one-third of the number needing supplementary feedings, which represents three-quarters of the child population of the country.

The daily ration, supplied at the relief kitchens, is supposed to be a supplementary to the meals received in the homes of the childen. This fact is explained to all children at the stations, but for many of the children this daily rations is their only food. This is true of 7 per cent of the children in the poorer homes of Vienna.

In this district of Lichtenhal, it is said, many children are living naked, in sunless, smoky rooms. Their lives are endangered by the odor of the cellar, which they breath constantly, and they always endure the pangs of hunger. In Thurgasses and Salzegrasse, many children suffer the effects of bad housing, bad ventilation and lack of food. Entire families huddle in misery,—children of 17 years who look no more than 12, discharged soldiers without hope for the future, and women with babies who used to dwell in homes of comfort.

Herbert Hoover, chairman of the European Relief Council, is asking the American people to save the lives of these helpless babies and boys and girls of Eastern and Central Europe. Eight large relief organizations have combined in the movement to raise $33,000,000 to save 3,500,000 children between now and the next harvest. Ten dollars will provide clothing, food and medical service for one child. Each American home is asked to entertain one child "Invisible guest," at its table. Checks may be sent to Homer A. Miller, state treasurer of European Relief Council, Des Moines, Iowa.

MINNEAPOLIS SEEKS HUBBY IN HAMPTON

Hampton Chronicle: Looking for a husband! That's what Mrs. J. W. Hooks, a Minneapolis woman, has been busy doing the past several days. With a handsome and high powered automobile she spent a couple of days in Hampton this week in an effort to trace rumors of her husband's travels, or whereabouts.

She was accompanied by her chauffeur, who claimed to have passed a wrecked automobile six miles north of Hampton, near Chapin, one day last week and which is described as a car identical with a car owned by Mr. Hooks and which disappeared at about the same time he left for parts unknown. The aforesaid party also stated that he passed a Red Cross ambulance carrying a "passenger" toward Mason City.

No one in Hampton, Chapin, or Sheffield could be found who had even heard of any such automobile accident. No one at the newspaper offices, or at the hospitals here, or any member of the police force or the sheriff's office had even heard of the accident. Mason City newspapers and hospitals gave similar reports. However, the "guy" insisted that he passed the wrecked automobile and saw the Red Cross ambulance. Where the "wrecked" automobile went, nobody knows. It vanished like an ice cream cone on hot summer day.

Mr. Hooks is said to be a large automobile dealer in Minneapolis. The general opinion here is that somebody is having a pipe dream, and this could easily happen with a fellow who had just left Des Moines where there is a good supply of old stock on hand. There are several stories afloat as to the manner of Mr. Hooks' disappearance, but the Minneapolis police force are unable to unravel anything of importance which would lead to any direct knowledge of the affair. Ditto, the Iowa police and everybody else.

Mrs. Hook and her party of detectives were in Hampton, Monday and Tuesday, and drove north to look over the location of the "automobile wreck." The heavy snow of Sunday would of course have covered up any traces of the wreck, consequently they did not meet with any success in locating tracks. They left here Tuesday afternoon, and probably went back to Minneapolis.

FARMERS CANNOT AFFORD TO LET MANURE GO TO WASTE

Farmers cannot afford to let manure lie around the barnyards and go to waste.

Dried sheep manure is being offered for sale in carload lots in Illinois at $30 a ton. A ton of this material contains about 50 pounds of nitrogen, 18 pounds of phosphorus and 23 pounds of potassium. One hundred bushels of corn and the fodder removed from the soil contains about 150 pounds of nitrogen, 23 pounds of phosphorus and 71 pounds of potassium.

It will be seen that the ton of sheep manure contains 33.3 per cent as much nitrogen as is required to raise 100 bushels of corn and the fodder, 77 per cent as much phosphorus and 42 per cent as much potassium.

The general average of a number of analyses made by various investigtors from manures from cattle, horses and mixed, shows that a ton of dry manure contains 38 pounds nitrogen, 7.6 pounds of phosphorus and 30.4 pounds potassium. A ton of fresh manure from the farm consists of about three-fourths water, but it contains 10 pounds of nitrogen, 2 pounds of phosphorus and 8 pounds of potassium.

It will be seen that manure contains elements of plant food which are absolutely necessary for the growth of crops and also that these elements have value in some parts of the United States in the form of animal manures. Farmers are not here urged to buy manure in carload lots from some distant point, but a little simple arithmetic will show that the farmer cannot afford to let manure lie around the barnyards and go to waste.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whooping cought it is unsurpassed.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals — makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration — makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly — and have great wearing quality.

Cork Insert

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes — oils and greases.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE NEW POST MASTER

The candidacy of Leo R. Kenefick, for the office of post master here, should receive the united support of every patron of the Belmond office.

This young man is too well known to Belmond people to need any introduction. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Kenefick, of this city, and has lived practically all his life here.

The office ofpostmaster, under the politcal circumstances of a change in administration, will very likely in the natural course of events change also. The present post master, R. C. Morse, or better known as "Rufe,' does not expect to hold the office another term. His term in office has been universally satisfactory and it is to be regreted that politics will not permit him to keep the place.

Kenefick's qualifications for the place are number one, his record as clear as a bell and he has the universal support of the business men in his candidacy.

The powers that be in naming the next post master will do the right and proper thing, one which will please the people of Belmond and vicinity universally, if they name this young man to the office. He deserves it in every way.

Kenefick is the first ex-service man in this city to seek a political position, and one of the first in this section of the state. Other things being equal, it is only right and just that Kenefick, being an ex-service man, with the finest of war records back of him, should be given the appointment which he seeks. And this we believe he will receive.

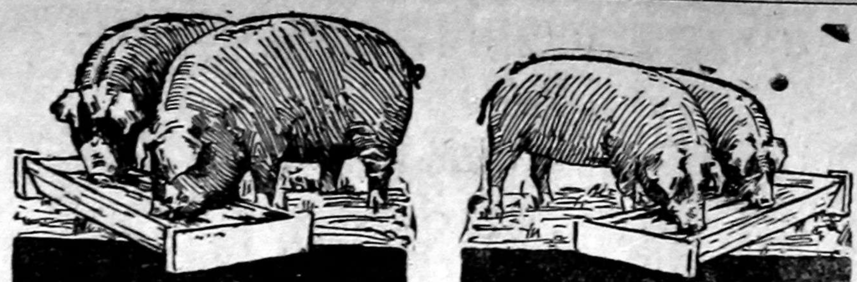
CIRCULATES PETITION AGAINST THEATRE TAX

George Hake, proprietor of the Lyric theatre here, was circulating a petition last week to protest to the Iowa legislature against the proposed tax of one cent on each fifty cents admission charged for amusements, which tax will be placed before, or has been placed before, the state legislature in a bill introduced by Representative Weaver, of Des Moines.

The bill provides that its terms become effective July 1, this year, and that the tax be levied on each fifty cents for admission to any theatre, opera house, motion picture show, vaudeville performances, circus, side show, merry-go-round and like devises. Public dances, wrestling matches, league of professional base ball, roller skating rink and all places of public amusement operated for pecuniary profit.

Places exempt from the tax included religious, educational or charitable societies, or organizations incorporated under state law so as not to be for pecuniary profits. The tax also would not apply to agricultural fairs or exhibitions, nor to amateur baseball and football contests nor athletic field meets.

Placing this additional tax, even tho it is but one cent, on the prices of amusements seems like adding insult to injury, for they are already loaded so high they are top-heavy with taxes. A little more economy in the operation of the state's business, a little less graft and pork and more public service would seem to be more to the point right now than adding more taxes on the people. The heaviest payers would be the patrons of the movie theatres, who are in he great majority the common people, and it will be upon their necks that the rope would pull the tightest. What a fool tax like this would realize in revenue could be saved twice over by the practice of horse-sense methods in running the affairs of state.



THESE BIG PIGS GOT HOG-TONE — THESE LITTLE PIGS GOT NONE

G. R. Ogden, of Shinnston, W. Va., says: "I have used AVALON FARMS HOG-TONE 56 days and I think it is the best medicine I ever used. I have two pigs 4 months and 3 days old that weigh 360 pounds, one 6 pounds heavier than the other. They are 100 pounds heavier than my neighbor's 2 of the same litter and feed."

This is the experience of a typical user of Hog-Tone. There are hundreds and hundreds of letters on file at the Avalon Farms Company's office from nearly every state in the Union, all telling of big improvement in hogs and in hog profits through the use of Hog-Tone, the scientifically prepared Hog Conditioner, Fattener and Worm Remover. Hog-Tone is sold on 60 days' Free Trial under an absolute money-back guarantee. Come in the store and tell us how many hogs you have in your herd and we will give you enough Hog-Tone to treat all of them 60 days. You don't have to pay for it unless you are absolutely satisfied. The decision is left entirely to you.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m and 7:30 p. m.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m. The subject for Sunday's meeting being 'Right Hand 'Lift Up'" with Miss Edna Stedman as leader.

A welcome awaits you at any or all of these services.

M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL

The attendance for Sunday, Feb. 13, was 131 with a collection of $6.38, while a year ago the athtendane was only 86, with a collection of $3.36. We are very glad to report the increase as it stands over the previous year. It is our earnest desire to have 150 out next Sunday. We have noticed that a good many of the children make no preparation of their lesson until they report for Sunday school. We would like to impress the parents, that they should see that the children put some time in studying their lesson before soming. As it is, the average amount of schooling in the Bible that a child can get by just going to Sunday school is about 20 hours a year. This may be so when the scholar attends every Sunday of the year. We would appreciate the parents co-operation in this matter.

We are also pleased to give a report of the Home Department. At the present time there are 64 members, 6 visitorsc and with Mrs. Osbon Young as superintendent, there is a working force of seven. For four quarters past the receipts from the Home Department was $29.75. A year ago the membership of this department was 48 members.

At present the Sunday school board is working on a plan for a different opening exercise for every Sunday morning. In the course of a couple of weeks this new plan will be in use.

Let us have a good attendance next Sunday and every Sunday from now on. A few new faces were with us last Sunday. We would like to see not less than 25 new faces next Sunday.

S. E. Cretary.

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

We nearly reached the goal set by Mr. Hinman last Sunday. It will take just a little harder effort to reach it while the roads are bad and the walks are sloppy, but it can be done. Let every member and friend of the Sabbath school be present at 10:00 o'clock next Sunday. Our attendance so far this year is over fifty per cent larger than it was a year ago and our offering nearly one hundred per cent larger.

The morning worship to which we invite all who are not affiliated some where else, or who have not services in their own church at the time are held at 11:00. Next Sunday evening we are going to visit some of our mission fields in the southland. The next thing to visiting them in person is to visit them thru pictures of the work and the records which they are making. This will give you an opportunity of seeing where your money has been spent and what it has accomplished. We hope to have a full congregation Sunday evening at 7:30.

KANAWHA

Henry Van Oosting, who has been visiting relatives and friends at Algona, returned home Tuesday.

Roy Carlston went to Des Moines the first of the week to attend a clothiers convention.

Wm. Deibler returned Tuesday from a few weeks visit in Florida.

Homer, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Thor Johnson, was operated on for the removal of mastoid by doctors Steele, of Belmond, and Lawton, Wednesday. Homer is getting along as well as possible at this writing.

Mrs. Henry Africa and son, Arnold, returned Tuesday from Des Moines where they visited relatives and attended to business matters. While there Mrs. Africa purchased goods for the Ladies Fashion Shop.

E. G. Soderberg, agent of the Lampert Lumber Co. here, was checked out as manager Thursday by Auditor Grube, and L. S. Poor, of Summit, S. Dak., has been placed in charge of the company's business.

Mr. and Mrs. Knute Hill, who have been visiting relatives here for a couple of weeks, left Friday for their home in Texas.

Mr. Poor is experienced in the lumber business and comes here highly recommended.

Wm. Benzler, of Britt, is here this week putting some finishing touches to the woodwork at the First National Bank.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Quite a number of people of the Immaneul church attended the union services at the Congregational church on last Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. George Thompson and family were Sunday visitors at the George Baxter home in Olaf.

Mr. and Mrs. Jake Dorenkamp, Sr., and family, of near Goodell, took Sunday dinner at the H. B. Dorenkamp home.

Minnie Smidt returned last Monday from a several days visit with friends at Alexander.

"The Way to Wealth"

Says Franklin, "is as Plain as the Road to Market."

Our failures are not caused by not knowing what to do, or how to do it, but because of the lack of will to do what we ought---lack of determination. Every man knows that he ought to save---almost every man can save, but he lacks the will to start saving, so he lives on, spending money as fast as he can earn it, and when he is no longer able to work he has nothing to show for his years of labor Begin by depositing now in the

The many friends of Lee Lowenberg will be glad to hear that he has recovered sufficiently from his past illness to be able to be taken to his home last Thursday.

Henry Reinke, of Hartley is a guest at the E. D. Jenison home. Mr. Reinke is a cousin of Mrs. Jenison.

Elmer Kienenberger has decided to quit farming and is disposing of his property at private sale.

During the World War, when all of the ladies of the Red Cross Chapter were knitting sweaters for the boys "over there," Mrs. Lester Titsel, a member of the Red Cross Society of Goodell, put her name and address in the sweater she made. Last week she received a peculiar looking letter with a foreign postmark and was greatly surprised to find that it came from a young physician in the Medical Corps, of Shanghai, China, stating that he had received it, and thanked her for the some. The sweater had been sent to both Russia and France and at last to China. He wrote a very nice letter stating that his parents reside in Ohio, and that he expected to get a furlough and visit his folks soon.

The letter was written on fine rice paper so thin that it was necessary to have a dark background in order to read it.

It was 49 days from the time the letter was written until Mrs. Titsel received it.

This letter makes a very nice souvenir of the war.

Pleasant township school board granted their teachers a holiday last Friday, in order that they and their pupils might attend the short course.

Del Anger recently purchased a hog and butchered it for his own use. He hung it in the summer kitchen to cool. The next morning it was gone. It seems that the people in this vicinity need a few blood hounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Schmalle spent Sunday at the Will Haufferman home near Meservey.

Mrs. B. A. Mayne is keeping house for Nate Church during the absence of his wife.

A great many from this vicinity attended the short course, and all speak well of it, both as an entertaining and educational affair. We are glad to note that Pleasant township won first. Now that we hold the banner let us make preparations to keep it another year, should another short course be put on.

Nature

Medicines that aid nature are always most effectual. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy acts on this plan. It allays the cough, relieves the lungs aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. Thousands have testified to its good qualities. "A Beggar in Purple"

This a story of American business, men, methods, and morals. It depicts the keen competition of business in a small town, and the whirlpool and pitfalls of Wall Street finance.

Solomon, in all his wisdom, said: "Even a King without love is only a beggar in purple." The hero of Andrew Soutar's novel is a self-made man. From poverty he raised himself to a position of power and wealth, but the revenge that for eighteen years had steeled his will to success cheated him of love.

"In the Heart of a Fool"

Allan Dwan's newest production, "In the Heart of a Fool, is a powerful epic of life. Its story by William Allen White, the noted American novelist and political authority, is brimful of action and red blood. It is a truthful chronicle of what might easily happen in any community—in your life or mine. Every city or neighborhood has its own Lorelie—tho not always as deadly as the one in this play. Full of big scenes and realism. The mine explosion and invasion of the hired mob from the big city are genuine thrillers.

METHODIST CHURCH

Every seat in the church was occupied last Sunday morning when the pastor, Rev. Harold Tomkinson, spoke on "The Expansive Power of Life." At the evening service the pastor discussed the much talked of topic, "Capital Punishment" and dealth with two kinds, namely, "The Capital Punishment meted out by the State, and that meted out by a man's own conscience." Mr. Tomkinson made a srong plea for the abolition of capital punishment by the state, and urged the citizens to create such a strong and healthy moral sentiment in the community that crime and vice will be almost impossible.

Next Sunday, Feb. 20, Rev. Harold Tomkinson will speak in the M. E. church on "Bank Cheques." Many things might be written across some cheques. Come and hear what the pastor has to say on this matter—you'll get a surprise.

Methodists, Attention! Are you going to church these days? There is a place for you at church and a hearty handshake from the pastor and members. Make your plans quite early; make up your mind that you will honor the Sabbath—God's day.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

A week ago Sunday morning six new members were received in the membership of the church. There will be an opportunity given at the Easter season for others to join.

The Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. A. H. Emerson, has a list of 22 names on the cradle roll since the first of the year. This is an important department of the church and Mrs. Emerson and her assistant, Mrs. B. P. Hadley, are very capable of handling it.

Sermon topics for Sunday, Feb. 20, at the Congregational church as follows: a. m.—"The Pastured Sheep," Junior talk, "A Preacher on a Pole." p. m.—"Elements of Greatness in the Character of Washington." The Masons have been invited to attend the evening service. Special music at both servises. Acordial invitation is extended to all not worshipping elsewhere to meet with us. Ada S. Anderson, Pastor.

There were 90 at the Sunday school and the collection was over $6. The Sunday school is growing all the time and we hope it will continue to do so.

At the evening service Rev. Anderson spoke on "Lincoln" The Legion members accepted the invitation which she had given them to attend this meeting and came in a body. Mrs. Fred Brooks and Mrs. Fred Williams had decorated the church very artisically for the service. The church was full at this service.

ROWAN SCHOOL NOTES

The Home Declamatory contest will be held Tuesday evening, Feb. 22. Admission 25 and 50. Proceeds for the benefit of athletic association. Come and boost your home contestants.

Tuesday evening the Freshies entertained the Senior class. Prof. Molue and Prof. Morrison at the home of Laura Aldinger. It is thot that they expected to entertain the Sophs. and Juniors also, with newly purchased ropes, but we regret to say that the Juniors and Sophs. spent a more pleasant evening, by having a candy pull at the D. S. room. The Freshies, however, provided an entirely different menu: potatoe salad, sandwiches, pickles, and cocoa; 2nd. course, home made ice cream and cake.

Miss Alta Allen entertained her class, the seventh grade, and their teacher at her home Tuesday night. Valentine decorations were used and all enjoyed a pleasant evening, during the latter part of which delicious refreshments were served.

Prof. Moule acted as judge in the Declamatory contest at Dows on last Wednesday evening.

Mrs. E. Miller and Mrs. Sim Stout were at Belmond, Thursday, and on Friday, attending the short course.

Mrs. Dave Smith spent Thursday night with Mrs. Snyder. She returned to her home at Garner, Friday.

Mrs. E. Bingham spent Friday at the home of her son, W. G.

One of the largest attended childrens' parties occurred Thursday night at the home of Fred Brooks, when Mrs. R. H. Keith and Mrs. Fred Brooks were hostesses at a Junior C. E. valentine party given in honor of Mrs. Clint Kercheval. Mrs. Kercheval was the Junior supterinendent last year but as she expects to move to the country in a few weeks she could not take the work again. Mrs. Albert Emerson has taken her place as supterintendent with Miss Francis Virden as assistant. There were 55 Juniors present and with the three supterindents and other adults made a company of over 60. Judging from the enthusiasm with which they joined in the games they enjoyed the evening to the fullest extent possible. After a two-course luncheon was served Mrs. Kercheval was presented with a china sugar bowl and creamer from the society. In her thanks to the children she urged them all to be present at the weekly meetings which are held every Wednesday afternoon after school and it is to be hoped that they will follow her wish. The children went home voting Mrs. Keith and Mrs. Brooks as royal entertainers.

The Sheffield basket ball teams played at Rowan, Friday evening, Feb 11. The Sheffield girls defeated the Rowan girls with a score of 35-11. Both teams put up a good fight, altho the Rowan girls were outclassed due to lack of experience. Our girls have only one player who has ever played before, but the others are doing exceptionally well. We regret to say that some people wish to knock teams because they do not win. When this team has had two or three years experience they will show more skill and ability. The boys were defeated but they held Sheffield to a close score of 15-17. Our boys showed splendid training, altho "Spin" McCallum, jumping center, was injured. He broke a bone in his foot during the first half of the game, but bevause of a great deal of grit and enthusiasm he played the entire game If you appreciate atheletics come out and boost for we need your co-operation. ,

The town team will play Hampton's town team Thursday, Feb. 17. Let's all be boosters.

Renwick will play basket ball here on the Rowan floor Saturday evening, Feb. 19. Let's all boost and encourage victory.

and children, Duane and Loretta, Mr. and Mrs. Clint Kercheval and children, James and Charles, at dinner Suday. It was Will Whitten's birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kercheval entertained Rev. Ada Anderson for dinner on Sunday.

J. F. Howell and Albert Moellering went to Des Moines, Friday, to attend a state meeting of the American Legion. They were sent as delegates from the local Post to represent the Post Commander and Adj. who were unable to attend. The object of this meeting was to further legislation concerning the welfare of the disabled ex-service men and women, and to plan the work which the Legion will endeavor to carry on the coming year, and also to meet senators and representatives of Iowa to lay their plans before hem and ask for their support as a unit. This meeting is the first of its kind held by the Legion since it was organized, and after listening to the speeches of the noted men who were there helping them in their cause they came back greatly benefited and believe they will be able to pass on to the members of the post the high ideals and the working plans of this meeting. (Boys, it's up to us.)

The dance at the Bingham hall on Friday night was fairly well attended. The Thompson orchestra furnished the music.

D. W. Whitten went to Des Moines on Sunday to attend the G. W. C. wholesale convenion.

EASTER COMES EARLY THIS YEAR

Merchants Believe It Will Stimulate All Lines Of Trade and Are Getting Ready for Rush.

Easter with all that it brings, harbinger of spring, forerunner of lolling summer days, will soon be here, earlier this year than it has been since 1913, when it ocurred on the 23 of March, and earlier than it will be again until 1940, when it will fall on March 24.

In 1923 Easter Sunday will be March 27, the same date on which it occurs this year. Easter cannot be earlier than March 22, nor later later than April 25, since it is reckoned as the first Sunday after the paschal moon, which appears on or after March 21.

The early Easter this year brings with it an activity in a business way that is lending impetus to early spring buying. Merchants are endeavoring to anticipate the early trade, which affects nearly every line of merchandise.

The Easter bonnet is the first article considered by many fair ones in the line of Easter raiment since for centuries the cartoonist, jokester and once-a-year church goer has made it a subject of conversation.

Clothiers are looking toward the early Easter season this year as a mens of giving their business a little impetus at a time when it will be at its lowest ebb. Clothes, hats, shoes and everything in the way of apparel that will enable a citizen to improve his appearance, are to be in stock this year, if the clothiers are able to obtain it.

And wearing apparel is not the only demand made by Easter season. There are Easter candies, and novelties, Easter place cards and greetings and a thousand little things that make Easter a gift season second only to Christmas.

Seldom is Easter as early as it is this year. The vast majority of the dates since 1801, and as far ahead as 2,000 fall in April. Only once in three centuries has the date came at its earliest, and that was March 22, 1818. Last year Easter occurred April 4, and next year it will fall on April 16. In 1923, March 27 will again be the date, and 19 years will pass before Easter is earlier than it is this year.

Big Reduction for Cash!

$30.00 Decline on all

Great Majestic Family Ranges

In a letter just received from the Majestic Manufacturing Co., we have been instructed to reduce prices on all Majestic Family Ranges.

This decline is an extraordinary effort on the part of the manufacturers and ourselves to stabilize business in general.

Thru co-operation of Majestic dealers and the factory this exceptional decline was decided on at this time, rather than gradual reductions thruout the year.

Those familiar with continued high costs of iron and labor, will wonder how this great reduction can be made now, but some one had to take the initiative, and we are proud to announce that the Majestic people are setting the pace.

The Majestic Manufacturing Co., and the Majestic Dealers thruout the United States, decided to take their loss all at one time rather than string it out over the entire year 1921.

In the New Model Great Majestic we offer the highest standard of range perfection, and with this extra low price, probably lower than it will be this fall, there is no reason why your kitchen should be without one of these wonderful ranges.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to 'Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

He hadn't considered that the tree lay on a steep slope. As the blade fell, the great trunk simply seemed to leap. Lennox leaped too, in a frenzied effort to save his life; but already the leafy bows, like the tendrils of some great amphibian, had whipped around his legs. He fell, struggling; and then a curious darkness, streaked with flame, dropped down upon him.

An hour later he found himself lying on the still hillside, knowing only a great wonderment. At first his only impulse was to go back to sleep. He didn't understand the grayness that had come upon the mountain world, his own strange feeling of numbness, of endless soaring through infinite spaces. But he was a mountain man, and that meant he was schooled, beyond all things, to keep his self-control. He made himself remember. Yes—he had been cutting wood on the hillside, and the shadows had been long. He had been wondering whether or not they should go down to the valleys.

He remembered now: the last blow and the rolling log. He tried to turn his head to look up to the hill.

He found himself wholly unable to do it. Something wracked him in his neck when he tried to move. But he did glance down. And yes, he could turn in this direction. And he saw the great tree trunk lying twenty feet below him, wedged in between the young pines.

He was surrounded by broken fragments of limbs, and it was evident that the tree had not struck him a full blow. The limbs had protected him to some extent. No man is of such mold as to be crushed under the solid weight of the trunk and live to remember it. He wondered if this were the frontier of death—the grayness that lingered over him. He seemed to be soaring.

He brought himself back to earth and tried again to remember. Of course, the twilight had fallen. It had been late afternoon when he had cut the tree. His hand stole along his body; and then, for the first time, a hideous sickness came upon him. His hand was warm and wet when he brought it up. The other hand he couldn't stretch at all.

The forest was silent around him, except a bird calling somewhere near the house—a full voice, rich and clear, and it seemed to him that it had a quality of distress. Then he recognized it. It was the voice of his own daughter, Snowbird, calling for him. He tried to answer her.

It was only a whisper, at first. Yet she was coming nearer; and her own voice sounded louder. "Here, Snowbird," he called again. She heard him then: he could tell by the startled tone of her reply. The next instant she was at his side, her tears dropping on his face.

With a tremendous effort of will he recalled his speeding faculties. "I don't think I'm badly hurt," he told her very quietly. "A few ribs broken—and a leg. But we'll have to winter here on the Divide, Snowbird mine."

"What does it matter, if you live?" she cried. She crawled along the pine needles beside him, and tore his shirt from his breast. He was rapidly sinking into unconsciousness. The thing she dreaded most—that his back might be broken—was evidently not true. There were, as he said, broken ribs and evidently one severe fracture of the leg bone. Whether he had sustained internal injuries that would end his life before the morning, she had no way of knowing.

At this point, the problem of saving her father's life fell wholly into her hands. His broken body could not be carried over the mountain road to physicians in the valleys. They must be transported to the ranch. It would take them a full day to make the trip, even if she could get word to them at once; and twenty-four hours without medical attention would probably cost her father his life. The nearest telephone was at the ranger station, twelve miles distant over a mountain trail. The telephone line to Bald mountain, four miles off, had been disconnected when the rains had ended the peril of the forest fire.

It all depended upon her. Bill was driving cattle into the valleys, and he and his men had in use all the horses on the ranch with one exception. The remaining horse had been ridden by Dan to some distant marshes, and as Dan would shoot until sunset, that meant he would not return until ten o'clock. There was no road for a car to the ranger station, only a rough steep trail, and she remembered, with a sinking heart, that one of Bill's missions in the valley was to procure a new lighting system. By no conceivable possibility could she drive down that mountain road in the darkness. But she was somewhat relieved by the thought that in all probability she could walk twelve miles across the mountains to the ranger station in much less time than she could drive, by automobile, seventy miles down to the ranches at the foothills about the valley.

Besides, she remembered with a gladdening heart that Richards, one of the rangers, had been a student at a medical college and had taken a position with the forest service to regain his health. She would cross the ridge to the station, phone for a doctor in the valleys, and would return on horseback with Richards for such first aid as he could give. The only problem that remained was that of getting her father into the house.

He was stirring a little now. Evidently consciousness was returning to him. And then she thanked heaven for the few simple lessons in first aid that her father had taught her in the days before carelessness had come upon him. One of his lessons had been that of carrying an unconscious human form—a method by which even a woman may carry, for a short distance, a heavy man. It was approximately the method used in carrying wounded in No Man's Land: the body thrown over the shoulders, one arm through the fork of the legs to the wounded man's hand. Her father was not a particularly heavy man, and she was an exceptionally strong young woman. She knew at once that this problem was solved.

The hardest part was lifting him to her shoulders. Only by calling upon her last ounce of strength, and tugging upward with her arms, was she able to do it. But it was fairly easy, in her desperation, to carry him down the hill. What rest she got she took by leaning against a tree, the limp body still across her shoulders.

It was a distance of one hundred yards in all. No muscles but those trained by the outdoors, no lungs except those made strong by the mountain air, could have stood that test. She laid him on his own bed, on the lower floor, and set his broken limbs the best she could. She covered him up with thick, fleecy blankets, and set a bottle of whisky beside the bed. Then she wrote a note to Dan and fastened it upon one of the interior doors.

She drew on her hob-nailed boots—needed sorely for the steep climb—and pocketed her pistol. She thrust a handful of jerked venison into the pocket of her coat and lighted the lantern. The forest night had fallen, soft and vibrant and tremulous, over the heads of the dark trees when she started out.

CHAPTER IV

Snowbird felt very glad of her intimate, accurate knowledge of the whole region of the Divide. In her infancy the winding trails had been her playground, and long ago she had acquired the mountaineer's sixth sense for traversing them at night. She had need of that knowledge now. She slipped into her free, swinging stride; and the last beams from the windows of the house were soon lost in the pines behind her. It was one of those silent, breathless nights with which no mountaineer is entirely unacquainted, and for a long time the only sound she could hear was her own soft tramp in the pine needles. The trees themselves were motionless. That peculiar sound, not greatly different from that of running water which the wind often makes in the pine tops, was entirely lacking. Not that she could be deceived by it—as stories tell that certain tenderfeet, dying of thirst in the barren hills, have been. But she always liked the sound; and she missed it especially tonight.

She felt that if she would stop to listen, there would be many faint sounds in the thickets—those little hushed noises that the wild things make to remind night-wanderers of their presence. But she did not in the least care to hear these sounds. They do not tend toward peace of mind on a long walk over the ridges.

The wilderness began at once. Whatever influence toward civilization her father's house had brought to the wilds chopped off as beneath a blade in the first fringe of pines. This is altogether characteristic of the Oregon forests. They are much too big and too old to be tamed in any large degree by the presence of one house. No one knew this fact better than Lennox himself who, in a hard winter of four years before, had looked out of his window to find the wolf pack ranged in a hungry circle about his house. Within two hundred yards after she had passed through her father's door, she was perfectly aware that the wild was stirring and throbbing with life about her. At first she tried very hard to think of other things. But the attempt wasn't entirely a success. And before she had covered the first of the twelve miles, the sounds that from the first had been knocking at the door of her consciousness began to make an entrance.

If a person lies still long enough, he can usually hear his heart beating and the flow of his blood in his arteries. Any sound, no matter how faint, will make itself heard at last. It was this way with a very peculiar noise that crept up through the silence from the trail behind her. She wouldn't give it any heed at first. But in a very little while indeed, it grew so insistent that she could no longer disregard it.

Some living creature was trotting along on the trail behind, keeping approximately the same distance between them.

Foregoing any attempt to ignore it, she set her cool young mind to thinking what manner of beast it might be. its step was not greatly different from that of a large dog—except possibly a dog would have made slightly more noise. Yet she couldn't even be sure of this basic premise, because this animal, whatever it might be, had at first seemingly moved with utmost caution, but now took less care with its step than is customary with the wild denizens of the woods. A wolf, for instance, can simply drift when it wishes, and the silence of a cougar is a name. Yet unless her pursuer were a dog, which seemed entirely unlikely, it was certainly one of these two. She would have liked very much to believe the step was that of Old Wolf the bear, suddenly curious as to what this dim light of hers might be; but she couldn't bring herself to accept the lie. Woof, except when wounded or cornered, is the most amiable creature in the Oregon woods, and it would give her almost a sense of security to have him waddling along behind her. The wolves and cougar, remembering the arms of Woof, would not be nearly so curious. But unfortunately, the black bear had never done such a thing in the memory of man, and if he had, he would have made six times as much noise. He can go fairly softly when he is stalking, but when he is obliged to trot—as he would be obliged to do to keep up with a swift-walking human figure—he cracks twigs like a rolling log. She had the impression that the animal behind had been passing like smoke at first, but wasn't taking the trouble to do it now.

The sound was a soft pat-pat on the trail—sometimes entirely obliterated but always recurring when she began to believe that she had only fancied its presence. Sometimes a twig, rain-soaked though it was, cracked beneath a heavy foot, and again and again she heard the brush crushing and rustling as something passed through. Sometimes, when the trail was covered with soft pine needles, it was practically indistinguishable.

The animal was approximately one hundred feet behind. It wasn't a wolf, she thought. The wolves ran in packs this season, and except in winter were more afraid of human beings than any other living creature. It wasn't a lynx—one of those curiosity-devoured little felines that will mew all day on a trail and never dare come near. It was much too large for a lynx. The feet fell too solidly. There were no dogs in the mountains to follow at heel; and she had no desire whatever to meet Shag, the faithful hybrid that used to be her guardian in the hills. For Shag had gone to his well-deserved rest several seasons before. Two other possibilities remained. One was that this follower was a human being, the other that it was a cougar.

Ordinarily a human being is much more potentially dangerous to a woman in the hills at night than a cougar. A cougar is an abject coward and some men are not. But Snowbird felt herself entirely capable of handling any human foes. They would have no advantage over her; they would have no purpose in killing from ambush; and she trusted to her own marksmanship implicitly. While it is an extremely difficult thing to shoot at a cougar leaping from the thicket, a tall man standing on a trail presents an easy target. Besides, she had a vague sense of discomfort that if this animal were a cougar, he wasn't acting true to form. He was altogether too bold.

The animal on the trail behind her was taking no care at all to go silently. He was simply pit-patting along, wholly at his ease. He acted as if the fear that men have instilled in his breed was somehow missing. And that is why she instinctively tried to hurry on the trail.

The step kept pace. For a long mile, up a barren ridge, she heard every step it made. Then, as the brush closed deeper around her, she couldn't hear it at all.

She hurried on, straining to the silence. No, the sound was stopped. Could it be that the animal, fearful at last, had turned from her trail? And then for the first time a gasp that was not greatly different from a despairing sob caught at her throat. She heard the steps again, and they were in the thickets just beside her.

She Heard the Steps Again.

* * * * * * *

Two hours before Snowbird had left the house, on her long tramp to the ranger station, Dan had started home. He hadn't shot until sunset, as he had planned.

He rode one of Lennox's cattle ponies, the only piece of horse-flesh that Bill had not taken to the valleys when he had driven down the live stock. She was a pretty bay, a spirited, high-bred mare that could whip about on her hind legs at the touch of the rein on her neck. She made good time along the trail. And an hour before sunset he passed the only human habitation between the marsh and Lennox's house—the cabin that had been recently occupied by Landy Hildreth.

He glanced at the place as he passed and saw that it was deserted. No smell of wood smoke remained in the air. Evidently Landy had gone down to the settlements with his precious testimony in regard to the arson ring. Yet it was curious that no word had been heard of him. As far as Dan knew, neither the courts nor the forest service had taken action.

He hurried on, four miles farther. The trail entered the heavy thickets, and he had to ride slowly. It was as wild a section as could be found on the whole Divide. And just as he came to a little cleared space, three strange dark birds flung up on wide-spreading wings.

He knew them at once. All mountaineers come to know them before their days are done. They were the buzzards, the followers of the dead. And what they were doing in the thicket just beside the trail, Dan did not dare to think.

Court House News

Mary Frandsen of Eagle Grove will ask for a divorce from her husband Peter Frandsen, desertion being alleged.

Dr. H. P. Walker, of Clarion, was appointed coroner for the ensuing two years term by the board of supervisors at their meeting Monday.

Marriage licenses for week ending February 1st: Alfred Otteros and Elsie Beyer, Leslie Larson and Pearl Hanson, Guy Mullins and Mrs. Sarah Collins.

The third week of court will be devoted to the trial of criminal matters.

The McDowell divorce case from Clarion is set for trial on Thursday of this week.

Geo. Bassett, of Fort Dodge, sheriff of Webster county, was in Clarion yesterday as a witness before the grand jury. He assisted Sheriff Fisher in the capture of a quantity of clothing stolen from the Woolstock and Goldfield stores.

S. J. Packard is foreman of the grand jury. The others are: T. A. Davenport, Belmond; J. A. Lowden, Clarion; A. N. Rolfe, Eagle Grove; W. A. Burrows, Dows; John Soren, Clarion; Newton Bawn, Eagle Grove; It is expected that body will complete its labors today.

Judge Wright, of Fort, Dodge, is presiding at the present term of court which began Monday. The judge excused two school teachers from jury service, as they are exempt by law, the Misses Blanche Agard and Jessie Richardson. A third, Miss Mae Platt, of Eagle Grove, was excused for one week on account of the illness of her mother. All other jurors are to report next Monday, February 7.

The Johnson & Knutson cafe stock and fixtures were invoiced last week by D. H. Eyler, assignee. The same totalled $5636.10, as follows: Cigars, $811.24; tobacco, $102.12; stock of canned goods, etc., including candy, $603.74; fixtures, $1486.50; stoves, dishes and kitchen utensils, $1271.56; book accounts, $1356.62. In addition to the above is the soda fountain, show cases, eating booths, and cash register, which cost $3500. The sum of $1500 has been paid, leaving $2000 due, which is secured by mortgage. The claims of local firms and wholesale houses will foot up $1500 or more.

Last week Janitor McGrath was busy for several days mowing away a carload of coal in the court house basement. For the season of 1919-20 it took about ninety tons to keep the judges, jury and county officials warm The janitor hopes to get thru this season with considerable less fuel altho he is heating the entire basement in addition to the rooms on the main floor.

Man over to Clarion is suing his wife for divorce, claiming she is married to another fellow. 'Nother guy in Eastern Iowa wants a divorce because his wife wasn't married. No matter how you try, seems as tho it is impossible to please the men.

This spring-like weather gets under a person's skin and makes him feel like getting out the old fishin' tackle and oilin' up the old bus for a little try out. Don't believe it will pay to get too enthusiastic, tho; February comes before spring.

Fellow spilled a lot of this honor stuff to us the other day about the position of editor. Looked up to, honored, all that sort of mush. Huh! We know more than one who looks down on us instead of up, and some who can't even see us, while when it comes to honor, notice that there is about as much glory to it as any other line of endeavor, and no more. It's just plain work, like any other job, and not always as much in it, at that.

Maybe the honor is supposed to make up for the lacking cash.

If you know where they'll take honor in payment of bills due, send us the address.

A Few Facts in Regard to the Benefits that the Town of Belmond and Vicinity have Derived by Virtue of the Operations of the Iowa Valley Sugar Company

Over $560,000 HAS been paid to farmers in this vicinity for Beets during the last campaign.

Most farmers concede that a 40 bushel per acre yield of corn is a maximum average yield from Iowa land. In order to get a return of $560,000 from corn, selling at 40c per bushel, it would require the cultivation of approximately 35,000 acres of land, 40 bushels to an acre.

Out of 5,800 ACRES of Beet land, that amount was paid to farmers. Contrast that with 35,000 acres of corn land.

$200,000 was spent here for labor. In a year like this, when corn is a drug on the market and no one wants to sell at these low prices, what would the merchants, renters, land owners and professional men of this vicinity do if they did'nt have this $760,000 to keep the ball rolling? Think this over. The Sugar Plant is a THRESHING MACHINE for the Beet Growers of this community, to keep good land values up by paying a good return for the products of the land

County Declamatory Contest At School Next Friday

All Schools In The County To Be Represented Here In Contest For Beautiful Trophy Cup.

MANY BASKET BALL GAMES

Friday afternoon Division 2 of the Literary gave an excellent program to a good sized audience. Many of our town people were there and the Dows basket ball teams besides our own people.

The farce, "Rooms to Let," was very cleverly given. Every member of the cast, as well as Mrs. Peterson, who trained them, needs a great deal of credit.

The girls' basket ball team beat Dows girls team in a close game of 12 to 9. This is the first time the Belmond girls have beaten the Dows team in a number of years. The game was too rough to exhibit as much team work as the local girls are capble of doing, but every girl on the team played her particular part well. This game was the equal of the Garner game for fast playing.

GRADES

The Kindergarten visitors this week were: Miss Mary Barry, Mrs. E. Sullivan, Mrs. Ada Fitts, Master Orvis Fitts, and Mrs. Gay Barth.

Recent visitors in grade 1 are: Mrs. C. C. McGuire, Miss Loretta McGuire, Miss Mary Barry, Mrs. Eugene Sullivan, Mrs. F. E Snyder.

The first grade room which has no tardy pupils, are now enjoying their doll house, which they have been busy furnishing.

We hope the parents will co-operate with the teachers in seeing that the pupils get to school on time.

Remember the girls' basket ball game after the declamatory contest Friday night. Admission free to all who attend the contest.

The boys' basket ball team has accepted the invitation to take p[illegible] the tournament held at Iowa State Teachers College, March 4 and 5.

Last Friday afternoon Nissen & Harbison phoned supt. Fyler, asking him to announce to the basket ball team that they would serve an oyster supper at Thompson's Cafe after the games. The annoucement was greeted with applause and the result was SOME basket ball game at night.

The school wishes to thank the above firm for the reception, as well as their interest manifested in other school activities.

The boys basket ball team played two games last week. We won from Swaledale Consolidated school Wednesday night by a score of 34 to 15. Friday night Dows won in the most exciting game of the season by a score of 23 to 20.

The Swaledale game was close in the first half with Swaledale ahead. The Belmond boys were in better condition and were able to score 20 points to Swaledale's 4 in the last half of the game.

The Dows game caught us with two first-string men out of the game, but Dows found us there all the way and the breaks of the game seemed to go against us most of the time.

We missed David Luick in both of the games and hope to have him with us next time. Eddie Christie played a few minutes in the Swaledale game and did good work. This was his first start for B. H. S. and we know it will not be the last. Lewis Parsons played his best game of the season in the Dows game. Everybody says: "Did you see that boy play?"

We are hoping we'll draw Dows in the county tournament.

Today our boys take the afternoon train for Swaledale, where they will play tonight. Arrangements have been made by Mr. Mortimer whereby the midnight train will stop at Swaledale for the Belmond team and boosters. Why not take a little outing this afternoon and go to Swaledale with our boys and help them bring home the bacon?

Several of our high school students made up Wednesday afternoon classes after school Tuesday night in order to be excused to go to Swaledale and back our boys.

Community night is enjoyed by a few every Tuesday night, but two or three times as many could just as well enjoy the evening. Plan to come each Tuesday night.

On Friday night, Feb. 25, the annual Wright County Declamatory contest will be held here. Seats will be on sale at Schultz's drug store on Wednesday. Reserved seats 50c. Be sure to get yours early so you may hear our high school in the contest with the other high schools of the county. The winning school will receive the beautiful trophy cup that is now being displayed in the window of the Belmond Savings Bank. William Chase will represent our school in the Oratorical cass, Carol Tyrrell in the Dramatic, and Elaine Rierson in the Humorous. Because of the length of the program, we must begin on time.

Remember—Friday, 8 o'clock, in the auditorium.

Saturday night the Normal Training club held its regular meeting at the school house. There was a very good attendance, and all enjoyed the educative slides on rural schools, which we were able to get from the Iowa State Teachers' College. After the business meeting and program, refreshments were served and a very pleasant social hour enjoyed.

Next Saturday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock we would like to have all members of the Normal Training Club meet in Thoe's Studio to have a picture taken for the high school Annual.

Work is progressing very well on the high school Annual. Practically all the business firms have taken out an add, and we are sure that those who have not will see the advantage of aiding a school enterprise of this sort and will wish to do so.

M. J. Thoe is doing the photography for the annual, and is being kept busy after school hours.

The Alumni of B. H. S. are sending in their subscriptions every day. Send in yours at once to Grace Allen, subscription manager, before our order is placed, or it will be too late to get yours.

The Oratorical section of Wright county declamatory contest will be held in the high school auditorium on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. No additional charge will be made for this meeting. One ticket is good for both afternoon and evening.

COMMUNITY WELFARE CLUB

The Community Welfare Club will meet at the library basement on Friday afternoon of this week, Feb. 25.

This is the annual business meeting and election of officers for this year. All members are urged to be present, and all the ladies of the community who are not members are cordially invited to come and join the most worth-while club in town.

Membership dues are only one dollar a year.

Serving committee—Mrs. Earl Madsen, Mrs. Wm. Galliger, Mrs. E. S Fyler, Mrs. C. J. Jones, Mrs. M. G. Luick, Mrs. Guy Baker, Miss Rena Purdy, Miss Daisy Cameron, Mrs. Louis Hauge, Mrs. J. D. Baker.

DISTRICT COURT SLOWLY GRINDS

District Court slowly grinds away, the Cunningham slander suit having been disposed of in favor of Dr. Cunningham, of Goldfield, the defendant. Another slander suit is now on for trial, Patrick Brennan vs. Wm. Wood, a case from Eagle Grove.

The Mc Dowell divorce case is still up for consideration. A new divorce was filed this week. Lillian Nelson vs. Roy Nelson. She is alleging cruelty and inhuman treatment, and her petition alleges that he was guilty of associating with other women and bragged about it. She was given a temporary order for the payment of $50 to secure witnesses and pay attorney fees, and $60 a month until a decree is rendered. They have two children, a son and daughter.

There is still plenty of business ahead, mostly of minor importance.

Clarion Suffers Disastrous Fire In Gasoline Explosion

Explosion Of Barrel Of High Test Gasolene Wrecks Buildings And Destroys Much Property.

SEVERAL MEN BADLY BURNED

Fire starting from the explosion of a barrel of high test gasoline, gutted the Roosevlt grocery in the G. W. Young corner block, Thursday afternoon and severely injured John Graves, A. C. Jackson and Ed and Willard Whitman, who were badly burned. Physicians, after dressing the four, stated that their injuries, tho painful and severe, were not necessarily fatal.

The explosion occurred in the rear room of the Roosevelt grocery Tuesday afternoon when a drayman and clerks were unloading a barrel of gasoline. In their endeavor to tap the barrel after it had been placed in its accustomed position they pounded the barrel with a hammer and it is believed a spark from one of the blows ignited the gasoline, causing he blast which wrecked the store and shook he entire countryside, shattering windows in business houses throughout the business district.

Graves, the most seriously hurt, was standing in a doorway when the explosion occurred. He was blown 30 feet into the middle of the street. His clothes were stripped from him by the force of the blast and every inch of his body was charred. Mr. Jackman, a drayman, was severely burned on the face and hands. The flesh where the full force of the blaze had reached was scorched and cooked. On Mr. Jackman's hands it rolled off in small strips.

Explosion Aroused the City.

The explosion came shortly before four o'clock. It came with a deadened sound, and shook every business building on the street. People sensed that it was no ordinary explosion and before the flames and smoke were pouring through the front of the store, hundreds of people were rushing to the street. The alarm was sounded and in less than three minutes the hose cart was getting into action. The volunteer firemen did valiant work, exposing themselves to the suffocating smoke and intense fire, but it was practically three quarters of an hour before the blaze was under control, and it was more than an hour after the explosion before the blaze had been smothered and put out.

The explosion and fire caused the total wreck of the Roosevelt Grocery store and heavy loses in the Odd Fellows hall which is above it and the McCoy and Nagles dry goods store.

AMERICAN LEGION PLAY

Eimbring Post No. 35 of Belmond will stage a play in the near future to raise money so that we may establish a permanent organization for the veterans of the world war. It is our aim to secure club rooms where we may hold regular meetings and equip for entertainments or any social gatherings we might have. To accomplish this aim we ask your support.

We have secured the services of Josephine Freil McAlpine, and under her directions its success is assurred.

FREE AIR!

Ye ed went to Des Moines last week to attend the Sixth Annual Convention of the Iowa Press Association.

We were accompanied by Leo Kenefick, otherwise known as "Kenny."

And we had some time!

You tell 'em!

First off, we went on the Rock Island, and to start things right, the train started off without us. We gave a first-class imitation of a steam whistle, and the conductor waves for a stop.

We were off. And pretty soon we thought the train was, too. When it wasn't going up it was going down or sideways, some of the time all three at once.

We traveled first class. That is, in the baggage car, along with the rest of the live stock. Chickens, and geese, and dogs, and other insects.

We had some time, that's a fact. At Dows we transferred for Iowa Falls, and at that place for Des Moines. All the express messengers lugged a gat. One was a sort of half-grown pop gun that might have made a noise had it gone off. Had we been a bandit, we would have been afraid the thing might get mixed in the loot.

At Iowa Falls we ran across Ray Klemme, and the three of us had chow in a swell cafe. At least, we suppose by the price that it was swell.

But say, the prices there were not in it with the capital city. Down there it costs you six bits to get a tooth pick, and after you've got thru paying for the meal you generally go without the pick.

There's a reason.

It was colder than a miser's heart at Iowa Falls, and the train was late so that we laid in that burg for three hours. Had a fine time there. Fine.

Got to Des Moines an hour late, and went to the Savery, where we had a room reserved. An hour later we were full of food, cinders and thought. About equally divided.

You can get anything you want in Des Moines—if you have the price. We figured that we had the price for just about three days, and after that we were coming home where you could get a ham sandwich for two nickels instead of four bits and a tip.

The Savery is some dump, tho, we will say that for it. Service is their motto, and you certainly get it. The whole thing looks like the idle dream of a spendthrift millionaire.

Never saw a person we knew on Thursday until Wallace Ramsay, of the Herald-Press, hailed us. Say, he looked mighty good to us, we're here to remark. The next day we met Mr. Wolcott, who sent his regards to his old friends here.

The meetings were excellent, and we gained much that was of great value to us in the newspaper game. The speakers numbered some of the ablest in the country, among them being our next secretary of agriculture, Mr. Wallace, of Des Moines, Gov Parker, of Louisiana, speakers from Ames, Des Moines, and other points, who knew what they were talking about.

Thursday night we had the pleasure of seeing the prettiest girl in Iowa, Jaunita Thompson, of Jesup the prize winner of the Des Moines Capital's contest. Boys, she was sure a dream! Ask Kenny; he had an introduction.

Friday night we were among the five or six hundred guests of the Greater Des Moines Committee at a banquet in the ball room of the Savery hotel. It was a splendid feed, with two very excellent addresses by Wallace and Parker.

The ball room, which occupies a small part of the second floor of the hotel, is about the size of the opera house.

We started home Saturday night via the M. & St. L. That road from Des Moines to Fort Dodge is a living truth of the saying: "Misery and still late." It was both, in large quantities. We suggest to the war department that all recruits to the navy be given a ride over that road before going to sea. If they can do it and live, seasickness will never bother them at all.

There was a duck on board, and it's almost the truth that that duck laid an egg, and the thing was scrambled when we got to Fort Dodge.

The messenger was an ex-service man. Two stations out of Des Moines a rough box was shoved in, and the two sat on the box and swapped tales all the way. There was a bunch of shovels there too, and with the box and the shovels, Keny said all they needed was something to plant. We had a sneaking notion that if the road got any worse we'd furnish the final necessity.

At Fort Dodge we visited with "Shorty" White, night agent at the Interurban. Pretty soon Howard Wolle came in, and shortly after Lars Johanson, and we held a reunion.

There were lots of adventures on the trip that we haven't mentioned. For instance, there was the souse who tried to get in our room at 1 p m. or a. m. rather, Saturday morning. Kenny gently persuaded him that he was in the wrong pew, and the fellow went across the hall to reconsider. He went real fast and sudden, too.

Then there were the elevator girls. But ask Kenny about them. He rode up and down all day.

Four things about Des Moines that impressed us:

They have the most pretty girls of any town we were ever in.

And the most homely men;

They have the most polite citizens:

And the highest prices.

It's a clean looking town, a hustling place, and contains some splendid buildings. Something is always happening there to furnish front page stuff; there was a murder, suicide, auto accident, fatal, and a fire within two or three blocks of us during the three days, to say nothing of the rest of the town.

We wouldn't want to live there, and especially at a hotel, on a bet. It gets too monotonous. We have never met with finer people. tho and our trip was very enjoyable as well as profitable in every way.

We sure had some time. Ask Kenny.

Kenny ran around with a badge pinned on him, which stated that be belonged to the order. He insisted that he was the "chairman" of the outfit, and that we were the "cherrie". At that he wasn't very far off.

And he had his pichure took, as one of the editors of the state. He looks as wise as an owl. Thinking of the elevator girls, probably.

We had a regular time, You tell 'em.

NIGHT TRAINS TO CARRY EXPRESS AFTER MARCH 1

Express Company Sends Special Representative To Belmond To Investigate The Field.

MEETS SOME LOCAL PARTIES

Sees Need For Improved Service And Promises To Start Night Service First of The Month.

Mr. F. J. Nolan. route agent of the American Express company, with headquarters at Fort Dodge, was in Belmond last week Monday to look the express field over.

He came in answer to the dozens of letters and complaints from the various business firms and establishments of Belmond, regarding the service which this town was receiving over the Great Western road, with one-way service.

Mr. Nolan talked with he president of the Chamber of Commerce, with sugar company officials, looking the field over for night service and soon arrived at the conclusion that the town was deserving of better express service.

The night service will start the first of March, and it is the intention to resume the Sunday service also in the near future.

With this, Belmond will receive in a large degree a service that will meet the needs of the town.

Much of the credit for this improvement may be given to J. S. White, local agent for the company. He has endeavored at all times to get a real service here, and it was thru his strong endorsement that the matter was finally given serious consideration.

FIREMEN DO SOME QUICK WORK IN TEST LAST WEEK

The fire company was given an unexpected test last week, when the fire chief, Geo. Brady, gave them a surprise test.

The alarm was sounded, and the fire company timed from the instant of the alarm. The test ws a run some 12 blocks to the north end of town, where the fire was supposed to be.

In one minute and a half from the first sound of the siren, the company was on the way to the scene, with full equipment and ready for action. In five minutes from the sound of the alarm, they had the engine on the spot, the hose unwound, connected up, and water flowing.

This is some record for a volunteer fire company, and one which the citizens of the community should take great pride in. It indicates that in Belmond the fire protection, so far as the fire company is concerned, is number one.

The boys, however, are lacking in some equipment, and some means should be found immediately of securing for the necessary equipment, so that should Belmond be visited by a fire such as Clarion's recent one, the firemen would be able to adequately combat it.

EXPRESS COMPANY HELPS EUROPEAN RELIEF

Among the numerous agencies throughout the country co-operating with Herbert Hoover, Chairman of the European Relief Council, in his efforts to raise $33,000,000 by means of a national collection for the relief of incipient starvation among 3,500,000 children in the war stricken countries of Easter and Central Europe are the American Express Co., and the American Railway Express Company

Through the authorization of G. C. Tayler, president of both organizations, "INVISIBLE GUEST" certificates, certifying that the purchaser has salvaged the life of one or more of the little war victims, have been placed on sale in 25,000 of the company's offices thruout the United States. The cost of saving one child until the acute condition has been relieved by the next European harvest is $10.00, but donations of smaller sums are welcome, and a contribution of only $1.00, under the economical administration of the Council, will keep life in a little body for a month.

The European Relief Council is an amalgamation of the American Friends Service Committee, American Red Cross, American Relief Administration, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., formed by Mr. Hoover for the elimination of duplicate effort in ministering to the starving children, to the end that the last penny of every dollar contributed might reach a hungry child in the form of food or medical service.

OLD TIME SALE.

The News, of Newton, Iowa, says: "Orville Godwin brings the Daily News the following clipping of a public sale held in Kentucky in 1850. It is interesting to read, even if the articles offered for sale are not to be seen at a public sale of these days. The bill follows:

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

WALL LAKE ENTERTAINMENT

Floyd Bubeck, W. L. Meyer and Ed. Smith, officers of Wall Lake township farm bureau, announce a meeting at the center school for Friday evening, Feb. 25, at 7:30.

Arrangements have been made for a special speaker from Ames who will lecture on the subjects which are closely associated with the farm bureau work of the state. The county agent will also be present to assist in the meeting.

Due to a misunderstanding regarding the date of the last meeting the county agent failed to put in an appearance but notice is hereby given that he will be at this next meeting without fail.

Every farm bureau member in the township is especially urged to attend this meeting because the special speaker intends to spend considerable time in explaining what has been done in the past by the farm bureau as well as what it expects to do in the future.

LINCOLN SOCIAL AT DISTRICT 6

A real community get-to-gether social was held at Lincoln school district No. 6 on Friday evening, Feb. 18, and the school house was packed with farmers, their wives and children to enjoy the splendid program which was so well arranged.

We understand that this program was planned and arranged by a committee of three men consisting of W. W. Cooley, chairman, Enos. C. Matson and C. A. Collins. This committee did very good work, but due credit must be given Miss Downing, a local teacher, who gave such valuable assistance in executing the program which had been arranged.

The evening's program was started with a business meeting during which plans were formulated for the next regular community club meeting which was planned for the evening of March 11. After this short business meeting the regular program was taken up. The first number of the regular program was community singing lead by Miss Downing, followed by one number which was put on by the pupils of the local school. This was followed by a selection from the male quartette, after which a splendid reading was rendered by Glen Simpson of Galt. An interesting talk was then given by the county agent, followed by another reading by Miss Thelma Purse, of Sioux City. The next number on the program was a debate on the subject, "Resolved: That dairy cattle are more profitable than beef cattle in Wright county," the affrmative being taken by W. W. Weld, Enos C. Matson and G. W. State, the negative going to C. A. Collins, Clarence Rusk and . W. Cooley. The decision of the judges, consisting of Howard Meeker, Wm. Dexter and county agent Edwards, rendered a unanimous decision in favor of the affrmative. This was followed by a very interesting address by Miss Blanch Bock, county superintendent of schools, and then by a general plan being given for the next meeting as outlined by the committee.

Again Lincoln township has shown its ability to plan and execute a real community social and all those who took active part in this affair should feel well complimented by the fact that such a splendid showing was made at this meeting. The gathering broke up at about midnight and everyone who attended left with a firm determination to continue the community spirit which was so evident in Lincoln township.

HOME EQUIPMENT LECTURES

Miss Bertha Holden, assistant state leader of home demonstration agents, was in Wright county on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 16 and 17, for the purpose of conducting home equipment lectures.

The meeting which was held at the center school, Eagle Grove township, at 10:00 a. m. Wednesday, Feb. 16, was well attended and considerable interest developed in regard to planning kitchens in new farm homes. Mr. and Mrs. Cowan, who have just completed a new home recently, were present and brought out several points of interest in connection with the kitchen equipment in their new home. Miss Holden made some very modern equipment which it is possible to have at a very reasonble cost.

Miss Holden conducted the same type of a meeting in the Troy church, Troy township, on the afternoon of Feb. 16, and altho the roads were bad the ladies who were particularly interested in the work managed to get to the meeting. Miss Holden's work seems to have taken quite favorably in the county and we regret that we could not have her with us longer. Because of the poor condition of the roads the meetings for Miss Holden which were scheduled in Grant and Lake townships, for the morning and afternoon of Thursday, Feb .17, were postponed until some later date when the weather and road conditions will be more favorable for her work. Mrs. M. L. Clark and E. W. Campbell, the township chairmen for Lake, and Mrs. Myrle Peck and C. L. Hall, for Grant, wish to announce that arrangements will be made if possible to secure the services of Miss Holden for this work later and in case it is possible to get her back with us, announcement of dates will be made.

COUNTY AGENT CONFERENCE AT EMMETSBURG

About 19 county agents representing the counties of northwest Iowa met at the office of county agent Fred F. Clarke, at Emmetsburg, Iowa, on Tuesday, Feb. 15, for the purpose of talking over the matter of importance to all farmers of this section of the state.

Plans for organizing and executing the work for the coming year were outlined at this meeting and several resolutions for improving the work were recommended and accepted. A committee of three county agents was appointed by the chairman of the meeting to draft resolutions and a copy of these resolutions will be printed later.

W. T. Maakestad, county agent for Kossuth, with headquarters at Algona was elected temporary chairman at the conference and Glen Ellis, county agent for Cherokee, was elected temporary secretary for the meeting.

Our local agent attended this conference and returned the same day to resume his regular work at Clarion. Matters of importance were brought up at this meeting which will be carried to the state conference of county agents, home demonstration agents and extension workers which will be held at Ames, during the week of Feb. 21. It is during this week that all county agents and extension workers will exchange views on a state-wide plan for carrying on the farm bureau work for next year. With 100 county agents in the state of Iowa it is thought that some very definite plan of procedure will be developed a this Ames conference.

NEAR EAST RELIEF CAMPAIGN

The Near East Relief campaign which was staged in Wright county a short time ago has given encouraging results which is indicated by the returns which have been turned in recently.

Up to the present $151.83 has been contributed by farmers and others of the community, who felt that the cause was a worthy one and realized that their assistance however small, was needed and appreciated.

It will be remembered those who wished to contribute to the relief of the starving children of Europe were asked to contribute to the cause by giving corn, which was to be turned into cash and sent direct to the relief fund to be used in buying corn near the sea board.

This is a splendid showing up to date, but a number of people who have indicated their desire to contribute to this cause have not turned in their portion as yet, and it is hoped that in the near future these contributions as well as others which may be given toward this fund will be coming in promptly, so that the matter will be cleared up as soon as possible and the 400,000 starving children in Europe, who are looking to this country, the land of plenty, for food merely to prevent death, from starvation will not be dissappointed in the confidence which the people have placed in our great nation.

For Indigestion and Constipation.

"The nicest and pleasantest medicine I have used for indigestion and constipation is Chamberlain's Tablets," writes Melard F. Craig, Middle Grove, N. Y. They work like a charm and do not gripe or leave any unpleasant effect.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy

LARGE LITTERS PRODUCED BY PROPER CARE AND FEED

One of the outstanding features of State College at Brookings, is the large Poland China Litters, 12 to 15 in a litter being not at all uncommon.

"In fact, when I visited the college, it seemed to me that I had never seen so many litters of unusual size assembled in one small spot in my life," said Guy W. Green, of the staff of the Poland China Journal in writing of this remarkable herd.

James W. Wilson, professor of animal husbandry at the college and director of the South Dakota experiment station, says that the care and feed the sows receive is largely responsible for their unusual prolificacy, also that in selecting prospective matrons he keeps especially in mind the number of pigs in the litters from which they came.

Exercise is also a large causative factor in the reproductive enthusiasm which the sows show, he says They are constantly walked to and from the pavilion where they are used by the classes in stock judging.Thus they receive their exercise at the same time that they are serving the commonwealth in the education of the rising generation.

The college is especially proud of the barrows, which it markets every fall, the ones sold in November being the best that ever eft the institution.

FIRST IN FARMING

When this country was in its time of greatest stress it turned to a farmer for guidance, and he led it to victory and independence.

George Washington was the sort of farmer whose everyday life qualified him for leadership. He was a great reader and a thoughtful student. He was a dilligent searcher for improved methods. The ways that were good enough for father were not always good enough for him. His farming tools were kept dry and clean. He is shown to have studied and intelligently practiced crop rotation. He selected good seed for planting. For a man of his time and station George Washington worked hard, but he was never too busy to lend a hand when neighborliness and good citizenship were the principal demands. He has been well honored as a soldier and a statesman. This is to accord him recognitioni as a good farmer.

ROWAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES

The Rev. Tomkinson will deliver his lecture, "The Pathos and Humor of the Halifax Explosion," in the M. E. church, on Monday, Feb. 28, at 7:30 p. m. This promises to be one of the most thrilling lectures ever given in Rowan, as Mr. Tomkinson was eye witness of the scenes and incidents connected with the great catastrophe. The explosion which cost Canada forty million dollars was brought about by the colliding of two war boats, a French munition boat, the Mont Blanc, which carried hundreds of tons of high explosives, and the Imo, a Belgian relief steamer. You cannot afford to miss this interesting talk. Admission will be by ticket.

ROWAN CONG. CHURCH NOTES

Sermon topics for Sunday, Feb. 27, at the Congregational church are announced as follows: a. m.—"The Hindered Builders." Junior talk: "A New Rule of Multiplication." p. m.—"He Went Away."

The church was well filled at the morning service. The pastor's sermon on "The Pastured Sheep" was full of inspiration and her Junior talks are a sermon in themselves. The evening sermon was strong and the ones present felt benefited by being there. The choir furnished special music at both services.

ROWAN SCHOOL NOTES

Grace Fitz, Izetta Fletcher, Mrs. Will Bailey, Mrs. LaGue and Rev. Tomkinson visited the primary room last week.

Little Fern Carr of grade one is very sick. Class mates hope she will be with them again soon.

LaVonne McCallum of grade two has been neither absent nor tardy thus far during the school year.

Wendell Payne enrolled in the second grade last Tuesday.

Edward Rietz is back in school after a long spell of sickness.

Bealuh Payne entered the fifth grade Monday.

Mrs. Perle LaGue, Mrs. Earl Sellers and Mrs. Andrews visited Miss Drahiem's room Wednesday.

Joe Hubbel had a slight attack of tonsilitis last week.

Donald McCallum is improving from his injury nicely at this writing.

The home declamatory contest is to be held Tuesday eve. Feb. 22 at 8 o'clock. Here's a good chance to hear from students who have put forth an effort to show ability before the public. Let's show our co-operation by being there. The winning contestants go to the county contest Friday evening, Feb. 25, at Belmond.

The boys' and girls' basket ball tetams played at Sheffield, Friday, Feb. 18, but both gmes were non-victorious to Rowan. Both teams were greatly handicaped, by having players off the team.

The pupils of the high school attended the live stock sale on Thursday, Feb. 17, as part of their agriculture work.

C. G. Morrison spent the week end in Hampton with friends.

Bernice Bailey has been on the sick list.

Marie Hinkley was absent from school Thursday, because of illness.

One of the classes in high school enjoy themselves immensely on certain occasions. This is noted especially by others when they come from classes, as they always need a drink of water.

Russell Gates, of Sioux City, came Tuesday to spend a short time with relatives and friends at this place. He goes from here to Pasadena, California.

D. W. Whitten returned from the G. W. C. convention at Des Moines, Thursday.

Sunday of last week the following were guests at the Fred Aldrich home Edgar Mantle, Marjorie Brooks, Thelma Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jaccobs.

Mrs. Chris Fowler and Mrs. F. H. Fowler were Dows callers between trains Friday.

E. Bingham went to Belmond, Friday, to attend a Duroc Jersey hog sale put on by E. G. Reed & Son and Geo. Thompson. They sold about 50 head, the price running from $35 to $60 per head. A good crowd attended.

A nine-pound girl arrived at the home of Peter Mathiason, Thursday, Feb. 17.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred -Kercheval and small son were Belmond callers on Friday.

Mrs. Fred Smith, of Carion, was visiting her mother, Mrs. Snyder, on Saturday.

The anniversary of the W. F. M. S. will be held in the M. E. church next Sunday, Feb. 27. A special program of music is being prep[illegible]ed for the service, and the pastor w[illegible] deliver a special sermon on "The C[illegible]s and Crown of a World Program." There will also be a reception of members at the morning service. The pastor's subject in the evening will be "The Sunshine of Your Smile." The world has no use for people who go around with a growl and a grouch, it wants people who can smile. The old saying: "Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone," has more than partial truth in it.

The people of Rowan were fortunate last Sunday in being able to listen to two splendid addresses in the M. E. church by Capt. Boblitts. "The Unknown Girding of God" was the subject of his morning discourse and in the evening he spoke on "Bolshevism." His talks will long be remembered by the large audience who listened to him.

Thursday night the neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Iserman gave them a easant surprise by bringing refreshmens and spending a very enjoyable evening together, before Mr. Iserman's leave for their new home in North Dakota. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jacobs, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Hadley and children, Mr. and Mrs. Strayhorn and children, Mr. and Mrs. Nettles and children, Mr. and Mrs. Sim Stout, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Moon and baby, and Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Haupt. They enjoyed the evening very much.

Mrs. Sarah Moon was called to Hampton by the serious illness of Charley Roe.

John Fletcher, of near Grundy Center, surprised his sisters, Mrs. Will Whitten and Miss Alice Fletcher, with a visit over the week end.

Clifford Snow spent the week end at the Will Whitten ho[illegible]e.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brooks entertained at dinner the following guests on Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jacobs, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Miller, Chester Moellering and Edgar Mantle.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard McCallum had a few young people in Wednesday even[illegible] for a social time. During the games of the evening, Mrs. McCallum got her arm hurt so that she had to have medical aid to have it dressed. Those present were: Geo. Aldrich, Blanch Box, Thelma Brooks, Chester Moellering, Marjory Brooks, Edgar Mantle, Russell Gates, of Sioux City, and Donald McCallum.

Friday night, at the A. H. Emerson home, the Messrs. H. J. Whitten, Ed. Underdahl, Roland Harris, Howard Box D. W. Whitten, Will Whitten and Lem Rowen were hostesses at a pre-nuptial miscellaneous shower given in honor of Miss Grace Fitz, of Clarion. Over fifty of her friends were present. The evening was spent in guessing games and contests. The house was beautifully and appropriately decorated with hearts and cupids. At the close of the evening, after partners had been found by matching hearts, dainty refreshments were served in which the heart idea was carried out. Grace received many beautiful and useful presents and her friends all hope she will enjoy using them as much as they enjoyed giving them.

Mrs. R. L. Robinson and Mrs. G. R. Stumph were Clarion callers on last Thursday.

MEMBER IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

DOES ADVERTISING PAY?

That is a question which every man who runs a business has at some time asked himself.

It does—and pays big.

The writer attended he Iowa Press Association meeting at Des Moines last week, and heard this question asked and answered in an emphatic mnner.

The Spencer newspaper conducted a "survey," or in other words, a contest, to see just what advertising was doing in its territory. The results of their test are highly illuminating, both to newspaper men and to those in other lines of business.

It was found, by direct questionaires sent to the subscribers, that 92 per cent of them said they read the advertisements. Get that—92 per cent. 98 per cent of the farmers read the sale ads.

The large percent of the subscribers admitted trading at the stores which advertised.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that this test proved that Spencer firms who advertised regularly enjoyed by far the greatest volume of business. In Belmond, the same thing can be proved. One of the local dealers, from two dollars in Independent ads, realized sixty dollars in trade which he knew of!

The Spencer survey showed that more farmers read the advertisements than town people, but the fact that the average was over 90 per cen proves that both town and country are alike in reading them.

Advertising in the Spencer newspaper, by this survey, was proven a result-bringing medium. The same thing can be proven in any newspaper that comes anywhere near being a newspaper. As a rule, the occasional ad does not result in very much profit; it is the steady hammering in successive issues which brings home the bacon. There are many instances, however, where the occasional ad has brought big results. And the fact that these occasional ads have brought results only proves how much better the steady hammering brings.

Take any large, successful business in the country, and without exception you will find that they are steady, consistant advertisers, and that they cut down this portion of their overhead last. Any newspaper will be more than willing to prove that it pays, and pays big. There is nothing to show that it doesn't, and a great deal to prove that it does.

CONGR CHURCH -- -- -- -- -- --

The Ladies Missionary Society will meet in the parlors of the church on Thursday afternoon for the monthly meeting. All ladies are invited to attend. The usual services will be held next Sunday morning. In the evening we will have another stereopticon lecture in which we will visit "Sunny Italy on Pilgrim Shores." Those who went on the trip thru Florida last Sunday night had a very profitable trip.

We extend a hearty invitation to all to attend our services.

LOST: ONE GENERATION

From a radius of a hundred miles or mor found every industrial center the farms have been stripped, not only of their boys, but also of their girls, enticed by high wages and the short hours, first into munition factories, then into the manufacture of every conceivable form of goods of luxury for which the world has been until now willing to pay extravagant prices.

And these boys and girls of fifteen or sixteen have earned—that is, obtained—five, six, seven and even as high as eight dollars a day for unskilled labor—sums which their hard working mothers and fathers never dreamed of in the old days when they were paying for their homes, and sums with which farm employment could not then and never can compete.

Of course the public paid the bill—for a time—and nobody seemed to care what was going on or likely to happen, and even yet we are thinking mostly about the money stringency brought on by our era of extravagance. But what about these young people; what is to become of them? That is one of our biggest questions.

They are facing a great awakening to the fact that they have been living in highly artificial world, which never existed before and cannot now continue long. They have obtained unheard of wages for nominal amounts of very ordinary service. They have reveled in more money than youngg people ever possessed before. Some of them have received more money in a day than their fathers earned in a month, and not a few of the skilled and semi-skilled have gotten as much for eight hours work as their grandfathers earned in a year. This seems incredible, yet many a young imigrant labored twelve whole months in the old country for the fifteen or eighteen dollars with which to pay his steerage passage to the land of plenty.

What will these young people do now, that the carnival is over? Will they go back to the farms whence they came and settle down to the prosy, everyday occupation of actually earning honest returns in real money from real sweat of the real brow? Not they? Or as they probably put it, "Not in mine." They were never born before, and not having lived normal lives, they naturally reason that what they have done is partly the result of the new day that has been so much talked about; and if they go home at all, it will be to visit or to loaf until "times improve," or else they are going out job hunting—mostly the latter.

If these young people—very young many of them—had known the game they would have saved their money to put into homes. Some of them did this very thing, but more of them spent it as they went along. Many of them are in debt today for useless and extravagant purchases, costly fur coats or other expensive clothing, $500 engagement rings, and the like. Besides forming habits of extravagance and spending that have no relation whatever to the actual earning power of men and women, these young people have no yardstick for measuring values against work.

One of the number was recently deploring the spending habits of these newly rich young workmen. "Why," he said, "I've been in this town a whole month now and I have not actually fooled away over fifteen or twenty dollars in all that time." "Fooled away," only fifteen or twenty dollars! And this from a youngster with nothing but his hands and an opinion that he was decidedly economical. Think of it. And think of what it means to this generation of perfectly good young people mostly now spoiled for real work and real business, such as the world must settle down to pretty soon.

Now, such people as these will not go back to the farm. Thrift, which is the price of real prosperity, is a lesson they have not learned and most of them will never learn it. These country communities will have to breed and rear a new generation of young people to do the work on the farms, and indeed, even to take care of many of these prodigals, who will in the end return, broken in spirit, and too often in body, to be cared for by those they look down upon—their country relations. We believe there is a story of this kind in the Good Book that some of us would do well to read before we grow too busy earning "big money"—for what?

No, we have a hiatus of five or six years at least in the strain of young people on whom the world must depend for its real work, for this crop has been largely spoiled for the business of farming. A few will rub their eyes and go to work after the Great Disillusionment, but most of them will begin drifting, looking for jobs and going on to swell to larger numbers than ever that vast army known generally as migratory labor—in the winter as the "unemployed."

In the meantime the farm will have lost a generation of perfectly good blood that it badly needed and will need, and many a country home will pass into a renter's hands, possibly into the ownership of immigrants, for no other reason than that the proper heir earned "big money" in the nearby factory when the war was on and during the spending craze that followed.

We talked much about demobilizing the actual army, but we have given little thought to that younger and vaster army of boys under twenty and girls under eighteeen whose heads have been turned aside from the path of real progress and who are now being demobilized. How? and into what?

It is no longer the problem of the farm but it is somebody's problem to consider what can be done with this vast army of disillusioned young people rapidly advancing toward mature one day to constitute an important stratum of American society.

In the meantime we must set about growing up another generation on the farm to take the place of this five-year crop unfitted for the land and in many cases—too many—already spoiled for constructive labor.

—Country Gentleman.

TO THE MOTORING PUBLIC

It is our desire at all times to furnish the motoring public with the best possible service at the lowest figures consistant with good work.

In order to do this, and keep our prices down, we must eliminate collection costs.

We find it necessary to place our shop on a cash basis. This is not in any way a reflection upon your credit but a sincere desire on our part to serve you at the lowest possible cost.

We believe that you will heartily endorse this plan to eliminate lost time and needless expense, which matures to your benefit as well as to ours.

We will, therefore, from and after March 1st., expect all work to be settled for upon is completion, and there will be no book accounts.

BASE BALL MEETING

There will be a meeting this week Thursday night, at the city hall, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Everyone who is interested in a base ball team for Belmond this year should be on hand to assist in organizing and getting things started. Belmond needs and is going to have a base ball team this year, and the fans should get behind it from the start. It is understood that the plans for the team this year contemplate an all-home team, and the only hired man will be a pitcher, which Belmond must have to have a team. The boys have had a year's experience in playing together, and they should be in shape to show some high class base ball this season. Remember the date and the place, and be there to lend your encouragement for a winning all-home team this coming summer.

Doubtless you have seen many pictures with the Kentucky fued element used as a basic plot. Some of them have been entirely too dramatic, the author's ideas principally being a developement of a series of shootings thruout. In this feature a half-wit is relied upon to furnish most of the excitement.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to "Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

CHAPTER IV.—The girl sets out across the Divide, in the darkness, to bring a physician. She has a sense that she is being stalked by some animal, and becomes uneasy. Dan, who had been shooting, arrives home and finds Lennox. Both Lennox and Dan fear for "Snowbird's" safety, and Dan at once sets out to overtake her. The animal stalking the girl is the cougar which had finished Hildreth, now become a hunter of man. Failing arrives only just in time to save the girl's life, and in that manner pays part of the debt he owes her. As evidence of Dan's returning strength he strangles the animal, which, though wounded by a revolver shot from "Snowbird's" weapon, was a most formidable enemy.

Of course they might be feeding on the body of a deer, mortally wounded by some hunter. He resolved to ride by without investigating. He glanced up. The buzzards were hovering in the sky, evidently waiting for him to pass. Then, mostly to relieve a curious sense of discomfort in his own mind, he stopped his horse and dismounted.

The twilight had started to fall, and already its first grayness had begun to soften the harder lines of forest and hill. And after his first glance at the curious white heap beside the trail, he was extremely glad that it had. But there was no chance to mistake the thing. The elements and much more terrible agents had each wrought their change, yet there was grisly evidence in plenty to show what had occurred. Dan didn't doubt for an instant but that it was the skeleton of Landy Hildreth.

He forced himself to go nearer. The buzzards were almost done, and one white bone from the shoulder gave unmistakable evidence of the passage of a bullet. What had happened thereafter, he could only guess.

He got back quickly on his horse. He understood, now, why nothing had been heard of the evidence that Landy Hildreth was to turn over to the courts as to the activities of the arson ring. Some one—probably Bert Cranston himself—had been waiting on the trail. Others had come thereafter. And his lips set in his resolve to let this murder measure in the debt he had to pay Cranston.

The Lennox house seemed very silent when, almost an hour later, he turned his horse into the corral. He had rather hoped that Snowbird would be at the door to meet him. The darkness had just fallen, and all the lamps were lighted. He strode into the living room, warming his hands an instant beside the fireplace. The fire needed fuel. It had evidently been neglected for nearly an hour.

Then he called Snowbird. His voice echoed in the silent room, unanswered. He called again, then went to look for her. At the door of the dining room he found the note that she had left for him.

It told, very simply and plainly, that her father lay injured in his bed, and he was to remain and do what he could for him. She had gone for help to the ranger station.

He leaped through the rooms to Lennox's door, then went in on tiptoe. And the first thing he saw when he opened the door was the grizzled man's gray face on the pillow.

"You're home early, Dan," he said. "How many did you get?"

It was entirely characteristic. Shaggy old Woof is too proud to howl over the wounds that lay him low, and this gray old bear on the bed had partaken of his spirit.

"Good Lord," Dan answered. "How badly are you hurt?"

"Not so bad but that I'm sorry that Snowbird has gone drifting twelve miles over the hills for help. It's dark as pitch."

And it was. Dan could scarcely make out the outline of the somber ridges against the sky.

They talked on, and their subject was whether Dan should remain to take care of Lennox, or whether he should attempt to overtake Snowbird with the horse. Of course the girl had ordered him to stay. Lennox, on the other hand, said that Dan could not help him in the least, and desired him to follow the girl.

"I'm not often anxious about her," he said slowly. "But it is a long walk through the wildest part of the Divide. Some way—I can't bar accidents tonight. I don't like to think of her on those mountains alone."

And remembering what had lain beside the trail, Dan felt the same. He had heard, long ago, that any animal that once tasted human flesh loses its fear of men and is never to be trusted again. Some wild animal that still hunted the ridges had, in the last month, done just that thing. He left the room and walked softly to the door.

The night lay silent and mysterious over the Divide. He stood listening. The girl had started only an hour before, and it was unlikely that she could have traversed more than two miles of the steep trail in that time. Although the horse ordinarily did not climb a hill more swiftly than a human being, he didn't doubt but that he could overtake her before she went three miles farther. But where lay his duty—with the injured man in the house or with the daughter on her errand of mercy in the darkness?

Then the matter was decided for him. So faint that it only whispered at the dim, outer frontiers of hearing, a sound came pricking through the darkness. Only his months of listening to the faint sounds of the forest, and the incredible silence of the night enabled him to hear it at all. But he knew what it was, the report of a pistol. Snowbird had met an enemy in the darkness.

He called once to Lennox, snatched the shotgun that still stood where he had placed it in the corner of the room, and hastened to the corral. The mare whickered plaintively when he took her from her food.

* * * * * * *

When Snowbird first heard the step in the thickets beside her, she halted bravely and held her lantern high. She understood at last. The very extremity of the beams found a reflection in two very curious circles of greenish fire: a fire that was old upon the world before man ever rubbed two sticks together to strike a flame. Of course the dim rays had simply been reflected on the eyes of some great beast of prey.

She identified it at once. Only the eyes of the felines, with vertical pupils, have this identical greenish glare. The eyes of the wolves glow in the darkness, but the circles are usually bright points. Of course it was a cougar.

She didn't cry out again. Realizing at last the reality of her peril, her long training in the mountains came to her aid. That did not mean she was not truly and terribly afraid. The beast was hunting her. She couldn't doubt this fact. Curiosity might make a lion follow her, but it would never beget such a wild light of madness in his eyes as this she had just seen. She simply clamped down all her moral strength on her rising hysteria and looked her situation in the face. Her hand flew instinctively to her side, and the pistol leaped in the lantern light.

But the eyes had already blinked out before she could raise the weapon.

She Shot Twice.

She shot twice. The echoes roared back, unbelievably loud in the silence, and then abruptly died; and the only sound was a rustling of leaves as the cougar crouched. She sobbed once, then hurried on.

She was afraid to listen at first. She wanted to believe that her pistol fire would frighten the animal from her trail. She knew, under ordinary conditions, that it would. If he still followed, it could mean but one thing—that some unheard-of incident had occurred to destroy his fear of men. It would mean that he had knowingly set upon her trail and was hunting her with all the age-old remorselessness that is the code of the mountains.

For a little while all was silence. Then out of the hush the thickets suddenly crashed and shook on the opposite side of the trail. She fired blindly into the thicket. Then she caught herself with a sob. But two shells remained in her pistol, and they must be saved for the test.

Whisperfoot the cougar, remembering the lessons of his youth, turned from the trail when he had first heard Snowbird's step. He had crouched and let her pass. She was walking into the wind; and as she was at the closest point a message had blown back to him.

The hair went straight on his shoulders and along his spine. His blood, running cold an instant before from fear, made a great leap in his veins. A picture came in his dark mind: the chase for a deer when the moon had set, the stir of a living thing that broke twigs in the thickets, and the leap he had made. There had been blood, that night—the wildness and the madness and the exultation of the kill. Of course there had been terror first, but the terror had soon departed and left something lying warm and still in the thickets. It was the same game that walked his trail in front—game that died easily and yet, in a vague way he did not understand, the noblest game of all. It was living flesh, to tear with talon and fang.

All his training, all the instincts imbued in him by a thousand generations of cougars who knew this greatest fear, were simply obliterated by the sudden violence of his hunting-madness. He had tasted this blood once, and it could never be forgotten. The flame leaped in his eyes. And then he began the stalk.

A cougar, trying to creep silently on its game, does not move quickly. It simply steals, as a serpent steals through the grass. Whisperfoot stalked for a period of five minutes, to learn that the prey was farther away from him at every step.

He trotted forward until he came close, and again he stalked. Again he found, after a few minutes of silent creeping through the thickets, that he had lost distance. Evidently this game did not feed slowly, like the deer. It was to be a chase, then. Again he trotted within one hundred feet of the girl.

Three times more he tried to stalk before he finally gave it up altogether. This game was like the porcupine—simply to be chased down and taken. And in the case of all animals that hunt their game by overtaking it, there was no longer any occasion for going silently. The thing to do was to come close and spring from the trail behind.

Though the fear was mostly gone, the cougar retained enough of that caution that most wild animals exhibit when hunting a new game so that he didn't attempt to strike Snowbird down at once. But as the chase went on, his passion grew upon him. Ever he crept nearer. And at last he sprang full into the thickets beside her.

At that instant she had shot for the first time. Because the light had left his eyes before she could find aim, both shots had been clean misses. And terrible as the reports were, he was too engrossed in the chase to be frightened away by mere sound. This was the cry the man-pack always made—these sudden, startling sounds in the silence. But he felt no pain. He crouched a moment, shivering. Then he bounded on again.

The third shot was a miss too: in fact, there had been no chance for a hit. A sound in the darkness is as unreliable a target as can possibly be imagined. And it didn't frighten him as much as the others. He waited, crouching, and the girl started on.

She was making other sounds now—queer, whimpering sounds not greatly different from the bleat that the fawn utters when it dies. It was a fear-sound, and if there is one emotion with which the wild beasts are acquainted, in all its phases, it is fear. She was afraid of him, then, and that meant he need no longer be in the least afraid of her. His skin began to twitch all over with that terrible madness and passion of the flesh-hunters.

This game was like the deer, and the thing to do was lie in wait. There was only one trail. He wasn't afraid of losing her in the darkness. She was neither fleet like the deer nor courageous like Woof the bear. He had only to wait and leap from the darkness when she passed.

* * * * * * *

When Dan Failing, riding like mad over the mountain trail, heard the third shot from Snowbird's pistol, he felt that one of the debts he owed had come due at last. He seemed to know, as the darkness pressed around him, that he was to be tried in the fire. And the horse staggered beneath him as he tried to hasten.

He showed no mercy to his mount. Horse-flesh isn't made for carrying a heavy man over such a trail as this, and she was red-nostriled and lathered before half a mile had been covered. He made her leap up the rocks, and on fairly level stretches he loosed the reins and lashed her into a gallop. Only a mountain horse could have stood that test. He gave no thought to his own safety. His courage was at the test, and no risk of his own life must interfere with his attempt to save Snowbird from the danger that threatened her. He didn't know when the horse would fall with him and precipitate him down a precipice, and he was perfectly aware that to crash into a low-hanging limb of one of the great trees beside the trail would probably crush his skull. But he took the chance. And before the ride was done he found himself pleading with the horse, even as he lashed her sides with his whip.

The lesser forest creatures sprang from his trail; and once the mare leaped high to miss a dark shadow that crossed in front. As she caught her stride, Dan heard a squeal and a rattle of quills that identified the creature as a porcupine.

By now he had passed the first of the worst grades, coming out upon a long, easy slope of open forest. Again he urged his horse, leaving to her keen senses alone the chosing of the path between the great tree trunks.

Then he heard Snowbird fire for the fourth time; and he knew that he had almost overtaken her. The report seemed to smash the air. And he lashed his horse into the fastest run she knew—a wild, sobbing figure in the darkness.

"She's only got one shot more," he said. He knew how many bullets her pistol carried; and the danger—whatever it was—must be just at hand. Underbrush cracked beneath him. And then the horse drew up with a jerk that almost hurled him from the saddle.

He lashed at her in vain. She was not afraid in the darkness and the rocks of the trail, but some Terror in the woods in front had in an instant broken his control over her. She reared, snorting; then danced in an impotent circle. Meanwhile, precious seconds were fleeing.

He understood now. The horse stood still, shivering beneath him, but would not advance a step. The silence deepened. Somewhere in the darkness before him a great cougar was waiting by the trail, and Snowbird, hoping for the moment that it had given up the chase, was hastening through the shadows squarely into its ambush.

Whisperfoot crouched lower: and again his long serpent of a tail began the little vertical motion that always precedes his leap. He had not forgotten the wild rapture of that moment he had inadvertently sprung on Landy Hildreth—or how, after his terror had died, he had come creeping back. He hunted his own way, waiting on the trail; and his madness was at its height. He was not just Whisperfoot the coward, that runs at the shadow of a tall form in the thickets. The consummation was complete, and that single experience of a month before had made of him a hunter of men. His muscles set for the leap.

So intent was he that his keen senses didn't detect the fact that there was a curious echo to the girl's footsteps. Dan Failing had slipped down from his terrified horse and was running up the trail behind her, praying that he could be in time.

Snowbird heard the pat, pat of his feet; but at first she did not dare to hope that aid had come to her. She had thought of Dan as on the faraway marshes; and her father, the only other living occupant of this part of the Divide, might even now be lying dead in his house. In her terror, she had lost all power of interpretation of events. The sound might be the cougar's mate, or even the wolf pack, jealous of his game. Sobbing, she hurried on into Whisperfoot's ambush.

Then she heard a voice, and it seemed to be calling to her. "Snowbird—I'm coming, Snowbird," a man's strong voice was shouting. She whirled with a sob of thankfulness.

At that instant the cougar sprang.

Terrified though she was, Snowbird's reflexes had kept sure and true. Even as the great cat leaped, a long, lithe shadow out of the shadow, her finger pressed back against the trigger of her pistol. She had been carrying her gun in front of her, and she fired it, this last time, with no conscious effort. It was just a last instinctive effort to defend herself.

One other element affected the issue. She had whirled to answer Dan's cry just as the cougar left the ground. But she had still been in range. The only effect was to lessen, in some degree, the accuracy of the spring. The bullet caught the beast in mid-air; but even if it had reached its heart, the momentum of the attack was too great to be completely overcome. Snowbird only knew that some vast, resistless power had struck her, and that the darkness seemed to roar and explode about her.

Hurled to her face in the trail, she did not see the cougar sprawl on the earth beside her. The flame in the lantern almost flicked out as it fell from her hand, then flashed up and down, from the deepest gloom to a vivid glare with something of the effect of lightning flickering in the sky. Nor did she hear the first frenzied thrashing of the wounded animal. Kindly unconsciousness had fallen, obscuring this and also the sight of the great cat, in the agony of its wound, creeping with broken shoulder and bared claws across the pine needles toward her defenseless body.

But the terrible fangs were never to know her white flesh. Some one had come between. There was no chance to shoot: Whisperfoot and the girl were too near together for that. But one course remained; and there was not even time to count the cost. In this most terrible moment of Dan Failing's life, there was not even an instant's hesitation. He did not know that Whisperfoot was wounded. He saw the beast creeping forward in the weird dancing light of the fallen lantern, and he only knew that his flesh, not hers, must resist its rending talons. Nothing else mattered. No other consideration could come between.

It was the test; and Dan's instincts prompted coolly and well. He leaped with all his strength. The cougar bounded into his arms, not upon the prone body of the girl. And she opened her eyes to hear a curious thrashing in the pine needles, a strange grim battle that, as the lantern flashed out, was hidden in the darkness.

A Strange, Grim Battle.

And that battle, in the far reaches of the Divide, passed into a legend. It was the tale of how Dan Failing, his gun knocked from his hands as he met the cougar's leap, with his own unaided arms kept the life-giving breath from the animal's lungs and killed him in the pine needles. Claw and fang and the frenzy of death could not matter at all.

Thus Failing established before all men his right to the name he bore. And thus he paid one of his debts—life for a life, as the code of the forest has always decreed—and in the fire of danger and pain his metal was tried and proven.

BOOK THREE

The Payment.

CHAPTER I.

The Lennox home, in the wilderness of the Umpqua Divide, looked rather like an emergency hospital for the first few days after Dan's fight with Whisperfoot. Its old sounds of laughter and talk were almost entirely lacking. Two injured men and a girl recovering from a nervous collapse do not tend toward cheer.

But the natural sturdiness of all three quickly came to their aid. Of course Lennox had been severely injured by the falling log, and many weeks would pass before he would be able to walk again. He could sit up for short periods, however; had the partial use of one arm; and could propel himself—after the first few weeks—at a snail's pace through the rooms in a rude wheel chair that Bill's ingenuity had contrived. The great livid scratches that Dan bore on his body quickly began to heal; and before a week was done he began to venture forth on the hills again. Snowbird had remained in bed for three days; then she had hopped out one bright afternoon, swearing never to go back into it again. Evidently the crisp, fall air of the mountains had been a nerve tonic for them all.

Of course there had been medical attention. A doctor and a nurse had motored up the day after the accident; the physician had set the bones and departed, and the nurse remained for a week, to see the grizzled mountaineer well on the way of convalescence. But it was an anxious wait, and Lennox's car was kept constantly in readiness to speed her away in case the snows should start. At last she had left him in Snowbird's hands, and Bill had driven her back to the settlements in his father's car. The die was now cast as to whether or not Dan and the remainder of the family should winter in the mountain. The snow clouds deepened every day, the frost was ever heavier in the dawns, and the road would surely remain open only a few days more.

Once more the three seemingly had the Divide all to themselves. Bert Cranston had evidently deserted his cabin and was working a trap-line on the Umpqua side. The rangers left the little station, all danger of fire past, and went down to their offices in the federal building of one of the little cities below. Because he was worse than useless in the deep snows that were sure to come, one of the ranch hands that had driven up with Bill rode away to the valleys the last of the live stock—the horse that Dan had ridden to Snowbird's defense.

Nothing had been heard of Landy Hildreth, who used to live on the trail to the marsh, and both Lennox and his daughter wondered why. There were also certain officials who had begun to be curious. As yet, Dan had told no one of the grim find he had made on his return from hunting. And he would have found it an extremely difficult fact to explain.

It all went back to those inner springs of motive that few men can see clearly enough within themselves to recognize. Even the first day, when he lay burning from his wounds, he worked out his own explanation in regard to the murder mystery. He hadn't the slightest doubt but that Cranston had killed Hildreth to prevent his testimony from reaching the courts below. Of course, any other member of the arson ring of hillmen might have been the murderer; yet Dan was inclined to believe that Cranston, the leader of the gang, usually preferred to do such dangerous work as this himself. If it were true, somewhere on that tree-clad ridge clues would be left. Moreover, it was wholly possible that the written testimony Hildreth must have gathered had never been found or destroyed. Dan didn't want the aid of the courts to find these clues. He wanted to work out the case himself. It resolved itself into a simple matter of vengeance: Dan had his debt to pay, and he wanted to bring Cranston to ruin by his own hand alone.

While it was true that he took rather more than the casual interest that most citizens feel in the destruction of the forest by wanton fire, and had an actual sense of duty to do all that he could to stop the activities of the arson ring, his motives, stripped and bare, were really not utilitarian. He had no particular interest in Hildreth's case. He remembered him simply as one of Cranston's disreputable gang, a poacher and a fire bug himself. When all is said and done, it remained really a personal issue between Dan and Cranston. And personal issues are frowned upon by law and society. Civilization has toiled up from the darkness in a great measure to get away from them. But human nature remains distressingly the same, and Dan's desire to pay his debt was a distinctly human emotion. Sometime a breed will live upon the earth that can get clear away from personal vengeance—from that age-old code of the hills that demands a blow for a blow and a life for a life—but the time is not yet. And after all, by all the standards of men as men, not as read in idealistic philosophies, Dan's debt was entirely real. By the light held high by his ancestors, he could not turn his other cheek.

Just as soon as he was able he went back to the scene of the murder. He didn't know when the snow would come to cover what evidence there was. It threatened every hour. Every wind promised it. The air was sharp and cold, and no drop of rain could fall through it without crystallizing into snow. The deer had all gone and the burrowing people had sought their holes. The bees worked no more in the winter flowers. Of all the greater forest creatures only the wolves and the bear remained—the former because their fear of men would not permit them to go down to the lower hills, and the latter because of his knowledge that when food became scarce he could always burrow in the snow. No bear goes into hibernation from choice. Wise old bachelor, he much prefers to keep just as late hours as he can—as long as the eating places in the berry thickets remain open. The cougars had all gone down with the deer, the migratory birds had departed, and even the squirrels were in hiding.

CREAMERY MEETING HEID AT KANAWHA

The annual meetig of the Kanawha Farmers' Mutual Co-operative Creamery Co., was held at the Star Theater, Thursday afternoon of last week and a large number of stockholders and patrons were in attendance. John Cooper, Will Gray, and Charles Prull were elected as directors for a term of wo years, the former being re-elected. The Creamery has enjoyed a good run during the year and has been reasonably successful and one point the patrons should not overlook is the fact that a pro rata dividend is paid them over and above the regular price of butterfat. During the year of 1920 $1,889.44 was paid the creamery patrons by this profit sharing plan and this can be increased materially if patrons would see to it that their cream is delivered in the best of condition, thus enabling the buttermaker to produce a higher grade of butter, which would naturally bring a greater percentage of profit. This is up to the patrons and all should readily see the advantage of delivering cream fresh and sweet. It would mean bigger profits for both creamery and patrons and a co-operative effort should be made along these lines.—Kanawha Reporter.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whooping cough it is unsurpassed.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

ALLEGED BIGAMIST HAS HIS TRIAL TUESDAY

Clarion Wins Wright County Declamatory

Contest Proves Interesting And Is Closely Contested By All Of The Schools Entered.

LAST BASKET BALL GAME FRI.

Friday night March 4th., the girls basket ball team will play the Rowan girls on the home floor. The Rowan girls have been playing some fast games, and we can assure you the game here Friday night will be full of pep.

This is the last game of the season. Don't miss it.

Would Belmond back an Invitation Girls' Basket Ball Tournament? If so, we must find entertainment for teams that accept. Four teams would mean four good games. If you will help us furnish entertainment, lodging and meals, we will try to secure good teams.

Friday night of this week Carol Tyrrell will uphold Belmond at the sub-district at Britt, and we KNOW that the school will be well represented. B. H. S. is backing Carol 100 per cent. We only wish that train connections would permit of a delegation to go to Britt with her.

The decision of one judge in the Dramatic class Friday night came as a surprise not only to Belmond, but to the coaches of the other schools represented. The concensus of opinion of all who heard the contest seems to be that Belmond's representative should have had a place. However, it is only the decision of the judge that counts, so will have to try it again next year.

The boys' basket ball team will leave Thursday noon for Iowa State Teachers College at Cedar Falls to take part in the basket ball tournament. Placing of teams in the contest will take place Friday at 9:00 o'clock. We expect our boys to make a showing.

On Friday evening, February 25th., the Wright County Declamatory Contest was held in the high school auditorium. Representatives of six schools, Clarion, Dows, Goldfield, Rowan, Eagle Grove and Belmond took part in each of the three divisions. The official score for each was as follows:

ORATORICAL

John Scott ____________ Clarion, 1st
William Chase ________ Belmond, 2nd
Donald McCallum ______ Rowan, 3rd

DRAMATIC

Agnes Birdsall ________ Clarion, 1st
June McComas _______ Dows, 2nd
Verla Bernard ____ Eagle Grove, 3rd

HUMOROUS

Elaine Rierson ______ Belmond, 1st
Leota Mulm ___________ Dows, 2nd
Margaret Eddy ______ Clarion, 3rd
First place ____________ Clarion
Second place ___________ Belmond

Even tho we lost the cup to Clarion, we are proud of our contestants, and congratulate them on their splendid showing.

Mrs. H. F. Luick and Master Wilbur Luick visited the kindergarten last week.

Miss Viva Rourk, third grade teacher, is absent from school duties being called home Saturday because of the serious illness of her brother.

BIRTH RECORD

To Mr. and Mrs. John Oliver Beckett, a son.

To Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Hirschi, of Clarion, a daughter, Gladys Theresia.

To Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Gilligan, of Clarion, a son, Richard Allen.

To Mr. and Mrs. Elling Ellington, of Belmond, a daughter, Eunice Naoma.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Weyken, of Clarion a son.

To Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Gibbs, of Clarion, a daughter, Mary Louise.

To Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Hall, of Eagle Grove township, a daughter, Freda Agnes.

To Mr. and Mrs. Earl C. Winslow, of Blaine township, a son, Robert John.

To Mr. and Mrs. Peter M. Mathiason, of Rowan, a daughter, Carol Elizabeth.

PROGRESS CLUB HOLDS PATRIOTIC PARTY

The Progress Club entertained their husbands and other guests at a very enjoyable patriotic party at the library on February 22nd. The decorations were in keeping both with the day and the scheme carried out by the committee for the evening's entertainment. Tiny hatchets, red, white and blue streamers, flags and bunting made the banquet hall a beautiful place.

The subdued lights, coming from blue candles in glass candlesticks; the old time castors, silverware, high cake plates, goblets and spoon holders carried out the clever effect of a party in the study of our grandmother's day.

The guests nearly all appeared in costume, some ladies, in fichu and cap, some in Paisley, shawls, some with powdered hair and elaborate old style of dresses. The gentlemen had been prevailed upon (most of them) to wear a few ruffles at neck and sleeve to carry out the general effect.

When all had found their places, it was found that everything was placed upon the table in the old fashioned way. The only rule in the simple service was to help your neighbor and yourselt.

The menu follows:

Stuffed pork tenderlon, gravy, mashed potatoes, escalloped corn, currant jelly, beet pickles, Parkerhouse rolls, nut bread, Washington salad, cherry pie with whipped cream, angel food, mints, nuts, coffee.

Following this feast of good things a splendid program was given, Mrs. W. W. Goetz, the club leader, acting as toastmistress.

Welcome ________ Mrs. W. W. Goetz
Response ____________ H. F. Luick
The "Stars" ____ Mrs. . I. Rosecrans
The "Stripes" ____ Mrs. J. E. Wallace
Piano solo, Star Spangled Banner, with variations __ Mrs. H. L. Gowdy
Reading, "Who Won the War?" ____________ Mrs. W. S. Pritchard
Solo, "My Own United States," ____________ Mrs. W. R. Ramsay

Everyone voted the party a decided success and felt an added pride in our country and our country's flag. ***

Sugar Co. Banquet Last Wednesday Very Interesting

Stockholders Given Treat By Company In Banquet At Library Last Wednesday Evening.

SEVERAL ADDRESSES ARE GIVEN

The banquet given the stockholders of the sugar company, by the company, last Wednesday evening was a very enjoyable affair and the source of much profitable information to those present. Talks were given by some of the company officials, plainly stating the condition of the company, and the unusual conditions under which it was built and operated. Several stockholders gave short addresses, appealing to the stockholders to stick together and boost for the betterment of the company. A very fine supper was enjoyed, prepared by the ladies of the Methodist Aid.

BEET PRICES AND SUGAR SALES INTEREST COLORADO

Denver, Colo., Feb. 14—This is a time of quiet and of speculation as to what is going to happen in the sugar world. In the interim between the closing of campaigns and the beginning of spring planting, two subjects are mainly engaging the consideration of members of the sugar industry in this part of the world. One is, what will the price of beets be this year? The other is, when will the sugar of last crop now on hand move?

The answer to the first question is the one which the farmer most wants to know, of course. Contracts are now being drawn up by all the companies and while no advance announcements as to terms are being made, it is declared that they will be such as to offer an attractive proposition to growers.

The question of when the sugar they made in the last campaign is going to be moved off their hands is becoming increasingly interesting to the sugar companies. The Great Western Sugar company with a total output of 6,300,000 bags of sugar, has sold only about one-sixth of its production at this time, whereas more than one-half of the crop has usully been disposed of by mid-February.

The men now at the head of the farmers' organizations are sound farmers and business men, on whom radicalism has no hold, and the general attitude on both sides is such that relations are better, probably, than they have been for some time.

The farmers have now more appreciation than in some previous years of the value of sugar factories, properly managed, to themselves, especially as beets were their saving cash crop last year, when nearly everything else fell down. Credit was hard to get to carry cattle and other products of the farms, but when the $45,000,000 cash paid for the beet crop came pouring out  from the sugar companies, business was able to go on with little interruption."—Facts About Sugar.

Every bag of Iowa Valley Sugar company output had been sold by January 15, 1921, five days after the run ended.

The company paid out $500,000 for beets.

COMMUNITY WELFARE CLUB

Last Friday the Community Club held their annual meeting and the election of officers. The new officers elected were:

President __________ Mrs. H. Schultz
Vice pres. ____ Mrs. W. I. Rosecrans
2nd vice pres. ______ Mrs. Gfeller
Secretary ____________ Maye Tracy
Treasurer ____________ Julia Johnson

Miss Johnson was unanimously reelected to the office she has held since the club was organized in 1915.

The club now has a total membership of 204.

The treasurer's report showed a balance of $318.46 on hand at the beginning of the year, the amount taken in during the year, $987.28, making a total of $1,305.74. The expenses were $861.89, leaving a balance of $443.85 on hand February 1921.

The expense of the upkeep of the rest room for the past year was $218.80.

Mrs. R. H. Klemme was given a rising vote of thanks for her efficient work as president during the past year.

COMBINATION SALE, MARCH 8

On account of another sale on the date previously chosen, I will hold the Combination Sale on Tuesday, March 8. Parties having any live stock, such as hogs, cattle, or sheep, should list them at once with T. D. Rankins, so that I can prepare stall for them. Don't forget the date of sale. It will be held in the Case livery barn. Considerable stock has been listed to date, including four good fresh milk cows and four Shetland ponies. Parties wanting any of them will find it profitable to attend this sale.

ELMER L. SPEER REPORTED TO HAVE HAD TRIAL

Alleged Bigamist Said To Have Received Sentence At Hancock County Court Tuesday.

LENGTH OF TIME NOT KNOWN

Printer Who Married Belmond Girl Under False Pretenses Last Year Finally Comes to Justice.

Elmer L. Spear, the alleged bigamist so well known to local people thru the sensational actions carried on thruout the past few months in Belmond and elsewhere, is reported to have received his sentence at the Hancock county court yesterday.

Just what he was given is not at this writing known, but his sentence is reported to have been be- and five years.

It is said that immediately following his sentence, wife number one started proceedings for a divorce.

It is also reported that Spear's attorney expects to secure his parole from the penitentiary at the end of a few months, six being the number he is reported to have said.

Spear married Miss Elsie Lee of this place last spring, after a few weeks courtship, during which he passed himself off as a single man, when in fact he had a wife and family at the time. After a short honeymoon he was arrested in Muskogee, Oklahoma, and brought back to Garner, where he was married to wife number two, and later released on bonds. He jumped his bonds, and was caught in South Dakota a couple months ago and brought back to stand trial. A baby was born to the second wife recently, and she and the child are said to have been at Garner yesterday.

The Independent, having employed Spear when he worked here, seems to have incurred in some manner the enmity of some of the parties connected with the case, and last night was indirectly given warning that the less said in this paper about the sentence the better it would be for the publisher.

The foregoing is the answer.

KLEMME FARMERS TO RAISE MORE SUGAR BEETS

Klemme Times: Tom Copeland, field man for the Iowa Valley Sugar company, of Belmond, has been in and around Klemme the past week interviewing farmers in regard to signing up sugar beet acreage. Mr. Copeland was in our office the other day and informed us that he only needed about 200 acres more to insure having a sugar beet dump insalled here. These dumps cost about $5,000 to erect and unless enough acreage can be secured it would not pay to put up a dump here. He is quite hopeful that the necessary acreage will soon be signed up as the prospects are good here. Albert Schmidt raised beets last year and has again signed up for 40 acres this season. Emil Kraus has signed again to raise beets and Wm. Baack has contracted to put in forty-five acres. There are of course numerous other contracts of varying size acreage. Mr. Coleland states that sugar beets will bring far more clear profit to the acre than can possibly be made with corn or any other farm product.

T. A. Davenport was in Des Moines last week in attendance and in conference with other members of the Iowa Independent Telephone Association in regard to the recent legislation affecting telephone companies thruout tionegarrin LYb m m m m m m m Iowa, where it was proposed to place all telephone companies under the jurisdiction and management of all town and city governments. Mr. Davenport was called upon to give a special talk upon the subject, which is reported to have been very good and full of punch.

FREE AIR!

Have you noticed the fashion that seems to prevail in hair dressing with the girls lately?

They bring it down over the ears, so that they are covered, and merely the tip peeks out.

Just what the idea is we haven't been able to figure out, unless it is to save the time and trouble of washing them. Covered up that way, it wouldn't make any difference, so far as the looks were concerned.

Ain't style funny?

Now if theyl are going to cover up their ears, why not wear overshoes on their feet too? Isn't the one as practical as the other?

But what's the difference, anyway?

Robinson the Baker was telling us of a request made to him recently. Seems there are a bunch of Mexicans who pine for the bread of their native land, and they want him to manufacture same.

Now this Mexican manna is some article. It is composed of four ingredients, namely: water, flour, salt, and yeast. You mess it together, the bigger the mess the better the mess, in their opinion. Then you put it in the oven and bake it, just like civilized food.

But before you bake it, you take a brush and a can of paint, and you go over the mess with a composition to give it color. Then when it is baked it is nice and Mexican in style.

The finished result, we gather, is somewhat like real food in looks, but it has the same relation to bread as near beer does to the rel stuff: It looks like it, and smells like it, but it ain't got the authority.

Hand painted stuff comes high nowadays, and we told Robinson that if we had to go thru the mill making that stuff, we'd see that it was worth it—and not in Mexican money, either.

We hear that Kanawha has some doubts about playing our base ball team this summer. Don't know if they have cold feet, or whether they have come to a realization of the luck they ran in last summer.

That town was the original luck factory last year; situated in a 40-acre field of four-leaf clovers they had a horse-shoe factory, and every employee had the left hind foot of a black rabbit killed in a grave yard in the dark of the moon.

Maybe they have found out that lady luck is like all feminine folks, apt to be rather fickle at times.

The men are same way, ladies, so don't get up on those ears you keep covered.

Don't forget the Firemen's Ball on March 17th. It's cheaper to give a dollar now than to lose a thousand by a fire.

The Independent has been busy the past week getting out a cattle sale catalogue. The pedigrees in it make us wonder. They run clear back to the bovine that furnished the material for part of Mother Goose. How many humans can trace theirs very far back? How far can you?

Most of us don't want to go very far into the past; we're afraid of what would turn up.

But if they keep 'em of stock, why not of folks? Maybe because the stock is worth money. We take more care of our stock than we do of our children, most of us.

In order to provide stalls for hogs, cattle or sheep it is necessary to have them listed this week with T. D. Rankins or the Belmond Savings Bank. Anything else you may have for sale should be listed as soon as possible with the above parties. Try to have your goods listed not later than Monday,March 7, as all entries will close on Tuesday, March 8, at 12:00 o'clock noon. There has been listed for this sale a five-passenger Chevrolet touring car, in good running order and in fine condition. It will last for years if properly cared for. Reason for selling is that the party needs the money for other purposes. Terms of sale will be cash or bankable notes on 9 months' time, as I have made arrangements with the bank to cash notes and you will therefor receive cash for your property sold.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

FARM BUREAU STATE CONFERENCE

The state conference which was attended by all county agents, all home demonstration agents and all extension workers of the state, was the most successful meeting of its kind which was ever held in the history of the work in Iowa.

The conference lasted from Monday, February 21, to Friday, February 25, and altho the sessions seemed arather long and tiresome at times every akent or extenslon worker gives the same report as to the great success of this state meeting.

It seemed to be the sentiment of the entire group of agents and extension workers that such a conference is necessary for carrying on the work successfully. Scores of problems of vial interest to the farmers of Iowa cme up for discussion and it is thought that the meeting of the leaders of the great work for the purpose of exchanging views on the various problems is the only way in which the work can be carried on to the greatest advantage.

One of the most interesting speakers who appeared on the program was James R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who touched upon the plan of work for the American Federation for the coming year and in speaking of the problems conected with this great work he mentioned the financial problems, the railroad rates, the federal land banks, and the marketing problems. John W. Coverdale, Mr. Howard's able secretary, also gave a very interesting address and the talks which were given by these men were surely an inspiration to he agents and extension workers of Iowa. Particularly because these men who are directing the activities of the National Farm Bureau Federation are products of our good old state of Iowa. Other inteeresting speakers who appeared on he program were C. W. Hunt president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, and E. H. Cunningham, secretary of the same organization, and A. L. Middletonn from our home county.

The feature of this meeting was the splendid address given by J. H. Nordhausen of Manson, Calhoun county, who owns and operates a quarter section of land near Munson. The fact that Mr. Nordhausen is an active farmer added to the interest of the meeting and the farmers who had the pleasure of hearing this farmer lecturer were highly impressed with the information which hes gave out. Mr. Nordhausen has been connected with the Iowa Farm Bureau Federatio for the past two years and has had an opportunity to make a close study of the Federation and its ctivities. Everyone seemed to feel that Mr. Nordhausen knew his subject from beginning to end.

WRIGHT COUNTY AT THE STATE CONFERENCE

Again Wright county was called upon to take active part in the state conference which was held at Ames during the week of Februaiy 21st. A. L. Middleton, of Eagle Grove, who has been actively connected with the committee of seventeen since his appointment by James R. Howard last August, was asked by the program committee of the conference to address this group of agents and extension workers and explain in detail just what steps have been taken in marketing problems by the committee of seventeen of which Mr. Middleton is one of the most active members.

Wright county people in general should indeed feel proud of Mr. Middleton and of his connection with this committee of seventeen which has done so much towards the solution of the marketing problems for the entire United States. Wright county is surely forunate in naving a man who is looked to by all farmers and all farmers' organizations thruout the United States as an authority on the marketing problems.

LIVELY BOARD-DIRECTOR MEETING

The regular monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Wright County Farm Bureau was held at the office of County Agent Edwards, Friday afternoon, February 25, and every township in the county except three was represented at the meeting and a few townships were represented by as high as three members from their respective townships.

Those who were in attendance were: George Kirstein, of Woolstock vice president; E. W. Campbell, Lake, secretary; Geo. A. Miller, Vernon, treasurer; T. A. Knight, Liberty; Grant Trask, Eagle Grove; A. L. Middleton, Troy; J. F. Henn, Pleasant; Geo. P. Hardwick, Belmond; Harry Woodley, Grant; Floyd Bubeck, Wall Lake; Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Clark, Lake; Barney Benson, Dayton; Mrs. Anna Overbaugh, Roy Woodley and Charles M. Overbaugh, Lincoln.

The main problem which came up for consideration was the matter of handling binder twine for the farmers of Wright for the coming season. While no definite steps were taken for purchasing the twine for next year on account of the uncertainty of the present quotations on twine, the members of the board were agreed hat the twine would be ordered for all of the Wright county thru the farmers elevators and implement dealers and that a margin of one-half cent per pound should be allowed each dealer or elevator manager for handling the twine at the car on the date of arrival of the car at the shipping point. A small charge, possibly one-fourth cent per pound, will be charged for those who

WALL LAKE SOCIAL WELL ATTENDED

A meeting of the Wall Lake township Farm Bureau was held at the center school Friday evening, February 25.

The farmers of Wall Lake are to be congratulated upon the spirit of co-operation which was shown in planning such a successful community affair. Due credit should be given Miss Howieson, the local teacher, for the splendid efforts put forth by her in making the program possible. Those who enjoyed the school program must realize that the program which the teacher arranged represented an endless amount of work in preparation and in drilling the pupils for it.

CORN ENSILAGE ABSOLUTE NECESSITY TO DAIRYMAN

For dairy purposes corn silage is second to none, and its value as a dairy feed is no longer an experiment with successful dairymen. It is an absolute necessity, suggests Thomas M. Olson, instructor in dairy husbandry at the state college of South Dakota.

No silo which was properly built and filled with corn at the right stage of maturity, he says, has eve been discarded. Neither is there any farmer who had a silo on his farm and used its succulent, nutricious feed that is willing to do without one.

In addition to being nutricious succulent feed, corn silage is one of the cheapest feeds for dairy cows. According to the best authorities corn silage made from corn ensiled at the proper stage of maturity contains 22 pounds of digestible crude protein and 354 pounds of total digestible corbohydrate equivalent, per ton. A farm in the average state of fertility will produce from 6 to 8 tons of silage per acre. Many farmers produce 12 to 14 tons per acre on good soil.

Corn should be ensiled at the proper stage of maturity to get the best results. If it is allowed to get too ripe it will be too dry and difficult to pack.

LIVESTOCK DRAINAGE AND BETTER ROTATION WILL PAY

The next increase in South Dakota land values will most likely be brought about by the development in fertility by the feeding of livestock on the medium sized farms, the drainage of the lowlands and better crop rotation, says J. C. Holmes, livestock specialist in the extension division of the South Dakota State College. As an average, he says, the most money made by SouthDakotans in the last 20 years has been made through the development of the country.

The farmer who produces grain without producing livestock either becomes a buyer, borrower or beggar reads an old English maxim. With the shipping cost of marketing a lb. of beef in the form of grain two cents more than on the hoof, it is readily seen how the cattle feeding industry will have to come. It also costs an average of a cent and a half per lb. more to ship the grain to make a pound of pork than it does to ship the pound of pork to market.

Cheap feed and high railroad rates also makes it profitable to ship in elements to balance up the food ration So the farmer will have to look toward the legume crops, the silo and the oat huller to balance up his feed rations and get his cheap feed.

At the present time one has to ride for miles to see a good sweet clover or alfalfa hog pasture, or to find hogs being fed alfalfa or sweet clover hay. The statistics show that the northwest is considerably below the average in the number of stock on hand, but the supply here does not control the market. After a new country is broken up and the large herds are disbanded the small farms will raise more stock all together than was originally raised in the large herds, besides raising hogs, poultry and grain crops.— From the South Dakota College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts Co-operative Extension.

They Appeal to Our Sympathies

The bilious and dyspeptic are constant sufferers and appeal to our sympathies. Many such, however, have been completely restored to health by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. These tablets strengthen the stomach, invigorate the liver and improve the digestion. They also cause a gentle movement of the boweus. When you have any trouble with your stomach, give them a trial.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

ROWAN CONG. CHURCH NOTES

In Dr. Kelman's "Among Famous Books," he refers to Isaiah's description of the typical pagan. Many will recall the story. The man goes out into the woods to cut a tree. With part of the tree he builds a fire to warm himself; with another part he cooks his food, and with other parts still, he satisfies other wants. After he had done all these things he uses what is lef of the tree to construct the image of the God which he worships.

Altho this man was not antagonistic to religion he sought first the satisfying of his physical need, and after that was done he devoted the residue to religion.

This same type of paganism confronts us today. We all know people who are not antagonistic to religion but who simply do not find time for it. The physical needs are son insistant and for the most part they are satisfied with tangible things, while the deeper spiritual needs which are are not so clamorous can be satisfied only by quiet devotion and sacrificial living. These are so frequently left to the last. Let us give the more important things first place.

If you are without a church home you are invited to worship at the Congregational church. Sunday, March 6th., the sermon themes will be as follows: "Christian Fundementals.' Junior talk: "The Lesson in the Echo." P m.—"Modern Hypermetropia."

The Sunday school selected their committees for the Easter program. The following were slected: Program committee, Blanch Box, Mrs. Howard Box, Mrs. Fred Williams and Mrs. T. Streveler. Mrs. Brooks is chairman of the committee for decorating.

Friday night the Mesdames Earl Sellers, Will Rietz, Frank Kercheval, George Pritchett, F. B. Sheldon, Theo Hansen, Ed. Azeltine, Henry Azeltine, Walt Whitten and Clarence Lindsey were hostesses at a prenuptial miscellaneous shower given at the M. E. church parlors, in honor of Miss May Azeltine. Over 60 were present. The evening was spent in pleasant games. One feature of the evening was an original poem, composed and read by Mrs. H. Tomkinson, which was very appropriate for the occasion. Toward the close of the evening Chas. Kercheval, dressed for a shower in raincoat and hat, drove in a pair of prancing colts, in the persons of Constance Tomkinson and Maxine Sheldon, hitched to an express wagon, which was daped in pink and white crepe paper and in which was a basket filled with lovely and useful gifts for the bride-to-be. Partners were then found for supper by matching pictures of furniture, which is found in homes. Each picture when matched had an original verse written on it, which applied to each piece of furniture. These were all read before he dainty refreshments were served. The evening was enjoyable and May's many friends wish her many years of happiness. Those present at the shower from out of town were: Mrs. Joe Lukens and daughter, Violet; Mrs. Myron Hill, and Miss Grace Fitz, all of Clarion, and Mrs. Hathaway, of Mitchell, S. D., grandmother of the bride-to-be.

S. B. Heath was a Dows caller, Saturday.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

BOOST THE FIRE COMPANY

The fire company will hold a bazaar and ball on the 17th of March, for the purpose of raising funds to secure very much needed equipment. It behoves every citizen of the town and every farmer within a radius of five miles, to get behind them and boost to the limit.

In the first place, it should not be necessary for the firemen, who do volunteer duty, to put themselves out to secure equipment; such should be furnished them by the city. When a man volunteers to do someone else's work, it is generally considered as a part of the bargain that he is to be furnished something to work with. But as circumstances make it necessary that the firemen secure the equipment themselves, every citizen is in duty bound to help them.

The boys will hold a bazaar, at which they will sell at auction anything that is donated by the community for the occasion. Most anything in the way of donations will be acceptable, and it is urged upon every citizen to donate something, no matter how small. A supper will also be served, cheaper than the same eats could be cooked at home, so let that part of the affair be crowded to the limit. After the supper a dance will be held, and with all the younger set who dance, let there be some of the older ones too, for the boys guarantee a good time.

The fire company is in need of around five to seven hundred dollars worth of equipment. Without it they cannot adequately combat any fire of any magnitude that may occur in the city. Belmond made a wise and able move when the chemical truck was secured, for it has saved its cost three times over already, and by securing the needed equipment to go with it—and five hundred dollars is a small sum for such a safeguard—the town will be in shape to take care of almost any fire that might break out.

The census gave us 1797 inhabitants, which, of course, was less than we have and the firemen must have five hundred dollars, so that if this amount is divided among the whole the amount per person won't be ruinous to anybody. Boost the boys, and get behind them. Every little helps, so come across with something. If you are going to be a citizen, live up to the name. The firmen donate ten years of service to you; you can donate a dollar to furnish them with tools to work for you.

HOW ABOUT THE BAND?

Of course Belmond is going to have a band this year, but isn't it about time that the thing was being placed in shape? Other towns around are already getting their bands in shape for the coming season, making their plans and getting their organization into shape before the summer.

Belmond has one of the best bands of its kind in the country, and one in which the town should, and does, take the greatest pride. Every effort therefore, should be made to give it a chance to perfect itself, to give the boys time to become organized and to get in practice for the coming season.

It would seem, as long as the adjacent towns are organizing, that the local band should be given the same opportunity. The band boys will be in better shape and know more where they are at, if the business men get together on the question now, instead of waiting until the season is here. Let's get the proposition started.

GETTING THE MOST FROM ADS

Any man who spends his good money for advertising, wants to be sure that he is going to secure results, that he isn't wasting his money. If the advertising isn't going to bring him results, he isn't going to advertise. And if advertising doesn't pay, he isn't going to spend his money on it.

But advertising does pay. It not only pays big, but if kept up it pays consistantly. You may take any of the largest concerns in the country, and without exception you will find them steady, heavy advertisers.

If advertising didn't pay, would they do it?

A Belmond business man, this winter, bemoaned the amount spent by another in advertising; it wasn't paying, it was throwing money away, wasting it, a useless expenditure of hard-earned cash. But the man who was spending it didn't seem to see it that way; he was getting results to beat the cars, his store was crowded with customers who were buying his goods.

Which of the two knew the most about it—the man who advertised or the man who didn't? If adveritising didn't pay, why was he spending his money for it?

Advertising will pay any man, in any business. The man who says he doesn't believe in it, will spend hours in dressing up his show window to attract the attention of the public—which is nothing more or less than one way of advertising. In doing it he admits that he believes in advertising.

What he does not believe in is not advertising, but newspaper advertising. Yet newspaper advertising is less expensive than other kinds, and draws bigged dividends. A newspaper is paid for by the subscriber as something he wants; he wants it bad enough to pay his money for it. He wants it to read. It goes into his home; he reads it, his wife reads it, his family reads it. The average family is figured at five persons, so that for every subscriber, a newspaper can figure that five people will read it. The Independent's circulation of over eight hundred, therefore, means that five times eight hundred, or four thousand and over, of people will read it. Can any man send four thousand circulars thru the mail, figuring the cost of print them and the postage and time in nserting, stamping and addressing them, for what he could reach the same number of people thru a quarter or a half page advertisement in the local newspaper? Circulars are forced on the reader; he gets it whether or no; the newspaper comes to him because he wants it bad enough to pay for. The ad is cheaper, reaches the same number of people, and goes where it is wanted. Now which is the best?

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The trustees will meet on Wednesday night at the Telephone office.

The services were well attended on last Sunday and we hope now as spring has come to see many of those who could not get in during the winter at all the services.

We are prepared to take care of 75 or 100 more in our Sabbath school. Come next Sunday at ten o'clock and bring some one with you. The regular services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

We are now within four weeks of Easter. Make it a time of great spiritual developement. The church will help you if you will line up with it.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

We are distributing this week thru the mail a little folder entitled: "What Centenary Money is Doing." It is gotten out by the church's committee on conservation and advance and shows in detail where and to what purpose Centenary money has been applied in both the home and foreign field. Many of these details have been published in the church papers but some do not take the papers and consequently do not know what is being done. A glance at this folder will soon convince anyone of the wonderful and varied work the church is accomplishing. "These acts bring the welcome ssurance that the Centenary program is being steadily, courageously, worked out into actuality." And yet these acts cannot begin to tell the whole story. The real achievement of the Centenary is not bricks and mortar, not so many workers supported; it is the story of lives made over, of peoples lifted up, and of religious awakening of thousands of communities. Study this record and keep it for future reference. We ought to be proud of it and rejoice that we have a small part in it.

Services of the church at the following hours next Sunday:

Sunday school at 10:00.

Preaching services at 11:00 and 7:30.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30, led by Miss Orlie Brooks. If without a church home we invite you to worship with us.

The W. F. M. S. meets with Mrs. W. R. Ramsay, Thursday afternoon. Mrs. H. F. Luick is leader of the lesson on "Gospel Messengers in China."

The Living Room

THE room where mother darns stockings and dad smokes his long briar pipe. Where Sis studies Arithmetic and little Ned builds castles with his alphabet blocks. Its the room where most American families live the greater part ot their home life. To select a wall paper for your living room is truly a task. We are certain we have some papers in our store which will readily take their place on your living room walls and add their bit of warmth to your home life. Come in any time and see what we have to offer.

"Easy to Get"

Marguerite Clark

Movie goers like Moarguerite Culark because for years she has given them the kind of photoplay entertainment that sends them away from the theatre smiling and refreshed. Watching a Clark picture, an audience itself feels much of the pep and sparkle that radiate from the pretty star's vivacious personality. She is a cure for the blues. She makes you forget the H. SATURDAY, MARCH 5

"Mrs. Temple's Telegram"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

Bryant Washburn

In the role of innocent Jack Temple, Mr. Washburn is pursued by a "vamp" of a designing type and has the misfortune to be locked for the night with this creature on the roof of a department store Of course, Jack knows, jealous Mrs. T. will not accept the true explanation of his absence, so he invents a Mr. Brown, with whom he claims to have spent the night. She is suspicious and sends a telegram to Brown. Jack induces his friend, Frank Fuller, to pose as Brown. The result is a gay mix-up of wives and husbands and an Italian manicurist that finally results happily.

MONDAY and TUESDAY
MARCH 7 and 8

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

A James Oliver Curwood story and a good one. If you have read the book you will know it, and won't want to miss this play, for the dramatic possibilities are unbounded and the action fast and furious.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to 'Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

CHAPTER IV.—The girl sets out across the Divide, in the darkness, to bring a physician. She has a sense that she is being stalked by some animal, and becomes uneasy. Dan, who had been shooting, arrives home and finds Lennox. Both Lennox and Dan fear for "Snowbird's" safety, and Dan at once sets out to overtake her. The animal stalking the girl is the cougar which had finished Hildreth, now become a hunter of man. Failing arrives only just in time to save the girl's life, and in that manner pays part of the debt he owes her. As evidence of Dan's returning strength he strangles the animal, which, though wounded by a revolver shot from "Snowbird's" weapon, was a most formidable enemy.

BOOK THREE—THE PAYMENT.

CHAPTER I.—Hildreth's disappearance is unaccounted for until Dan finds his mutilated body and near it the evidence which will send Cranston to the gallows and break up the outlaw gang. A record cold winter sets in. Cranston, suspecting that Hildreth's evidence is in existence, visits the Lennox home in the absence of Dan and "Snowbird," to search for it. He fails to find it, and in his rage and disappointment sets fire to the house, Lennox being powerless to stop him. The almost helpless man drags himself outside.

The scene didn't offer much in the way of clues. Of the body itself only a white heap of bones remained, for many and terrible had been the agents at work upon them. The clothes, however, particularly the coat, were practically intact. Gripping himself, Dan thrust his fingers into its pockets, then into the pockets of the shirt and trousers. All paper that would in any way serve to identify the murdered man, or tell what his purpose had been in journeying down the trail the night of the murder had been removed. Only one explanation presented itself. Cranston had come before him and searched the body himself.

Dan looked about for tracks, and he was considerably surprised to find the blurred, indistinct imprint of a shoe other than his own. He hadn't the least hope that the tracks themselves would offer a clue to a detective. They were too dim for that. The surprising fact was that since the murder had been committed immediately before the fall rains, the water had not completely washed them out. The only possibility remaining was that Cranston had returned to the body after the week's rainfall. The track had been dimmed by the lighter rains that had fallen since.

But yet it was entirely to be expected that the examination of the body would be an afterthought on Cranston's part. Possibly at first his only thought was to kill and, following the prompting that has sent so many murderers to the gallows, he had afterward returned to the scene of the crime to destroy any clues he might have left and to search the body for any evidence against the arson ring.

Dan's next thought was to follow along the trail and find Cranston's ambush. Of course it would be in the direction of the settlement from the body, as the bullet had entered from the front. He found it hard to believe that Hildreth had fallen in the exact spot where the body lay. Men journeying at night keep to the trail, and the white heap itself was fully forty feet back from the trail in the thickets. Perhaps Cranston had dragged it there to hide it from the sight of anyone who might pass along the lonely trail again; and it was a remote possibility that Whisperfoot, coming in the night, had tugged it into the thickets for dreadful purposes of his own. Likely the shot was fired when Hildreth was in an open place on the trail; and Dan searched for the ambush with this conclusion in mind. He walked back, looking for a thicket from which such a spot would be visible. Something over fifty yards down he found it; and he knew it by the empty brass rifle cartridge that lay half buried in the wet leaves.

The shell was of the same caliber as Cranston's rifle. Dan's hand shook as he put it in his pocket.

Encouraged by this amazing find, he turned up the trail toward Hildreth's cabin. It might be possible, he thought, that Hildreth had left some of his testimony—perhaps such rudely scrawled letters as Cranston had written him—in some forgotten drawer in his hut. It was but a short walk for Dan's hardened legs, and he made it before midafternoon.

The search itself was wholly without result. But because he had time to think as he climbed the ridge, because as he strode along beneath that wintry sky he had a chance to consider every detail of the case, he was able to start out on a new tack when, just before sunset, he returned to the body. This new train of thought had as its basis that Cranston's shot had not been deadly at once; that, wounded, Hildreth had himself crawled into the thickets where Whisperfoot had found him. And that meant that he had to enlarge his search for such documents as Hildreth had carried to include all the territory between the trail and the location of the body.

It was possibly a distance of forty feet, and getting down on his hands and knees, Dan looked for any break in the shrubbery that would indicate the path that the wounded Hildreth had taken. And it was ten minutes well rewarded, as far as clearing up certain details of the crime. His senses had been trained and sharpened by his months in the wilderness, and he was able to back-track the wounded man from the skeleton clear to the clearing on the trail where he had first fallen. But as no clues presented themselves, he started to turn home.

He walked twelve feet, then turned back. Out of the corner of his eye it seemed to him that he had caught a flash of white, near the end of a great, dead log beside the path that the wounded Hildreth had taken. For a moment he searched in vain. Evidently a yellow leaf had deceived him. Once more he retraced his steps, trying to find the position from which his eye had caught the glimpse of white. Then he dived straight for the rotten end of the log.

Into a little hollow in the bark, on the underside of the log, some hand had thrust a small roll of papers. They were rain-soaked now, and the ink had dimmed and blotted; but Dan realized their significance. They were the complete evidence that Hildreth had accumulated against the arson ring—letters that had passed back and forth between himself and Cranston a threat of murder from the former if Hildreth turned state's evidence, and a signed statement of the arson activities of the ring by Hildreth himself. They were not only enough to break up the ring and send its members to prison; with the aid of the empty shell and other circumstantial evidence, they could in all probability convict Bert Cranston of murder.

For a long time he stood with the shadows of the pines lengthening about him, his gray eyes in curious shadow. For the moment a glimpse was given him into the deep wells of the human soul; and understanding came to him. Was there no balm for hatred even in the moment of death? Were men unable to forget the themes and motives of their lives, even when the shadows closed down upon them? Hildreth had known what hand had struck him down. And even on the frontier of death, his first thought was to hide his evidence where Cranston could not find it when he searched the body, but where later it might be found by the detectives that were sure to come. It was the old creed of a life for a life. He wanted his evidence to be preserved—not that right should be wronged, but so that Cranston would be prosecuted and convicted and made to suffer. His hatred of Cranston that had made him turn state's evidence in the first place had been carried with him down into death.

As Dan stood wondering, he thought he heard a twig crack on the trail behind him, and he wondered what forest creature was still lingering on the ridges at the eve of the snows.

• • • • • • •

The snow began to fall in earnest at midnight—great, white flakes that almost in an instant covered the leaves. It was the real beginning of winter, and all living creatures knew it. The wolf pack sang to it from the ridge—a wild and plaintive song that made Bert Cranston, sleeping in a lean-to on the Umpqua side of the Divide, swear and mutter in his sleep. But he didn't really waken until Jim Gibbs, one of his gang, returned from his secret mission.

They wasted no words. Bert flung aside the blankets, lighted a candle and placed it out of the reach of the night wind. His face looked swarthy and deep-lined in its light.

"Well?" he demanded. "What did you find?"

"Nothin'," Jim Gibbs answered gutturally. "If you ask me what I found out, I might have somethin' to answer."

"Then—" and Bert, after the manner of his kind, breathed an oath—"What did you find out?"

His tone, except for an added note of savagery, remained the same. Yet his heart was thumping a great deal louder than he liked to have it. Realizing that the snows were at hand, he had sent Gibbs for a last search of the body, to find and recover the evidence that Hildreth had against him and which had not been revealed either on Hildreth's person on in his cabin. He had become increasingly apprehensive about those letters he had written Hildreth, and certain other documents that had been in his possession. He didn't understand why they hadn't turned up. And now the snows had started, and Jim Gibbs had returned empty-handed, but evidently not empty-minded.

"I've found that the body's been uncovered—and men are already searchin' for clues. And moreover—I think they've found them." He paused, weighing the effect of his words. His eyes glittered with cunning. Rat that he was, he was wondering whether the time had arrived to leave the ship. He had no intention of continuing to give his services to a man with a rope-noose closing about him. And Cranston, knowing this fact, hated him as he hated the buzzard that would claim him in the end, and tried to hide his apprehension.

"Go on. Blat it out," Cranston ordered. "Or else go away and let me sleep."

It was a bluff; but it worked. If Gibbs had gone without speaking, Cranston would have known no sleep that night. But the man became more fawning.

"I'm tellin' you, fast as I can," he went on, almost whining. "I went to the cabin, just as you said. But I didn't get a chance to search it—"

"Why not?" Cranston thundered. His voice re-echoed among the snow-wet pines.

"I'll tell you why! Because some one else—evidently a cop—was already searchin' it. Both of us know there's nothin there, anyway. We've gone over it too many times. After a while he went away—but I didn't turn back yet. That wouldn't be Jim Gibbs. I shadowed him, just as you'd want me to. And he went straight back to the body."

"Yes?" Cranston had hard work curbing his impatience. Again Gibbs' eyes were full of ominous speculations.

"He stopped at the body, and it was plain he'd been there before. He went crawling through the thickets, lookin' for clues. He done what you and me never thought to do—lookin' all the way between the trail and the body. He'd already found the brass shell you told me to get. At least, it wasn't there when I looked, after he'd gone. You should've thought of it before. But he found somethin' else a whole lot more important—a roll of papers that Hildreth had chucked into an old pine stump when he was dyin'. It was your fault, Cranston, for not gettin' them that night. This detective stood and read 'em on the trail. And you know—just as well as I do—what they were."

"D—n you, I went back the next morning, as soon as I could see. And the mountain lion had already been there. I went back lots of times since. And that shell ain't nothing—but all the time I supposed I put it in my pocket. You know how it is—a fellow throws his empty shell out by habit."

Gibbs' eyes grew more intent. What was this thing? Cranston's tone, instead of commanding, was almost pleading. But the leader caught himself at once.

"I don't see why I need to explain any of that to you. What I want to know is this: why you didn't shoot and get those papers away from him?"

For an instant their eyes battled. But Gibbs had never the strength of his leader. If he had, it would have been asserted long since. He sucked in his breath, and his gaze fell away. It rested on Cranston's rifle, that in some manner had been pulled up across his knees. And at once he was cowed. He was never so fast with a gun as Cranston.

"Blood on my hands, eh—same as on yours?" he mumbled, looking down. "What do you think I want, a rope around my neck? These hills are big, but the arm of the law has reached up before, and it might again. You might as well know first as last I'm not goin' to do any killin's to cover up your murders."

"That comes of not going myself. You fool—if he gets that evidence down to the courts you're broken the same as me."

"But I wouldn't get more'n a year or so, at most—and that's a heap different from the gallows. I did aim at him—"

"But you just lacked the guts to pull the trigger!"

"I did, and I ain't ashamed of it. But besides—the snows are here now, and he won't be able to even get word to the valleys for six months. If you want him killed so bad, do it yourself."

This was a thought indeed. On the other hand, another murder might not be necessary. Months would pass before the road would be opened, and in the meantime Cranston would have a thousand chances to steal back the accusing letters. He didn't believe for an instant that the man Gibbs had seen was a detective. He had kept too close watch over the roads for that.

"A tall chap, in outing clothes—dark-haired and clean-shaven?"

"Yes?"

"Wears a tan hat?"

"That's the man."

"I know him—and I wish you'd punctured him. That's Failing—the tenderfoot that's been staying at Lennox's. He's a lunger."

"He didn't look like no lunger to me."

"But no matter about that—it's just as I thought. And I'll get 'em back—mark my little words."

In the meantime the best thing to do was to move at once to his winter trapping grounds—a certain neglected region on the lower levels of the North Fork. If at any time within the next few weeks, Dan should attempt to carry word down to the settlements, he would be certain to pass within view of his camp. But he knew that the chance of Dan starting upon any such journey before the snow had melted was not one in a thousand. To be caught in the Divide in the winter means to be snowed in as completely as the Innuits of upper Greenland. No word could pass except by man on snowshoes.

Yet if the chance did come, if the house should be left unguarded, it might pay Cranston to make an immediate search. Dan would have no reason for supposing that Cranston suspected his possession of the letters; he would not be particularly watchful, and would probably pigeon-hole them until spring in Lennox's desk.

And the truth was that Cranston had reasoned out the situation almost perfectly. When Dan awakened in the morning, and the snow lay already a foot deep over the wilderness world, he knew that he would have no chance to act upon the Cranston case until the snows melted in the spring. So he pushed all thought of it out of his mind and turned his attention to more pleasant subjects. It was true that he read the documents over twice as he lay in bed. Then he tied them into a neat packet and put them away where they would be quickly available. Then he thrust his head out of the window and let the great snowflakes sift down upon his face. It was winter at last, the season that he loved.

He didn't stir from the house that first day of the storm. Snowbird and he found plenty of pleasant things to do and talk about before the roaring fire that he built in the grate. He was glad of the great pile of wood that lay outside the door. It meant life itself, in this season. Then Snowbird led him to the windows, and they watched the white drifts pile up over the low underbrush.

When finally the snowstorm ceased, five days later, the whole face of the wilderness was changed. The buckbrush was mostly covered, the fences were out of sight; the forest seemed a clear, clean sweep of white, broken only by an occasional tall thicket and by the great, snow-covered trees.

When the clouds blew away, and the air grew clear, the temperature began to fall. Dan had no way of knowing how low it went. Thermometers were not considered essential at the Lennox home. But when his eyelids congealed with the frost, and his mittens froze to the logs of firewood that he carried through the door, and the pine trees exploded and cracked in the darkness, he was correct in his belief that it was very, very cold.

But he loved the cold, and the silence and austerity that went with it. The wilderness claimed him as never before. The rugged breed that were his ancestors had struggled through such seasons as this and passed a love of them down through the years to him.

When the ice made a crust over the snow, he learned to walk on snowshoes. At first there were pained ankles and endless floundering in the drifts. But between the fall of fresh snow and the thaws that softened the crust, he slowly mastered the art. Snowbird—and Dan never realized the full significance of her name until he saw her flying with incredible grace over the snow—laughed at him at first and ran him races that would usually end in his falling headfirst into a ten-foot snowbank. She taught him how to ski and more than once she would stop in the middle of an earnest bit of pedagogy to find that he wasn't listening at all. He would seem to be fairly devouring her with his eyes, delighting in the play of soft pinks and reds in her cheeks, and drinking, as a man drinks wine, the amazing change of light and shadow in her eyes.

She seemed to blossom under his gaze. Not one of those short winter days went by without the discovery of some new trait or little vanity to astonish or delight him—sometimes an unlooked-for tenderness toward the weak, often a sweet, untained philosophy of life, or perhaps just a lowering of her eyelids in which her eyes would show lustrous through the lashes, or some sweeping, exuberant gesture startlingly graceful.

Lennox wakened one morning with the realization that this was one of the hardest winters of his experience. He began to be very glad of the abundant stores of provisions that overcrowded his pantry—savory hams and bacons, dried venison, sacks of potatoes and evaporated vegetables, and, of course, canned goods past counting. With the high fire roaring in the grate, the season held no ills for them. But sometimes, when the bitter cold came down at twilight, and the moon looked like a thing of ice itself over the snow, he began to wonder how the wild creatures who wintered on the Divide were faring. Of course most of them were gone. Woof, long since, had grunted and mumbled his way into a winter lair. But the wolves remained, strange gray shadows on the snow, and possibly a few of the hardier smaller creatures.

More than once in those long winter nights their talk was chopped off short by the song of the pack on some distant ridge. Sometime, when the world is old, possibly a man will be born that can continue to talk and keep his mind on his words while the wolf pack sings. But he is certainly an unknown quantity today. The cry sets in vibration curious memory chords, and for a moment the listener sees in his mind's eye his ancient home in an ancient world—Darkness and Fear and Eyes shining about the cave. It carries him back, and he knows the wilderness as it really is; and to have such knowledge dries up all inclination to talk, as a sponge dries water. Of course the picture isn't entirely plain. It is more a thing guessed at, a photograph in some dark part of an under-consciousness that has constantly grown more dim as the centuries have passed. Possibly sometime it will fade out altogether; and then a man may continue to discuss the weather while the Song from the ridge shudders in at the windows. But the world will be quite cold by then, and no longer particularly interesting. And possibly even the wolves themselves will then be tamed to play dead and speak pieces—which means the wilderness itself will be tamed. For as long as the wild lasts, the pack will run through it in the winter. They were here in the beginning, and in spite of constant war and constant hatred on the part of men, they will be here in the end. The reason is just that they are the symbol of the wilderness itself, and the idea of it continuing to exist without them is stranger than that of a nation without a flag.

It wasn't quite the same song that Dan had listened to in the first days of fall. It had been triumphant then, and proud with the wilderness pride. Of course it had been sad then, too, but it was more sad now. And it was stranger, too, and crept farther into the souls of its listeners. It was the song of strength that couldn't avail against the snow, possibly of cold and the despair and courage of starvation. These three that heard it were inured to the wilderness; but a moment was always needed after its last note had died to regain their gayety.

"They're getting lean and they're getting savage," Lennox said one night, stretched on his divan before the fireplace. He was still unable to walk; but the fractures were knitting slowly and the doctor had promised that the summer would find him well. "If we had a dog, I wouldn't offer much for his life. One of these days we'll find 'em in a big circle around the house—and then we'll have to open up with the rifles."

But this picture appalled neither of his two young listeners. No wolf pack can stand against three marksmen, armed with rifles and behind oaken walls.

Christmas came and passed, and January brought clear days and an ineffective sun shining on the snow. These were the best days of all. Every afternoon Dan and Snowbird would go out on their skis or on snowshoes, unarmed except for the pistol that Snowbird carried in the deep pocket of her mackinaw. "But why not?" Dan replied to Lennox's objection. "She could kill five wolves with five shots, or pretty near it, and you know well enough that that would hold 'em till we got home. They'd stop to eat the five. I have hard enough time keeping up with her as it is, without carrying a rifle." And Lennox was content. Dan had told the truth when he said that five deaths or even fewer, would repel the attack of any wolf pack he had ever seen. There was just one troubling thought. He had heard, long ago, and he had forgotten who had told him, that in the most severe winters the wolves gather in particularly large packs; and a quality in the song that they had heard at night seemed to bear it out. The chorus had been exceptionally loud and strong, and he had been unable to pick out individual voices.

The snow was perfect for skiing. Previously their sport had been many times interrupted either by the fall of fresh snow or a thaw that had softened the snow crust; but now every afternoon was too perfect to remain indoors. They shouted and romped in the silences, and they did not dream but that they had the wilderness all to themselves. The fact that one night Lennox's keen eyes had seen what looked like the glow of a camp fire in the distance didn't affect this belief of theirs at all. It was evidently just the phosphorus glowing in a rotten log from which the winds had blown the snow.

Once or twice they caught glimpses of wild life: once a grouse that had buried in the snow flushed from their path and blew the snow-dust from its wings; and once or twice they saw snowshoe rabbits bounding away on flat feet over the drifts. But just one day they caught sight of a wolf. They were on snowshoes on a particularly brilliant afternoon late in January.

He was a lone male, evidently a straggler from the pack, and he leaped from the top of a tall thicket that had remained above the snow. The man and the girl had entirely different reactions. Dan's first impression was amazement at the animal's condition. It seemed to be in the last stages of starvation: unbelievably gaunt, with rib bones showing plainly even through the furry hide. Ordinarily the heavily furred animals do not show signs of famine; but even an inexperienced eye could not make a mistake in this case. The eyes were red, and they carried Dan back to his first adventure in the Oregon forest—the day he had shot the mad coyote. Snowbird thought of the beast only as an enemy. The wolves killed her father's stock; they were brigands of the worst order; and she shared the hatred of them that is a common trait of all primitive peoples. Her hand whipped back, seized her pistol, and she fired twice at the fleeing figure.

The second shot was a hit: both of them saw the wolf go to its side, then spring up and race on. Shouting, both of them sped after him.

In a few moments he was out of sight among the distant trees, but they found the blood-trail and mushed over the ridge. They expected at any moment to find him lying dead; but the track led them on clear down the next canyon. And now they cared not at all whether they found him: it was simply a tramp in the out-of-doors; and both of them were young with red blood in their veins.

The Independent has been more than rushed the past week or two, trying to fill job orders on time. A cattle catalogue for Patton & Mathiason, of Rowan, has taken all the spare hours night and day and Sunday for the past week, which, aside from the rest of the work, has kept the force on the jump. Even the ed has had to stir around some.

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals—makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration—makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly—and have great wearing quality.

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes—oils and greases.

Don't Take Chances With a Poor Corn Planter This Year

LAND, rents, taxes and labor costs are high. Big crops must be had, if farms are to pay a profit. Intensive farming is the only way out. No man can afford to use anything but the best implement to be had. The time when it was good business to patch up old implements and make them do is gone.

HAYES Four-Wheel PLANTER

"Plants Like Human Hands"

Your corn land must yield every last bushel. Bare spots which rob American farmers of millions of dollars each year, must be fought. These extra bushels will mark the difference between profit and loss on thousands of farms.

One safe way—one sure way is open. Plant your acres with the famous Hayes Four-Wheel—the "Human Hand" planter—the planter that for 36 years has produced the big crops in the great corn-raising districts.

This great planting device is now sold with a Big Crop Guarantee which says that if you do not get a better stand of corn, you may return your planter and your money will be refunded.

Why take any chances at all? Come in and place your order now for the planter that guarantees you a bigger crop.

MANY MOVES ON FARMS FIRST OF MARCH

Belmond Wins First Place At Sub District

Carol Tyrrell Takes First Place At Britt With Selection "The Lion And The Mouse."

GOES TO EMMETSBURG FRIDAY

On Friday night, March 4, Belmond was represented in the sub-district contest held at Britt by Carol Tyrrel. She gave the selection, "The Lion and the Mouse," and won first place in the dramatic class. Next Friday she goes to Emmetsburg to the pre-district. The winners were go to the Northwest District Contest. B. H. S. is proud of Carol and feel that she has shown what she can do, even if she did lose in the county contest.

Friday night of this week the Belmond girls will play their last game of the season at Rowan. In the game here last Friday our girls won from Rowan 31 to 6, which was largely due to the size of and experience of our team. Miss Josten of Garner acted as referee.

The personal of the lower grades is undergoing a change. Several pupils have moved away, as well as others moving to Belmond. The total enrollment has slightly increased, but will be decreased considerably between now and April 15, judging from reports.

We wish parents to pay particular attention ao the following notice, as it may vitally effect the promotion of your child. Several pupils have made it a practice this year to be absent on the days the examinations are held on ccount of sickness, but these same pupils were seen on the street after school.

Hereafter, if the pupil expects credit for examination, he must be present at time test is given.—E. S. Fyler.

The boys' basket ball team accepted the invitation of the T. C. Club to attend the Iowa State Teachers College tournament at Cedar Falls on March 4 and 5.

We didn't play as long as we had hoped, for we were defeated in the first round by a team that played better basket ball than we did. However, we have won from teams that played better ball than Dike played last Friday a. m.

There are at least two causes for our defeat. One is that our gym ceiling is much higher than that of the court our game drew, while we understand the Dike gym has a low ceiling. Anyway, many of our longer shots hit the ceiling, while Dike had little trouble that way. The other cause is that old-tie enemy of green sportsmen—luck fever.

It was extremely bad during the first half, as we made more points than Dike did the second ten minutes.

All the boys feel that they learned more about basket ball than they would allow a coach to teach them in a season, and are sure they will be able to play a greatly improved game next season.

We saw some very good basket ball and are very glad we were able to go. The boys making the trip were Irving Madsen, David Luick, Wm. Vestweber, Wm. Tyrrell, Clifford Johnson, Everet Parsons, Merrill Stapley and Lewis Parsons. They all say that whoever keeps them from taking the trip next year will have to work hard for a place on the team. Their slogan for next year has been adopted: "Let's Go."

The regular meeting of the Normal Training club will be held on Saturday evening, March 12, at 8 o'clock. Miss Ramsay will give a demonsration of primary reading and phonics. Let every member be present.

The Annual staff has let the contracts for the engraving and printing of the B. H. S. Anual. The John and Ollier Engraving Co. of Chicago will make the cuts and the Belmond Independent has the contract for the printing. Mr. Thoe has about finished taking the pictures and they will soon be ready for the engraver. The Business Manager and Advertising Manager will visit the business houses this week to get the advertisements. We will appreciate prompt response, so that we may get our copy out on time.

SECOND GRADE

Hans Jorgenson, Tony Wietzel and Mary Siskow entered the second grade.

Frank Metzic moved to Garner last week.

Court House News

Judge Wright convened court Monday and heard several equity and probate cases. Adjournment was taken until Thursday, when the work of the term will be completed.

Sheriff Fisher was operated on for gall stones yesterday at Rochester. A message from L. L. Kirkpatrick, who is with Mr. Fisher, came yesterday stating that the patient came out from the operation in fine shape.

Marriage licenses for the past week are as follows: Martin Christensen and Nora A. Hansen, Cecil Myers and Myrtle Azeltine, G. W. Fletcher and Grace L. Fitz, Fred Halfpop and Lydia A. Gartz, A. O. Echelberger and Mrs. Fern Pond, Benj. Silke and Emma Kniewasser, Lewis Tesdahl and Vera Fern Rust.

Last week the board of supervisors let the contract to the Iowa Bridge Co. for the erection of a fine new bridge over the Boone river at the park in Goldfield. The cost will be $34,250. The new structure is to be of the cantilever deck girder type and the plans in Engineer Hilton's office call for a nice looking bridge. It will be set to the north of the old structure and an attempt made to take some of the curve out of the road at this point. A pathway for pedestrians is provided on the south side of the structure and eight electroliers will furnish light for the same. It will require at least six months to construct the new bridge after which the od one which has done service for over twenty years, will be dismantled and rebuilt as a smaller bridge on new piers on the Iowa river north of Belmond.—Monitor.

POLICE MAKE RAID FOR BOOZE ON THE HILL

On Monday of last week, about 5 in the afternoon, the city authorities made a raid on the house at the top of the hill west of the river, occupied by John Ruhl, in search of bootleg booze. Despite the protests of the occupants, a thoro search of the premises was made, but nothing in the nature of booze was located. Ruhl was away at the time, but his wife was present and protested the entire innocence of her husband in the illegal handling of whiskey in any way. The place has been under suspicion for some time.

SOME NEWS OF SOME OLD-TIME RESIDENTS

Garner Signal: The first word we have had from our old time friend, Art Finch. came Monday afternoon when we were engaged in conversation with W. S. Pritchard of the Garner Auto Company. Walt had been to Belmond a few days previous and learned at that time that Art had been there a short time before visiting relatives and friends. Art and his brother, John, are engaged in the grain and lumber business at Cheyenne, Wyoming, and we understand are doing well. At the outbreak of the war, John's fighting spirit was so tense that he could not wait for Uncle Sam to get into the fight so enlisted with a Canadian regiment, and went overseas. The way we get the story, he was subjected to all the trials of real warfare—was bullet wounded, gassed, but managed to get back with all his limbs intact. We inquired further about the family and learned that Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Finch were making their home with their daughter, Mrs. Bertha Maben. Mrs. Maben and her two sons are operating a farm near Elk River. Minnesota. We learned. too, that Aunt Rose had suffered an attack of paralysis some time ago, and is now practically helpless.

Legion Play Goes Through In Fine Shape

Crowded Houses Both Nights Witness One of The Best Home Talents Ever Given.

SKOVLIN, AS "NEVADA," STARS

"Nevada," the home talent play put on by the local Post of the American Legion on last week Wednesday and Thursday nights, was universally pronounced one of the best shows of the kind ever given in this city.

The characters were very good, not a slip-up in lines being noticable or a hesitation in speech. The various parts were excellently rendered, and the actors deserve full measure of credit for the way they carried thru their parts.

Adolph Skovlin, in the difficult character of "Nevada," was beyond question the star of the play. He looked and acted his part in a manner that was close to professional, and his acting was excellent.

Much credit is due to Mrs. McAlpine for her training of the various actors, and for her management of the performance, which was carried thru without a hitch.

The "awkward squad" part of the program provoked many hearty laughs and much amusement. They were certainly "green" at the business in their acting, and if the people did not know that they had seen the real article and been thru faultless drill, they would have sworn that a real soldier couldn't have been made from the whole squad.

The Legion cleared a comfortable amount from the two nights, which Belmond will rejoice in, and hope that their future efforts, which will be heartily welcomed, will be as successful. The Post plans on further entertainments of various kinds, and will use the funds realized in maintaining club rooms, furthering the best interests of the town and the Post.

CHARLEY ROE, FORMER RESIDENT HERE, DIES

Charley Roe, well known to Belmond people, died at the hospital in Hampton on February 25, from a disease of the abdomen, after months of illness and suffering.

He was 74 years of age at his death, and was a resident of this city for several years, where he was for some time night clerk at the Case hotel. He was born in Syracuse, New York, and came to Iowa when but a young man, going into the railroad business, working first for the I. C. and later for the Ia. C. He was for a number of years conductor on the first road built thru Belmond, the Iowa Central branch from Hampton, which was built first to this place and later to Algona. He quit railroading and for a time lived at Dows where he trained and drove racing horses. Later he came to Belmond where he made his home.

Funeral services were held on last week Sunday, with the Masonic lodge of Hampton assisted by the local lodge, in charge, interment being in Franklin Grove cemetery.

SOME OF THE CHANGES ABOUT BELMOND

Many Of The Changes On Neighboring Farms Chronicled By The Wolle Land Agency.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS HERE

Many Improvements Made On Town And Country Property During The Past Year.

The following article was written for the Independent by W. H. Wolle, of the Wolle Land Agency, and gives most of the changes that occured in this vicinity on the first of March. The list, while not complete, nevertheless gives many changes, and the Independent would appreciate it if any mistakes, or any additions are pointed out and sent in.

Rise & Furuseth have dissolved partnership, and as a duck takes to water so Furuseth is taking to a farm, and has leased the Tom Brooks place south of Morse Lake.

Mr. Dalgreen moves on the farm vacated by E. Hauge, Hauge going on the J. R. Thayer farm.

Fred Wirtz moved to the Ellison farm six miles north of Clarion, and the Brown Brothers will work their father's place.

Jim Siskoff leaves the Sorenson farm, which, at this writing, has not been rented.

Stockwell moved to Wesley, Iowa, John Thayer expecting to occupy the house vacated.

Carl Daniels moved to Villard, Minnesota, from the H. F. Luick farm, and P. W. Kaufman moves to this place, Arvin Ellis moving to the place vacated by Kaufman.

McDermott Brothers moved on the J. N. Johnson farm northwest of the city, and Henry Weide moved to the Mennenga place, Theo Bonte, who was on that place, moving to town.

L. VanBuskirk is occupying the home place, and a party from Illinois will work the Kenefick place.

Mr. Fatjland will work the Christie farm west of Hickory Grove.

A Mr. Thompson moves to the place vacated by Lalor, and Lalor to a farm four miles est of Garner.

O. Hanson moves to the old N. Reese farm.

Mr. Espe will work the C. P. Luick farm, and Mr. Bohlman moves to the place vacated by Frohling. Frohling, Senior, moves to town where they have a fine residence.

J. D. Baker and family move to town, Max Baker working the home place, Nearing going onto the place vacated.

Otto Madison will work the Hake farm southeast of town, L. V. Sharp, who was on the place, moving to the town.

Hugh Sharp moved to the Pritchard farm east of Morse Lake

A Mr. Daniels moves to the Will Kent farm, and the Sheriff Brothers, from the Kent farm to the Loomis land, Henry Eimbrink moving from the Loomis farm to the Cullinan place southeast of town, which he has purchased.

Tom Guest is at home on the Sullivand land north of town where W. Weigands formerly resided.

Mr. McAlpine moved to the N. B. Olson farm on Snarl Street.

The following buildings have been erected or remodled in the city thus far:

Mrs. Ludtke. Mr. Frohling, Allison, Home Building, 14, Mennenga Greenlander, Dorenkamp, Guest, Robinson, Christie, Simerson, Maitland Larson, Dybdahl 2, Morse. Parsons Krag. Rierson, Kramer, Ducherman, Davenport, Pullin 2, Bohning, Meacham, Sullivan, Madison, Schultz.

Mr. Wolle says there were 50 or so houses erected during the past year, besides those that were remodled. This year he estimates there will be 25 new ones built if everything goes well.

The Independent was forced to leave out four or five columns of news this week, owing to the heavy advertising. Some of the 'stuff" including this, is "set solid," however so that there is still the usual amount in the paper, only packed in tighter.

FREE AIR!

That Mexican bread we were telling you about last week isn't so awful, when you come to try it. Robinson brought us down a sample one day last week, and we gave it the once over, and down.

It looks good, smells good, and it tastes good. It wasn't half bad.

But he said it wasn't the real genuine stuff; it had some civilized dough mixed with it, which may account for it.

Tasted sort of sweet and yeasty. On the top was a sort of frosting, of dough, containing plenty of sugar, which gave it a taste something like coffee cake.

But at that, the name sort of sets us against it; funny what a name will do. Old Bill Shakespeare once inquired what there was in a name, but there's a lot in one. Not that it makes any difference to the owner what his name is: take Win Dziewanowski, f'rinstance, Win's a fine fellow, and liked by everybody, but if you met that name on a stranger, you'd start thinking of Bolsheviks and begin looking for whiskers and bombs.

One thing about stage plays, they aren't natural. Take f'rinstance the American Legion play last week. You remember the character, Tom Carew, and the girl he became sort of moony about, Agnes. Now, the two characters were well played, and all that, but the actors were married. To each other. And you remember how Tom raved about her, and told what a wonder she was, and got kind of sentimental. In reality she was everything Tom said, but did you ever hear an old married man talk like that about his wife?

Plays are plays, but they aren't really natural.

Then there was that remark that was pulled about "Verdun dice, they shall not pass." Not over half a dozen in the house got it all. Which works two ways: Either they were ignorant of the game, or they were not overly familiar with the sayings and history of the late war.

Earl Miller and Hizzoner had a litle game last week. Miller lost $8.85.

It was like this: Miller was at the Rock Island depot, with his car. A traveling man suddenly discovered that he had left his coat at the hotel, and the train was whistling in. He asked Miller to drive him back to the hotel to get his coat, and Miller, being a good hearted soul, obliging and charitable, consented. So they drove back. Naturally, as the train was then pulling in, they had to get there and back right pert. Which they did.

Coming back home from the depot, the cop comes out from supper, with his mouth still full, and says he:

"You're pinched."

"Me? What for?" says Miller.

"For speedin'," says the cop. "See Hizzoner."

Which Miller did, and pays eight eighty-five.

And the train didn't leave for 45 minutes.

Miller says the town can congratulate itself on one thing anyway: It has a police force that never allows meals to interfere with duty.

And he says also, that he's gonna lay off this Good Samaritan stuff: it's too expensive.

And he wants the city dads to go and get some of the other birds who have been flying too fast.

The city dads started cleaning up the streets the next day. If it was because they had a little money in the treasury, then we hope they bag a bunch of speeders from this on.

Friends of John and Elizabeth Rule of New Salem, North Dakota, received word recently of the death of their little daughter, Ruth, at the age of 9 months. Mrs. Rule was formerly Elizabeth Bond of his city. Mr. Rule being a son of J. H. Rule, former proprietor of the Case Hotel. Their many friends here extend their sympathy to the bereaved parents in their loss.

The boys basket ball team of the high school went to Cedar Falls last week to participate in a tournament held there Friday and Saturday.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

LINCOLN MEETING WELL ATTENDED

The Lincoln township Farm Bureau meeting which was held at Center school Friday evening, March 4, was very well attended, in fact, the school house was so crowded that scores of people were unable to get into the main room and were required to stand in the hallway.

The communiy spirit which is characteristic of Lincoln township was well in evidence at this community gathering and everyone who attended felt well repaid for the effort made to attend this entertainment.

The mingling of people in their home community in this fashion is one thing which is surely going to build toward a stronger Farm Bureau federation because the national president of the federation says himself that the township farm bureau is the keystone of the National Farm Bureau Federation.

The feature of the evening's entertainment was the splendid address given by Mr. I. W. Van Nice, assistant county agent leader, who spent considerable time in the discussion of the importance of a strong township farm bureau organization. In speaking of farmers not signing the Farm Bureau, Mr. Van Nice said· "Any farmer who does not join the Farm Bureau has had poison injected into his system or he has been mis informed or he has never taken the trouble to inform himself on Farm Bureau activities." He also mentioned some of the important accomplishments of the farm bureau of the past and touched upon some of the great issues which will come before this great organization in the near future An interesting program which was arranged by the program committee was enjoyed by all. Short readings, recitations and dialogues were given by school children and others in the township. A short talk about the early history of the Wright county praries was given by Frank W. Meacham, which proved to be interesting to the old settlers of the community.

BOONE FARM BUREAU MEETING

The Boone township farm bureau meeting was held at the Luni school February 1, for the purpose of planning next year's work and for the election of officers. The election of officers gave the following results: Mrs. H. W. Eastman, lady township chairman, and W. H. Helmke, secretary-treasurer. A committee of 3, consisting of Mrs. Alfred Price, Miss Lucy Boge and r. Albert Nelson was appointed by the chair to take charge of social affairs in the township and a lively box social is being planned by this committee for the evening of Friday, March 11.

The matter of boys' and girls' club work was discussed at this meeting and the people of the township feel quite interested in this line of work.

GRANT WILL HOLD SOCIAL

C. L. Hall and Mrs. F. M. Peck, township chairman for Grant, announce a afternoon meeting at the Center school for Friday, March 11, at 2 p. m.

A interesting program is being arranged by the program committee and a lively time is being planned for those who will find it possible to attend. I. W. Van Nice, assistant county agent leader. will give the pricipal address of the occasion and all members of Grant are urged to turn out and make this meeting the best of the season.

HAVE YOU ORDERED YOUR TWINE?

Arrangements are practically completed for handling the twine for all of Wright county in one big order, thru the farmers' elevators and dealers of the county. The general plan as decided upon by the board of directors of the Farm Bureau is as follows: Orders will be taken by the Farm Bureau thru its officers and co-operators and by the elevator managers and dealers for so many pounds of twine, the brand and price of which shall be decided by the farm bureau with the understanding that the elevator managers or dealers who handle the twine shall receive one-half cent per pound for handling same for cash at the car on the day of unloading. But those who do not pay cash at the car a small margin of one-fourth cent per pound per month will be allowed the elevator managers or dealers who carry accounts on their books.

Every Farm Bureau member will be given an opportunity to sign up for his twine for the season by an order blank being sent him either thru the mail or in the April issue of the Farm Bureau Exchange. This order blank when signed by the farmer will authorize the elevator manager or dealer with whom he wishes to place his order to order his twine from the company that is decided upon by the Farm Bureau and these orders will be collected and turned over to the firms with which the farmers wish to deal in making their twine purchases.

BILLS OF IMPORTANCE TO FARMERS

Iowa Farm Bureau Federation members will watch the progress of the bills for collective bargaining and bonded warehouses, recently introduced in the legislature, with keen interest.

If these two bills can be passed as drawn it will clear the way in Iowa for a broad general plan of marketing farm products in a manner more businesslike and orderly than the present system, something along the line recommended by the committee of seventeen.

These two bills are companion measures, being closely related and dependent upon each other for support and in their probable influence upon marketig conditions in he future. The first would authorize producers of agricultural products—grain, livestock, fruits, dairy, etc.—to associate themselves collectively for business purpoes and to make agreements and to impose penalties for breech of contract between an association and its members, and it also carries strict provisions for dealing with attempts at profiteering or unfairly exploiting the public.

Under the provisions of the second bill elevators and storage houses thruout the state would be bonded and utilized for storing grain to be carried on warehouse receipts. Receipts of this kind showing ownership of grain that has been inspected and graded,would be satisfactory security and enable the grower to do business with his banker in case he needed money in advance of the sale of the grain.

Following these bills, of course, must come a definite systematic plan of financing the proposition on a comprehensive scale, and in a way that will not conflict with the constitution of the state. A bill covering his very essential feature is being drawn and will probably be introduced in the legislature the first of the week.

GOVERNOR JOINS FEDERATION

Governor Shoupe, of Colorado, has joined the Farm Bureau Federation in his own state and will do his bit as a private in this great army of agricultural workers. The governor has been an acive worker for the livestock industry in his state, among other things being a breeder of purebred Percheon horses.

SHIPPING ASSOCIATION COMING IN

February proved a fairly busy month for the Iowa Federation of co-operative livestock shipping associations, twenty-six local shiping associations taking out membership in the state organization during the 28 days of the month. Inquiries looking to affiliation are coming in rapidly, indicating a growing sentiment on the part of individual associations to avail themseles of the benefits accruing from membership with the parent body.

On Friday, March 4th, a conference was held at the state federation headquarters in Des Moines, participated in by officials of the shippers association and representatives from local organizations in different counties. The principal topic discussed had to do with developing wider interest and closer co-operation between individual associations and the central organization, which in turn is now under he direct supervision of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

TRAFFIC CONFERENCE

Invitations have been sent to the different state Farm Bureau federations by the American Federation asking them to send representatives to a traffic conference which will be held in Chicago, March 4th. Railway executives and railway labor organizations have also been invited to send spokesmen, all with the hope of developing some plan of immediate and amicable adjustment of the present exhorbitant freight rates that operate to keep middle west producers out of the eastern markets. An early downward revision of rates is of vital importance to the American public in general, as well as to farming interests, and it is to be hoped that this conference will start what everybody knows must be done, and that soon.

ROWAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES

The marriage of Miss Myrtle May Azeltine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Azeltine, and Mr. Cecil Murtell Myers, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Myers, took place Wednesday morning at the home of the bride's parents. The Rev. Harold Tomkinson, pastor of the M. E. church, performed the ceremony at 8:00 o'clock, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends. Miss Esther Fowler, cousin of the bride, played Mendelssohn's wedding march. The bride who looked very pretty, wore a white silk shiffon dress and carried a beautiful bouquet of sweet peas. Immediately after the ceremony, luncheon was served, after which the happy couple left on a honeymoon trip to Des Moines, Indianola, and other points in the south of the state. Out of town guests were Mrs. Hatheway, of Mitchell, South Dakota, and Miss Van Note, of Iowa Falls. The bride was an honored guest at one or two prenuptial courtesies last week.

The pastor of the M. E. church had the glad experience of receiving into the church last Sabbath eleven of the fine young people of his church.

Mrs. Annie Avard, mother of Mrs. Harold Tomkinson, has returned from Jacksonville, Florida, where she has been spending the winter.

Mrs. G. R. Stumph visited at the Ormal Gates home Tuesday.

Mrs. George Barnes, of Buffalo, New York, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Ed. Ballou, for the past six weeks, returned to her home Monday.

Jim Langdon's moved Wednesday to the farm vacated by Eddie Haupt, who has moved near Coulter. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kercheval moved to the house vacated by the Langdons.

Charles Emerson and family moved to he A. C. Rietz house, vacated by Harvey Lineweaver.

Mrs. Geo. Parkenson, of Dows, arrived Monday to spend several days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. L. Robinson.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smith and daughter, Marion, of Clarion, visited her mother, Mrs. Snyder, at the Fred Brooks home Tuesday.

J. F. Howell and Lem Rowen were business callers at Fort Dodge, Wednesday.

Mrs. Fred Williams and Miss Lottie Williams have started a dressmaking shop in town. This will be a benefit to any one wishing sewing done as there are so few people in town who do sewing for anyone. We wish them success in their undertaking.

Mr. Jones, of Mason City, and Glen Cannon, of Belmond, agents for the Universal Milking Machine, have been installing one of these machies on the Edwin Nelson farm east of town this week. Mr. Nelson is milking 20 cows with it and it has been giving good satisfaction so far.

Mrs. Steve Bailey, of St. Laurence, S. D., and her daughter, Mrs. John Calhune, of Wall Lake, was in town Thursday transferring from Hampton to Dows, and called on several old friends. Mrs. Bailey has been in the hospital at Hampton for the past week where she had an operation.

Edgar Mantle is staying with G. R. Stumph until the school year is out, so that he can finish out his contract as bus driver.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Robinson entertained at a party Wednesday night. Those present were: Thelma and Marjorie Brooks, Mrs. Roy Ryder, Blanch Box, Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Stumph, Mr. and Mrs. Willard McCallum, Chester Moellering, Edgar Mantle and George Aldrich. They report a fine time. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

The Home Missionary society of the Cong. church met with Mrs. E. Bingham, Thursday afternoon. Mrs. L. A. McCallum was leader. The lesson was on the colored schools of the south. There were five interesting papers on the subject. There was a good attendance.

The M. E. Aid society met with Mrs. A. C. Rietz, Thursday afternoon, for a work meeting. There was a large crowd and they accomplished a nice lot of work.

The Home Missionary society of the M. E. church met with Mrs. Fred Sheldon, Wednesday afternoon, with Mrs. Willard McCallum as leader. The subject of the lesson was "Our Leadership." It was an interesting lesson and there was a good attendance.

MYERS-AZELTINE

Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock occured a very pretty home wedding, when Miss May Azeltine and Cecil Murtell Myers both of this place, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Will Azeltine. As Miss Fowler played the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march the happy couple came down the stairs and took their place under the arch, decorated with pink roses and smilax, where Rev. Tomkinson of the M. E. church, spoke the magic words which made them one. Miss Fowler continued to play softly thru the ceremony. The ring service was used. The bride was dressed in white and carried a bouquet of sweet peas. The groom was dressed in the conventional black. About 30 relatives and friends were present. After the ceremony a delicious wedding breakfast was served to the guests, after which the newlyweds drove to Clarion to take a train for Des Moines where they will spend a short time before they start to keep house on the farm they have rented from the bride's father. They received many beautiful gifts, among which was silver ware, cut glass, china, and a set of dishes. The out-of-town guests were Mrs. Hathaway, grandmother of the bride, of Mitchell, South Dakota, and Miss Gladys Van Note, of Eldora. These young people are well known here. May has spent her childhood days at this place. The past year she has been teaching the 3rd and 4th grades in the Rowan school. She intends to finish her year's work. Myrtel is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Myers and is an industrious young man. He is an ex-service man, having served in the navy. The many friends of this young couple wish them much happiness.

Another wedding of interest to Rowanites occured in Clarion, Wednessday, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Fitz, when their daughter, Grace, was united in marriage to Gay Fletcher of this place. Only immediate relatives were present. Those from out of town attending were Dan Fletcher and Izetta, of Rowan, father and sister of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Sullivan, of Fort Dodge, another sister of the groom. This couple met Mr. and Mrs. Myers at the train in Clarion and both couples went to Des Moines. Mr. and Mrs Fletcher will start housekeeping in the Bert Harris house. Grace is a young lady who makes friends wherever she goes and the people of Rowan will be glad to have her among them again. Gay is in partnership with his father in the drayage business. He is an ex-service man, being one of the first to enlist from this place. He was in the navy. These young people have many friends in and around Rowan who wish them success and happiness.

ROWAN SCHOOL NOTES

The hot lunches have been discontinued due to the weather being so nice and only a few asking them. They have been a good success and enjoyed by all the pupils.

Six weeks exams are being held. Some are receiving high grades, while others are low.

The last basket ball game of the season will be held here March 11. Belmond girls will play. The Rowan girls were defeated Friday evening, March 4, with a score of 31-7. Let everyone come out to see a peppy game. The girls expect to hold them to a close score.

C. G. Morrison spent the week end in Hampton.

Miss Frances Farran visited at the home of Vey Ketchum over the week end.

Fred Moellering was on the sick list the fore part of the week.

A grade program consisting of patriotic numbers is to be given in the near future. Watch for the date.

Charles Keith and Duncan Farran visited school Friday afternoon.

Miss May Azeltine, one of our teachers, was married to Myrtel Myers at the home of her parents, on Wednesday morning, March 2. She will finish the year teaching.

Mrs. Floyd Whitten, of Thornton, spent Sunday of last week at the home of her brother, Clay Klinefelter of Alexander.

Al Robinson, of Council Bluffs came Wednesday for a visit with his brother, Roscoe, and also to attend o business matters.

Mrs. Morris Sullvan, of Fort Dodge came Wednesday to spend a couple of weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Fletcher, and with other relatives.

Charley Martin arrived with his c[illegible] of household goods Wednesday. [illegible] is moving to the Steve Ferguson farm north of Rowan.

Eugene Harson, of Kanawha, visited his mother, Mrs. Edith Harson, Thursday of this week.

John Richardson is on the sick list this week.

Mrs. J. F. Howell, who has had an operation in the hospital at Iowa Falls, is doing as well as can be expected.

Friday evening at the Keith home the 7th grade assisted by Miss Mullins and Miss Newman, entertained the 8th grade. The house was beautifully decorater in green and white memory of St. Patrick. The Blarney stone furnished much amusement during the evening. A two-course luncheon was served which also carried out the St. Patrick idea.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Parliament and Mr. and Mrs. Bonett were over Sunday guests at the H. J. C. Box home.

Mr. and Mrs. Parliament expect to leave soon for Canada to visit their son.

Mrs. Anderson was entertained at the A. E. Emerson home Sunday.

Help make your home news interesting. Phone your items to 62.

Joe Patton, Jr., was a business visitor at Clarion, Monday.

Georgia McCallum, of Thornton, spent Sunday of last week at the Will Bingham home.

Harvey Lineweaver moved Monday from the A. C. Rietz house north of Main street to the R. K. Keith property vacated by Fred Hackley.

Friend Aldrich moved from their house in town to their farm, Monday.

Chester Bailey moved Monday from the W. A. Hoke house to the Nels Hansen house. Ben Hackley from near Dows moved in the Hoke house Tuesday.

Jack Peddle moved from their residence in town to their farm, which was vacated by Charley Peddle, who has moved to the Theo. Hansen farm near Coulter.

Mr. and Mrs. Darrel Stout moved in the Jack Peddle house. Mr. Stout has charge of the Standard Oil station in Rowan for the coming year.

Clint Kercheval moved to the Frank Kercheval farm near Harvey vacated by Less Andrews. The Andrews fmily moved to the place known as the old John Brooks farm. Nels Olson moved to the Clint Kercheval house in town.

W. A. Hoke and wife and Miss Bujordon, of Forest City, were in town Tuesday and Wednesday attending to business matters.

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Stumph, Mrs. Willard McCallum and Mrs. R. L. Robinson drove to Clarion, Monday.

Charles Groft, of Polo, Illinois, came Tuesday and will assist Earl Jacobs with his farm work the coming year. The Jacobs family moved to their farm between Meservey and Goodell.

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Stumph entertained about 15 young people Monday night. The evening was spent in games. Light refreshments were served and the guests left at a late hour after a very plesant evening.

Monday evening Rev. Harold Tomkinson delivered his lecture, 'The Humor and Pathos of the Halifax Explosion," in the M. E. church. The church was crowded. Before the lecure we had the privilege of listening to a piano solo by Miss Esther Fowler, a solo by Mrs. Bert Pelley entitled "The Radiance of Your Eyes," and also a piano duet by Anna and Nina Rietz. The lecture was an account of the actual experiences witnessed by the pastor and his family. One cannot imagine yet the terrible experiences thru which the people of Halifax passed at this terrible time. The lecturer made one think how thankful we should be to be spared such terrible experiences. And how thankful we should be that we live in a country that is ready to send help and relief to the suffering victims.

TO THE MOTORING PUBLIC

It is our desire at all times to furnish the motoring public with the best possible service at the lowest figures consistant with good work.

In order to do this, and keep our prices down, we must eliminate collection costs.

We find it necessary to place our shop on a cash basis. This is not in any way a reflection upon your credit but a sincere desire on our part to serve you at the lowest possible cost.

We believe that you will heartily endorse this plan to eliminate lost time and needless expense, which matures to your benefit as well as to ours.

We will, therefore, from and after March 1st., expect all work to be settled for upon is completion, and there will be no book accounts.

A welcome awaits you at any and all of the services of the church.

The Womens Foreign Missionary society held their March meeting at the home of Mrs. Wallace Ramsay, last Thursday, some thirty members being present, besides several visitors. The pastor conducted the devotional meeting. After the business meeting Mrs. H. F. Luick presented a very interesting lesson on the work in China. One of the features of the program was a series of impersonations by four of the ladies. Mrs. Ramsay served delicious refreshments The society is beginning to make arrangements for their annual Thank Offering which will be taken in the near future.

M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL

The attendance is holding up very good, but we are expecting an increase in all classes Sunday and there after. Sunday 138 were out with an offering of $6.06. But all at once Dan stopped in his tracks. The girl sped on for six paces before she missed the sound of his snowshoes; then she turned to find him standing, wholly motionless, with eyes fixed upon her.

It startled her, and she didn't know why. A companion abruptly freezing in his path, his muscles inert, and his eyes filling with speculation, is always startling. When this occurs it means simply that a thought so compelling and engrossing that even the half-unconscious physical functions, such as walking, cannot continue, has come into his mind. And it is part of the old creed of self-preservation to dislike greatly to be left out on any such thought as this. If danger is present, the sooner it is identified the better.

"What is it?" she demanded.

He turned to her curiously intent. "How many shells have you in that pistol?"

She took one breath and answered him. "It holds five, and I shot twice. I haven't any others."

"And I don't suppose it ever occurred to you to carry extra ones in your pocket?"

"Father is always telling me to—and several times I have. But I'd shoot them away at target practice and forget to take any more. There was never any danger—except that night with a cougar. I did intend to—but what does it matter now?"

"We're a couple of wise ones, going after that wolf with only three shots to our name. Of course by himself he's harmless—but he's likely enough to lead us straight toward the pack. And Snowbird—I didn't like his looks. He's too gaunt and he's too hungry—and I haven't a bit of doubt he waited in that brush for us to come, intending to attack us—and lost his nerve the last thing. That shows he's desperate. I don't like him, and I wouldn't like his pack. And a whole pack might not lose its nerve."

"Then you think we'd better turn back?"

"Yes, I do, and not come out any more without a whole pocket of shells. I'm going to carry a rifle, too, just as Lennox has always. He's got only a flesh-wound. You saw what you did with two cartridges—got in one flesh-wound. Three of 'em against a pack wouldn't be a great deal of aid. I don't mean to say you can't shoot, but a jumping, lively wolf is worse than a bird in the air. We've gone over three miles; and he'd lead us ten miles farther—even if he didn't go to the pack. Let's go back."

"If you say so. But I don't think there's the least bit of danger. We can always climb a tree."

"And have 'em make a beautiful circle under it! They've got more patience than we have—and we'd have to come down some time. Your father can't come to our help, you know. It's the sign of the tenderfoot not to think there's any danger—and I'm not going to think that way any more."

They turned back and mushed in silence a long time.

"I suppose you'll think I'm a coward," Dan asked her humbly.

"Only prudent, Dan," she answered, smiling. Whether she meant it he did not know. "I'm just beginning to understand that you—living here only a few months—really know and understand all this better than I do." She stretched her arms wide to the wilderness. "I guess it's your instinct."

"And I do understand," he told her earnestly. "I sensed danger back there just as sure as I can see your face. That pack—and it's a big one—is close; and it's terribly hungry. And you know—you can't help but know—that the wolves are not to be trusted in famine times."

"I know it only too well," she said.

Then she paused and asked him about a strange grayness, like snow blown by the wind, on the sky over the ridge.

• • • • • • •

Bert Cranston waited in a clump of exposed thicket on the hillside until he saw two black dots, that he knew were Dan and Snowbird, leave the Lennox home. He lay very still as they circled up the ridge, noticing that except for the pistol that he knew Snowbird always carried, they were unarmed. There was no particular reason why he should be interested in that point. It was just the mountain way always to look for weapons, and it is rather difficult to trace the mental processes behind this impulse. Perhaps it can be laid to the fact that many mountain families are often at feud with one another, and anything in the way of violence may happen before the morning.

The two passed out of his sight, and after a long time he heard the crack of Snowbird's pistol. He guessed that she had either shot at some wild creature, or else was merely at target practice—rather a common proceeding for the two when they were on the hills together. Thus it is to be seen that Cranston knew their habits fairly well. And since he had kept a close watch upon them for several days, this was to be expected.

He had no intention of being interrupted in this work he was about to do. He had planned it all very well. The elder Lennox was still helpless. Cranston had noticed that when Dan and Snowbird went out, they were usually gone from two to four hours; and that gave him plenty of time for his undertaking. The moment had come at last to make a thorough search of Lennox's house for those incriminating documents that Dan had found near the body of Landy Hildreth.

The only really dangerous part of his undertaking was his approach. If by any chance Lennox were looking out of the window, he might be found waiting with a rifle across his arms. It would be quite like the old mountaineer to have his gun beside him, and to shoot it quick and exceptionally straight, without asking questions, at any stealing figure in the snow. Yet Cranston felt fairly sure that Lennox was still too helpless to raise a gun to a shooting position.

He had observed that the mountaineer spent his time either on the fireplace divan or on his own bed. Neither of these places was available to the rear windows of the house. So, very wisely, he made his attack from the rear.

He came stealing across the snow—a musher of the first degree. Very silently and swiftly he slipped off his snowshoes at the door. The door itself was unlocked, just as he had supposed. In an instant more he was tiptoeing, a dark, silent figure, through the corridors of the house. He held his rifle ready in his hands.

He peered into Lennox's bedroom first. The room was unoccupied. Then the floor of the corridor creaked beneath his step; and he knew nothing further was to be gained by waiting. If Lennox suspected his presence, he might be waiting with aimed rifle as he opened the door of the living room.

He glided faster. He halted once more—a moment at the living-room door to see if Lennox had been disturbed. He was lying still, however, so Cranston pushed through.

Lennox glanced up from his magazine to find that unmistakable thing, the barrel of a rifle, pointed at his breast. Cranston was one of those rare marksmen who shoot with both eyes open—and that meant that he kept his full visual powers to the last instant before the hammer fell.

"I can't raise my arms," Lennox said simply. "One of 'em won't work at all—besides, against the doctor's orders."

"I Can't Raise My Arms," Lennox Said Simply.

Cranston stole over toward him, looking closely for weapons. He pulled aside the woolen blanket that Lennox had drawn up over his body, and he pushed his hand into the cushions of the couch. A few deft pats, holding his rifle through the fork of his arm, finger coiled into the trigger guard, assured him that Lennox was not "heeled" at all. Then he laughed and went to work.

"I thought I told you once," Lennox began with perfect coldness, "that the doors of my house were no longer open to you."

"You did say that," was Cranston's guttural reply. "But you see I'm here just the sa[illegible] [illegible]n't you? And what are you going to do about it?"

"I probably felt that sooner or later you would come to steal—just as you and your crowd stole the supplies from the forest station last winter—and that probably influenced me to give the orders. I didn't want thieves around my house, and I don't want them now. I don't want coyotes, either."

"And I don't want any such remarks out of you, either," Cranston answered him. "You lie still and shut up, and I suspect that sissy boarder of yours will come back, after he's through embracing your daughter in the snow and find you in one piece. Otherwise not."

"If I were in one piece," Lennox answered him very quietly, "instead of a bundle of broken bones that can't lift its arms, I'd get up off this couch, unarmed as I am, and stamp on your lying lips."

But Cranston only laughed and tied Lennox's feet with a cord from the window shade.

He went to work very systematically. First he rifled Lennox's desk in the living room. Then he looked on all the mantels and ransacked the cupboards and the drawers. He was taunting and calm at first. But as the moments passed, his passion grew upon him. He no longer smiled. The rodent features became intent; the eyes narrowed to curious, bright slits under the dark lashes. He went to Dan's room, searched his bureau drawer and all the pockets of the clothes hanging in his closet. He upset his trunk and pawed among old letters in the suitcase. Then, stealing like some creature of the wilderness he came back to the living room.

Lennox was not on the divan where he had left him. He lay instead on the floor near the fireplace; and he met the passion-drawn face with entire calmness. His motives were perfectly plain. He had just made a desperate effort to procure Dan's rifle that hung on two sets of deer horns over the fireplace, and was entirely exhausted from it. He had succeeded in getting down from the couch, though wracked by agony, but had been unable to lift himself up in reach of the gun.

Cranston read his intention in one glance. Lennox knew it, but he simply didn't care. He had passed the point where anything seemed to matter.

"Tell me where it is," Cranston ordered him. Again he pointed his rifle at Lennox's wasted breast.

"Tell you where what is? My money?"

"You know what I want—and it isn't money. I mean those letters that Failing found on the ridge. I'm through fooling, Lennox. Dan learned that long ago, and it's time you learned it now."

"Dan learned it because he was sick. He isn't sick now. Don't presume too much on that."

Cranston laughed with harsh scorn. "But that isn't the question. I said I've wasted all the time I'm going to. You are an old man and helpless; but I'm not going to let that stand in the way of getting what I came to get. They're hidden somewhere around this house. I've watched, and he's had no chance to take them into town. I'll give you—just five seconds to tell me where they're hidden."

"And I give you," Lennox replied, "one second less than that—to go to h—ll!"

Both of them breathed hard in the quiet room. Cranston was trembling now, shivering just a little in his arms and shoulders. "Don't get me wrong, Lennox," he warned.

"And don't have any delusions in regard to me, either," Lennox replied. "I've stood worse pain from this accident than any man can give me while I yet live, no matter what he does. If you want to get on me and hammer me in the approved Cranston way, I can't defend myself—but you won't get a civil answer out of me. I'm used to pain, and I can stand it. I'm not used to fawning to a coyote like you, and I can't stand it."

But Cranston hardly heard. An idea had flamed in his mind and cast a red glamor over all the scene about him. It was instilling a poison in his nerves and a madness in his blood, and it was searing him, like fire, in his dark brain. Nothing seemed real. He suddenly bent forward, tense.

"That's all right about you," he said. "But you'd be a little more polite if it was Snowbird—and Dan—that would have to pay."

Perhaps the color faded slightly in Lennox's face; but his voice did not change.

"They'll see your footprints before they come in and be ready," Lennox replied evenly. "They always come in by the back way. And even with a pistol, Snowbird's a match for you."

"Did you think that was what I meant?" Cranston scorned. "I know a way to destroy those letters, and I'll do it—in the four seconds that I said, unless you tell. I'm not even sure I'm goin' to give you a chance to tell now; it's too good a scheme. There won't be any witnesses then to yell around in the courts. What if I choose to set fire to this house?"

"It wouldn't surprise me a great deal. It's your own trade." Lennox shuddered once on his place on the floor.

Don't Wait Until the Spring Rush

Bring your Car in now and have it overhauled by expert mechanics. In a few weeks we will be crowded with work, so by bringing in your Car NOW we can give it better attention and can get it out in plenty of time before you will use it for spring driving.

If you have a casing that looks like the advance agent of a "blow-out" come in and get a "spare"-casing and tube. A thought in time may save you nine miles on the rim--and save the rim, too.

And if you are considering a new car this spring, don't forget that we

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whooping cought it is unsurpassed.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

THE BEDROOM

A light, cleanly and cheerful style is most appropriate in the bedroom. Likewise a greater degree of contrast may be admitted in the wall paper than in any other apartment of the home, as the bed forms a sufficient mass of neutral white to balance a tint of equal intensity on the walls.

We shall be pleased at all times to help you plan suitable decorations for your home.

BUSINESS MEN FORM CREDIT ASSOCIATION

Farmers And Business Men Gravel Roads

Over Three Hundred Dollars Is Sum Given By Belmond Firms To Put Roads In Shape.

GRAVELING ABOUT COMPLETED

The business men of the city, the merchants and various business establishments, chipped in last week and the week before, and donated seven dollars and fifty cents apiece to aid in graveling some of the roads leading into town.

This sum paid for a man and team for one day, to haul gravel to the roads. The gravel was secured from the pit south of town, where the city has a right of taking same for the purposes of improvement.

The business men worked in co-operation with the farmers, on the proposition. Many of the farmers on the roads donated their teams and services to the purpose, and the money put up by the business men went to hire more men and teams to assist them.

The roads graveled were those running west from the hill to the town line, about a mile, and the road going east past the Allison farm, a distance of about two miles.

This will be a great improvement, as both roads were badly in need of the graveling. The farmers are to be congratulated on their progressive spirit and co-operation, and the business men of the city for their public spiritedness and willingness to go half way. Belmond has had the best roads of any town around, and this improvement helps make them still better. The spirit of co-operation between town and country in this affair is a splendid thing, and it is to be hoped that such co-operation may be the rule.

THIEVES ATTEMPT ANOTHER ROBBERY AT GOLDFIELD

Eagle Grove Eagle: The night marshal at Goldfield, Axel Matson, routed out some robbers in the Charlson & Holt store at Goldfield, Monday night. He saw a pair of shoes on the counter in front where they did not belong and went around to the rear of the store to investigate. While he was attempting to get into the store the robbers broke out the plate glass in the door and when Mr. Matson got around on the street again, they were more than a block away. He was unable to overtake them. He called help and the town was thoroly searched. An abandoned Ford was found and a guard placed nearby who arrested a man who came along and got into the car. He was a stranger and when he could not give satisfactory account of himself, he was taken to Clarion, where he is being held awaiting action by the grand jury.

Miss Cornelia Eckersley is visiting her sister, Mrs. O. M. Thatcher, at Fort Dodge. She will remain for a couple of weeks.

MOTOR COMPANY CHANGES NAME; NEW PARTNER

The Belmond Auto Company is the new name of the Heginger Motor Co. Geo. Heginger and Louis Tokman have gone into partnership and are proprietors of the new firm, which is now doing business. Mr. Heginger and Mr. Tokman will handle the Ford line of cars, trucks and tractors and will be a direct agency, instead of a branch or sub-agency as heretofore. Both gentlemen are live wires and a successful business will undoubtedly be the portion of the new firm. They will have their headquarters in the same place as the old firm.

NEW COUNTY FAIR OFFICERS ARE ELECTED

At the stockholders' meeting of the Wright County Agricultural society, held at the Hotel Moore last Thursday evening, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

F. P. Wilson, President; O. J. Pardun, vice president; J. H. Moore, secretary; Geo. W. Young, Jr., treasurer. Directors: H. C. King, D. B. Jackson, L. L. Kirkpatrick, Charles Shupe.

It is proposed to spend between $7,0000.00 and $8,000.00 on the coming fair, which will include payment of premiums, race purses, and amusements. The new officers propose to put on a good fair and hope to have the support of all. H. M. Stanbery, J. H. Moore and Frank P. Wilson represented Clarion at a meeting of officials of district, county and state fair associations held at Fort Dodge last week. Dates were set for an early summer racing meet at various cities in Iowa and dates were chosen for county and district fairs in central and northern Iowa for next fall.

The Whight county fair will be held on August 9 to 12.—Monitor.

DIRKS-STANDTLANDER

A quiet wedding was solemnized last Wednesday, March 9th., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harm Dirks, when their daughter, Grace, was united in marriage to Carl Standtlander. Both of the contracting parties are from Meservey. The bride was becomingly attired in blue crepe de chine. Mr. and Mrs. Dirks attended the bride and groom. After the ceremony a dinner was served. Only the immediate relatives of the couple were present at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Standtlander will go to housekeeping on a farm west of Meservey, which the groom has rented for the coming year. The Independent joins in extending congratulations.

UNITED MANUFACTURING PLANT BEING OPERATED

The plant of the United Manufacturing company is now being gotten into shape for operation, according to E. F. Wege, president of the company, who states that he has rented the plant for the time being and is running it on his own capital and that of the men associated with him. A. Mr. Rise has been secured as the factory manager, having been for a number of years production manager with the Waterloo Gas Engine company. Mr. Miller, another of the employees hired by Mr. Wege, will be factory superintendent, in charge of the manufacturing of pumpjacks. A Mr. Ness, of Waterloo formerly the chief engineer and pattern maker of a Waterloo tractor concern, is another man on the force. All three of these men. Mr. Wege states, have invested in the plant. Mr. Wege says that he has orders now on hand to keep the factory operating for several months. The plant is not being operated by the directors. but has been rented to Mr. Wege for the time being.

First National And State Bank To Consolidate

Two Banks Will Be Merged Into One Which Will Be Known As The State Bank of Belmond.

WILL MOVE IN NEW BUILDING

The First National Bank of Belmond and the State Bank of Belmond have made definite arrangements for the consolidation of the two institutions in the near future, and it is expected to complete the merger in a few weeks.

The consolidation of the two banks is now an assured fact, the directors of the State Bank having made their decision on March 4th and those of the First National on the 10th.

The new bank will be known as the State Bank of Belmond, and will occupy the new building now being completed on Spruce street, next to the present State Bank building.

The capital of the new bank, it is announced, will be $80,000.

The new building is expected to be ready for occupancy between the 11th and 15th of April, when the consolidation of the two banks will occur.

That the two banks would merge has been rumored for some time, but the first official notice of their consolidation was given out this week, as no definite annoucement could be made until the directors of the First National Bank held their meeting to decide the question, on last week Thursday.

COMBINATION SALE HAS GREAT QUANTITY OF GOODS

The combination sale held on last week Tuesday was a good example of the pulling power of advertising. The only advertising of the sale that was done, was a few small "readers" in the Independent, yet there was the greatest number of articles listed that have ever been listed at similar sales in the past. The sale was a very good success, the prices received being very good all the way thru, chickens for instance selling as high as $2.40 apiece. Auctioneer Ericson of Kanawha, and Jack Munnis, of Clarion, assisted T. D. Rankins with the sale as there were too many articles to be handled by one auctioneer.

MARRIED

Lewis Raymond Fryslie and Miss Edna Galke were united in marriage on March 2nd, at Iowa Falls. Miss Galke will be remembered by the Belmond ladies as a former trimmer at the Dorenkamp and Greenlander millinery shop. Her home was in Dows. Her pleasing personality won her many friends here, who wish her the best of happiness. The newly-weds will be at home after April 1st at the groom's farm near Dows.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Marriage licenses for the past week:

Arthur Larson and Alice Bell.

Tommy Anfison and Lily M. Nervig.

Alva Fuller and Hilen C. Schaffer.

The April term of the district court will open on the 4th day of the coming month. Judge G. D. Thompson of Webster City will preside.

Contracts were also awarded by the board for the following drainage districts: No. 191, in Iowa and Grant; No. 192, Dayton, No. 197, Dayton; No. 199, Eagle Grove township.

Miss Edith Vaughn, county recorder, reports less than half the number of papers filed for record at his time as compared with former years. The biggest day in March so far is seventy-two papers.

The board of supervisors awarded the graveling contract yesterday to I. C. Schroeder, of Webster City, for surfacing secondary road district No. 7, two and one-half miles in length and running southwest from

Very little opposition developed to the improvement of drainage district No. 3 and on Friday the board awarded the contract. It is a large project and includes land in Blaine. Vernon, Lincoln and Wall Lake townships, in addition to the town of Galt.

The January term of court furnished considerable entertainment in the divorce line. Evidently we are always to have this evil with us, for closely following the anouncement of the opening of the April term comes the petition of Pauline Hesler, who seeks a separation from Paul Hesler. The plaintiff alleges she was married to defendant at Woolstock last November and soon after becoming his wife, she learned that he was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors; that he had large quantities of intoxicating liquors in his cellar; that he calls in neighbors and they have drinking parties in the home; that she objected to this conduct and asked him to refrain from using intoxicating liquors to the extent of becoming intoxicated and that he discontinue his drinking parties; that defendant became angry at these requests and called her vile names, telling her to leave the place and if she did not he would shoot her; that because of his conduct she did leave the home one evening and stayed at the neighbors and when she returned home the next morning he refused to admit her. In addition to a divorce plaintiff asks the court to allow her $40 per month for support.

ROUTE ONE ITEMS

The Misses Virgie, Vida and Cloe Jenison, accompanied by Mrs. Ed. Jenison, were visitors at Mason City last Saturday. While there they had the pleasure of calling on Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Vesterby, who are former residents of Belmond.

Vida Jenison was on the sick list one day last week. Mrs. O. D. Jenison acted as her substitute.

Miss Grace Mennenga left last Monday for Ackley on business.

The annual meeting of the directors of Pleasant township was held in the Center school house last Monday afternoon. Fred Loats was elected as director at large.

The Misses Beatrice and Cecilla Barry were among the many Mason City callers Saturday.

The August Rabe family spent Sunday at the Otto Neuhring home.

Last Sunday, about four o'clock, the farmhouse of Ralph Jenison was discovered to be on fire. The telephone was brought into service and the neighbors responded promptly, succeeding in extinguishing the fire in short order. It originated in the second story and was caused by some bedding coming in contact with some bedding. Aside from the loss of the bedding and a hole burned in the floor, no serious damage was done.

HAMPTON MAN COMMITS SUICIDE BY SHOOTING

Hampton Chronicle: G. T. McCrillis, one of the well known residents of Hampton and Franklin county, shot himself at his office in the Myers block, last Monday morning. He was found at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon by R. H. Woodburn, who had gone to the office to see Mr. McCrillis about some business matters. The dead man was leaning forward in his office chair, with his overcoat and muffler still on, which indicated that he had committed the deed soon after he had reached his office that morning. A large revolver was lying by his side.

The coroner was promptly called, and he had the body removed to he Paul undertaking rooms, and Tuesday morning an inqust was held,with E. E. Clock, D. L. Stonebraker and Fred Nancolas as jurors. The verdict was that he came to his death by a bullet fired by his own hand. The bullet from the revolver entered the side of his head, and death must have been insantaneous. Close friends knew that he had worried considerably recently over financial troubles, and the recent death of his son, was also a blow to him.

MORE BELMOND WOMEN DRAWN FOR JURY DUTY

Twenty women and nearly three times as many men have been drawn for jurors in the next term of the district court at Clarion. Among the men and women drawn from this vicinity are the following:

Belmond: S. M. Morse, May Tracy, Otto Madison, Mary Gealow, Margaret Mennenga, L. Pals, Laura McGuire, Arthur Nelson, Mrs. A. E. Martin. N. A. Nelson, Geo. Baxter, Guy Baker.

Rowan: Guy Stumph, C. H. Lindsay, R. H. Keith. R. E. Lee Aldrich,

Alexander: Chas. Hopkey.

Kanawha: J. C. Johnson, John Veldhouse. Bert Brouwer.

OVER TWENTY MEMBERS HAVE JOINED IN WEEK

Incorporation Will Be Means Of Putting All Business On A More Substantial Basis.

ALL CITIZENS TO BE RATED

Every Citizen Of Town And Every Farmer Will Be Given Credit According To Rating.

Last week Thursday evening the first meeting was held of the Belmond Business Men's Credit Association.

This association will be composed of the business men of the city, and of all others who are in business here, and will be for the collection of accounts and the rating of all those who do business in Belmond, as well as the settling of any differences between business man and customer.

Mr. Hersman, of Clarion, was in town last week organizing the association, and found a ready field. Some fifteen of the business men were in attendance at this meeting, and a temporary board of directors, consisting of Ben Johnson, W. W. Goetz, Adolph Skovlin, Bert Anfison, Conrad Nissen, Herman Schultz, and Cato C. Griesy.

This board later met and elected as the temporary officers of the association the following:

W. W. Goetz, President; Adolph Skovlin, vice president; Bert Anfison, secretary; Ben Johnson, treasurer.

The association will be incorporated under the laws of the state of Iowa, and the necessary papers have been filed with Secretary of State W. C. Ramsay. Being a corporation, the association can sue and be sued, own any real estate and conduct its affairs the same as any corporation.

It will work in co-operation with similar organizations in other towns, such as those at Clarion and Eagle Grove, and those associations in the same manner with the one here.

The principle of the association will meet with the approval of all business men. Any member who has an account which he has been unable to collect, may turn it over to the association, which will endeavor to collect for him, and in case the party refuses to pay may bring legal action to collect same. All citizens of the community will be rated, and in case any one refuses to pay a just debt that party will be placed on the "doubtful list,"and each member of the association will be under obligations to the association to refuse this party any credit whatsoever until his accounts have been squared up.

At this writing there are some twenty-two members among the business men of the city, who have joined the organization, and quite a number of others have signified their intention of joining as soon as the organization is perfected. The Independent was authoritatively informed Saturday that over two thousand dollars in accounts had been turned in to the association for collection, and this amount will doubtless be increased several hundred dollars within a few days.

Under the obligations of the association, any person or person who refuses to pay his debts will be denied credit for the purchase of anything he may want from any member of the association. He will be unable to secure anything unless he pays cash Should he move to another town, his rating will be forwarded and he will be refused credit in his new home until he has shown that he is worthy.

The credit association is not intended in any way to work a hardship on anyone but is simply to put the "dead beets" which every business man runs up against sooner or later where they cannot beat their honest obligations. The association will have a Clerk. whose busines it will be to collect the accounts turned in by the members.

Similar organizations at Clarion and Eagle Grove have proven their worth and have been very successful

SCHOOL NOTES

Teachers and pupils are looking forward to the spring vacation which will be the week of Easter, beginning March 28. School will resume April 4th.

Considerable interest is being manifested in base ball and track. The real handicap is the lack of an athletic field close to the school building. We hope to have the use of the ball grounds in Mr. Luick's pasture again this year, but as yet nothing has been done. However, it will only be the course of a few years until this field will be sold into lots and then no place will be available. Why shouldn't the city of Belmond get an option on the block to the north of our high school? It would make an ideal playground in every respect and can be purchased much cheaper now than later, when houses are built upon it. The time is not far distant when something will have to be done. Think it over. Express your opinion concerning a playground for our boys and girls.

Community night, which was postponed Tuesday night of this week will be held tonight, Wednesday. Make an effort to be present and enjoy the evening. You don't know what you are missing. Plan to attend. Regular night every Tuesday.

We ask the parents to co-operate with the school in the matter of attendance. There has been considerable tardiness and absence during the past few weeks, some of which I am sure could have been avoided. Please make an extra effort to get your children to school and not tardy. Watch the report cards which are sent home and if not satisfactory, please consult the teacher now. Don't wait until the pupil fails next May and then find fault. Now is the time to prevent many failures.

The following pupils are elegible to graduate at the close of the school year, if they maintain their present standing or improve:

Ennis Alle. Grace Allen, Inez Boughton, Olive Butts, Wm. Chase, Agnes Dillon, Helen Enger, Leona Jacobs, Donald Thiltgen, Beatrice Leavy, Lyle Jenison, Wava Jenison, Magdeline Johnson. David Luick, Glenn Morris, Nellie Murphy, Dorotha Okrueg, Marvyl Robinson, Alma Ruka.

Carol Tyrrell went to Emmetsburg, Friday, to take part in the predrict declamatory contest. At this contest winners of the various subdistricts contests competed. It was a very strong contest and well worth hearing. Altho Belmond did not take any honors at this contest, we are glad to compete.

The Emmetsburg school was very hospitable. The Home Economics class entertained all the contestants and their coaches at a dinner on Friday night. The visitors were met at the trains with automobiles and were entertained in the homes.

Saturday night the Normal Training club held its regular meeting. Miss Ramsay gave a demonstration of first grade reading and phonic drill. Every one who missed the program missed something well worth while.

Mrs. Amy Peterson visited language classes in the fourth grade room on Thursday.

Mrs. Ben Johnson and Miss Julia Johnson were Kindergarten visitors Friday of last week.

GOODELL SCHOOL ELECTION QUITE LIVELY AFFAIR

The election of schoool officials at Goodell this week was the cause of much interest, there being four candidates in the field to fill the vacancies of two retiring members. A large crowd was in town, and the vote was heavy, 298 votes being cast. A. N. Ahrenkiel received 108, Wm. Beiers 92, W. H. Monoghen 49, and Henry Chistenson 49. The retiring members of the board were T. N. Hamilton and C. H. Conklin.

T. A. Eckersley visited the Whitman boys last Saturday at Clarion. They are getting along just fine, altho they had a close call. They were black with gas and smoke, and when they were crossing the street to the hospital the flesh on their hands and fingers hung down two inches from the end of their fingers and their faces were badly burned. They were in the recent explosion at Clarion.

—I—

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. White are in receipt of a letter from Governor Kendall, recently, congratulating them on the birth of their first son, Robert Kendall who was named after the Governor. Mrs. W. H. White grandmother of Robert Kendall, and the Governor were school mates. Governor Kendall sent his autographed photograph to his namesake.

A letter received from Arthur Nelson, says that he sailed from New Orleans for Honduras, Central America, with the Dyer Construction company.

The night express service on the Great Western, promised some time ago by the officials of the American Express company, started on Tuesday night of this week.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

GRANT HEARS COUNTY AGENT LEADER

Grant township was fortunate in having Mr. I. W. Van Nice, Assistant County Agent Leader for Iowa, with them at their township meeting at the Center school Friday afternoon, March 11.

The afternoon program was opened by a short business session during which plans for carrying on the township work were discussed and special attention was given to the consideration of definite plans for the booth exhibits at the county fair. This was followed by a splendid address by Mr. Van Nice who until the last year has been a practical farmer himself and who at present owns and operates a half section of land in Benton county of this state.

The program committee has decided to hold a box social on the afternoon of Friday, April 1, and the proceeds will go to bear the expenses of arranging the booth for the ladies exhibits at the county fair.

The ladies of Grant township are asked to take notice of the announcement of the date for their regular meeting of the ladies division of the Farm Bureau which has been set for the last Thursday afternoon in each month.

WILL COME TO BAT AGAIN

An illustration of the difficulty frequently encountered in attempting really meritorious legislation was afforded recently when the Iowa lawmakers swatted Senator Campbell's farm mortgage bill to the tune ot 27 to 18.

This is a Farm Bureau federation measure. It is still in the house, however, and an amended form will be sent back to the senate and be allowed to come to bat again. It is a good bill and entitled to pass on its merits, regardless of who or what influences may be backing it.

The meat of this measure lies in the provision requiring 30 days' notice to be given before instituting foreclosure proceedings on farm mortgages. To the average person this may seem of small consequence, but it is really of large importance, in connection with the present law in Iowa, for it would protect land owners against an insidious form of financial insolence and exploitation growing out of the recent advance in interest rates.

Under the laws of Iowa if the interest on a farm mortgage is not paid promptly on the date specified both interest and principle become due and subject to foreclosure. There are thousands of mortgages executed three, four, five or more years ago as the case may be, with more or less time to run yet. Mostly they draw five per cent which doesn't look good to money lenders just now.

Many of these mortgages have been sold and resold, passed from hand to hand and in many intances wind up in the possession of interests in some of the eastern states. Since holders of mortgages are not required to notify the makers of such instruments in case of transfer land owners often lose track of their notes for the time being. Consequently interest-paying day may arrive and the owner not know where to send the money for both principle and interest of mortgages are payable where the holder of the mortgage resides, whether in Iowa or in some other state. Under the circumstances all a man can do is to hold the money until he finds out where it should go. The time slides by. Meanwhile the mortgage is subject to foreclosure because the interest was not delivered on the day appointed. Then, after the customary "three days of grace", the holder of the mortgage is at liberty to start something for the owner.

This is not mere idle conjecture. It is going on right along. Numerous instances of such exploitation have been brought to the notice of federation officials. No actual forclosures of course, that is, the land has not acually been taken, for the law gives an owner one year in which to scratch round and redeem his fortunes. It is worked this way:

The owner is graciously given an opportunity to "compromise." He is given to undersand that foreclosure proceedings can be stayed, provided he is willing to make a new mortgage for the balance of the term at higher rate of interest and, incidently, stand for being mulched for a stiff commission on top of it.

If Senator Campbell's bill to require thirty days notice to property owners before foreclosure proceedings are instituted can be made the law it will put an everlasting crimp in this newest form of graft.

NORWAY NEWS NOTES

Hans Wicks

Hans Wicks, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Wicks, who underwent an operation at the Sams hospital in Clarion last Thursday, died Sunday night at ten o'clock.

His mind was clear until his death and most of the family were at his bedside. He prayed, and asked those who were with him, to pray with him and for him. He seemed to be so happy to move to a better home.

He bid all his relatives farewell, and his last words were that Jesus was coming for him, then he closed his eyes with a smile for he knew that he was saved.

Hans was well liked by all who knew him. He had many friends, who will miss him and who extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

He was 22 years, 9 months old at the time of his death. In 1919 he was united in marriage to Neva Parr, in which union a daughter was born. He leaves his wife and child, his parents, two brothers, six sisters, his grandparents and various other relatives.

Funeral services were held at the house at 11 o'clock and at the church at 12:30, conducted by the Rev. Trelstad, interment being in the Norway township cemetery.

Miss Anna May Stole visited with her sisters, Mrs. John Engh and Mrs. Geo. Neibe, over Sunday, returning to Clarion, her home, that evening.

CLARION MAN SWIPES DOC'S "MEDICINE"

One of Clarion's doctors had occasion recently to move some of his personal effects to another place in town, and among the said effects was a jug o' rum, or alcohol. The doc got it moved all right, but when night was on the spirits moved, and moved the spirits, which were spirited away. In a couple of days the evidence began to turn up in the way of drunks, which led the authorities to suspect several young men of the city of having been holding seances with the spirits, using the doc's jug as a medium. One young fellow was arrested and plead guilty, admitting there were others in on the deal but refusing to devulge their names. He is awaiting the pleasure of the grand jury.

They Appeal to Our Sympathies

The bilious and dyspeptic are constant sufferers and appeal to our sympathies. Many such, however, have been completely restored to health by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. These tablets strengthen the stomach invigorate the liver and improve the digestion. They also cause a gentle movement of the boweus. When you have any trouble with your stomach give them a trial.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

ROWAN CHURCH NOTES

Union meetings will be held in the town churches next Sunday, March 20th. The morning service, which will be held in the Congregational church, and conducted by Mrs. Ada Anderson, will be addressed by the Rev. Harold Tomkinson, his subject being "The Right of the Child." At the joint session of the Sunday school, to be held at the close of the public service, Miss Umbrait, of Clarion, will deliver an address on "The Standardizing of Sunday School Methods." Discussion will follow. The evening service will be held at the M. E. church and the speakers will be Mrs. Ada Anderson and Dr. J. F. Jamieson, of Clarion, the former speaking on "The Child We Teach" and the latter on "The Book We Teach." A day of special pleasure and profit is anticipated. Let every Congregationalist and Methodist be in their place.

The Easter supper of the M. E. church will be held in the dining room of the church next Friday, March 18. The ladies of the church intend to serve a delicious supper and send a special invitation to the people and friends of the town and country. Wil you kindly make preparations to be there.

The Women's Foreign Missionary society of the M. E. church held their annual social gathering last Wednesday, at the home of Mrs. Guy Sheldon, and it proved to be a very pleasant occasion. Interesting addresses were given by Mrs. Hatheway Mitchell, S. D., and Mrs. F. B. Sheldon, of Rowan. About forty ladies were present. The following delegates to the annual convention, which is to be held in Clarion in April were elected: Mrs. Guy Sheldon, Mrs. Guy Stumph, Mrs. Herb Hadley, Mrs. Roy Ryder, Mrs. Willard McCallum and Miss Esther Fowler.

The Womens' Foreign Missionary society of the M. E. church were entertained last Friday afternoon by Mrs. Robert Keith. A large number of the ladies were present and spent an enjoyable afternoon together.

The Farm Bureau of Blaine township met last Wednesday at the hom of Mr. Hubbell. One of the best meetings of the year was the unanimous opinion of the members. County Secretary Edwards gave a fine review of the work of the Farm Bureau and spoke most enthusiastically of the present and future prospects of this splendid organization The Rev. Harold Tomkinson, of the M. E. church, Rowan, gave an address on the "Farmer and Education," which was folowed by another address on the same subject by Blanche Bock, of Clarion. Other items on the program were a solo by Mrs Cundall, and a reading by Mrs. H Tomkinson. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Evan Patton, who proved to be an excellent chairman.

Miss Lottie Williams visited her sister, Mrs. Peter Schreck, at Hayfield, this week.

Joe Patton, Peter Mathiason, of Rowan, and John D. Meinders, of Goodell, held a Polled and Horne cattle sale in he Rowan Sale Pavilion Wednesday, March 9. The sale was well attended and the stock sold fair.

The Congregational Ladies Aid society will hold their annual Easter sale on March 26.

The Congregational Ladies Aid society met with Mrs. Elsie Allen at her home on Thursday.

Mrs. Fred Smith, of Clarion, visited her mother, Mrs. M. M. Snyder, at the Fred Brooks home Wednesday.

Edgar Manlte, Daniel Whitten, Roscoe Robinson, Bill Whitten and Fred Hackley started Thursday night for Forest City to a wrestle, but owing to bad roads they were unable to get there.

Fred Brooks and daughters, Thelma and Marjorie, and Mr. and Mrs. Herb Hadley motored to Eagle Grove on Thursday to shop.

Theo. Hansen is a Chicago shopper this week.

Mrs. R. H. Keith entertained the members and friends of the M. E. Home Missionary society on Friday of last week.

The C. I. C. class of the Congregational church expects to give a "fine" social in the near future. Watch for the date. , The fines will be as printed in the last issue of the Independent.

Mrs. Guy Stumph and Mrs. Roscoe Robinson were Fort Dodge callers on last Friday.

Word has been received that Mr. and Mrs. Almond Drury, of Des Moines, have a fine baby girl.

Mrs. Jurden Brinkman and son, Merrill, of St. Peter, Minnesota, are visiting friends and relatives in this city this week. Greatgrandpa Bingham is wearing a broader smile nowadays.

Miss June Burt is on the sick list this week.

Edgar Bingham visited his daughter, Mrs. J. F. Howell, who is in the hospital at Iowa Falls, Saturday. Mrs. Howell is doing fine.

The Junior class of the Rowan high school entertained the other three classes Wednesday evening at the school house. The gymnasium was decorated in the colors of the four classes. The evening was spent in games of interest to high school pupils. After the games were over a two-course supper was served. They had a very enjoyable evening and declared that it was the best high school party that had been given for some time.

Friday evening occured the last basket ball game of the season. The Belmond girls played the Rowan girls in a good game. The Rowan girls put up a good fight and held them to the close score of 26-27, in favor of Rowan.

Mrs. M. A. Baker, of Kanawha, visited at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lieuwen, one day last week.

DON'T FORGET THE FIREMEN

Tomorrow is the big day of the city firemen. Don't forget their program for the day: Supper, auction, and dance.

The firemen are deserving of every boost that can be given them, in any way. They are putting on this affair on their own hook, to raise money to purchase needed equipment for better fire protection. They are volunteers, and spend ten years in the service of the community. The community can do nothing else than to be fair with them when they ask for necessary equipment for better service.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

The usual services next Sunday beginning at 10 a. m. with Sunday school. Next Sunday will be observed as Decision Day in our Sunday school. Parents ought to be enough interested in their boys and girls to talk earnestly with them about the importance of their making a public decision and confession of Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Better yet, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and go that way yourself."

If a stranger in the community or without a church home you will find a welcome at any or all of these services of the church. Make your life good, and make it count for good in the community where you live.

M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL

We beat every record Sunday in attendance, much to the joy of the officers and school. We had 156 out with an offering of $6.00, despite the bad weather. A year ago, March 14, 1920, we had 123 with an offering of $4.58. On May 13, 1917, we had an attendance of 155, being a record never excelled except by Sunday's attendance.

If you have no church home of your own, you will find a welcome in any of our classes. Go to Sunday School.

S. E. Cretary.

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

There will be the regular services on next Sabbath. Sunday school at 10 a. m., the morning worship at 11, and evening services at 7:30.

The quarterly business meeting of the congregation will be held in the church parlors on March 22. All who expect to come into the church either upon confession or by letter, will please speak to the pastor before that time if possible.

Easter promises to be a great day in the church. The Sunday school will be as usual but the morning worship will include the Lord's Supper, members will be received and adults and children will be baptised. The choir is working hard on the Cantata which will be rendered in the evening. This will be the climax of the day's worship and we hope to see all the members and friends as well as many who do not attend worship any where present. Come and let us help you make the most out of life.

To the Public:

Our business is increasing at such an extent that we find ourselves unable to carry credit accounts on our books any longer. The amounts due total such a large sum that we find ourselves seriously handicapped. We have endeavored to give you the very best of meats and service and we mean to continue this policy in the future. In order to do this, however, to maintain our high quality of meats and low prices, we must place our business on a cash basis. We are, therefore, beginning, on April 1st placing our business on a

"APRIL FOLLY"

A Paramount-Artcraft picture featuring

MARION DAVIES

The picture is a story within a story. April Poole, a brilliant young woman novelist, is the heroine. She has just written a new book. As she shows it to her publisher, the events in it are thrown on the screen. The publisher figures as the hero, his editor as the villain, and the girl the heroine.

In the main story, April takes the place of Lady Diana Mannister, about to sail to South Africa with a precious jewel. April is trailed by diamond thieves and detectives and is saved from a fatal encounter with the former by a young man, Kerry Sarle, who falls in love with her. By a clever trick she defeats her enemies and brings the adventure to a successful close.

WALLACE REID

Based upon an original magazine article by Byron Morgan. Wallace Reid is again "Toodles" Walden, manager of the western branch for "Darco" cars. The "Darco" engineers have a new motor, a marvel for speed and power, which their rivals, the "Fargot" people, are anxious to inspect by fair means or foul. To prevent "Toodles" who is his son-in-law, from racing, J. D. Ward, the "bear," and president of the "Darco" concern, has his driver's license taken away for sixty days and sells the three "Darco' racing cars. But when the "Fargot" company challenges the "Darco" to a road race from Los Angeles to San Francisco, "Toodles" secretly buys back one of the cars and enters the race. The other two "Darcos" have been purchased by the "Fargot" people and disguised as their own cars.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to 'Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

CHAPTER IV.—The girl sets out across the Divide, in the darkness, to bring a physician. She has a sense that she is being stalked by some animal, and becomes uneasy. Dan, who had been shooting, arrives home and finds Lennox. Both Lennox and Dan fear for "Snowbird's" safety, and Dan at once sets out to overtake her. The animal stalking the girl is the cougar which had finished Hildreth, now become a hunter of man. Failing arrives only just in time to save the girl's life, and in that manner pays part of the debt he owes her. As evidence of Dan's returning strength he strangles the animal, which, though wounded by a revolver shot from "Snowbird's" weapon, was a most formidable enemy.

BOOK THREE—THE PAYMENT.

CHAPTER I.—Hildreth's disappearance is unaccounted for until Dan finds his mutilated body and near it the evidence which will send Cranston to the gallows and break up the outlaw gang. A record cold winter sets in. Cranston, suspecting that Hildreth's evidence is in existence, visits the Lennox home in the absence of Dan and "Snowbird," to search for it. He fails to find it, and in his rage and disappointment sets fire to the house. Lennox being powerless to stop him. The almost helpless man drags himself outside.

"I wouldn't have to worry about those letters then, would I? They are somewhere in the house, and they'd be burned to ashes. But that isn't all that would be burned. You could maybe crawl out, but you couldn't carry the guns, and you couldn't carry the pantry full of food. You're nearly eighty miles up here from the nearest occupied house, with two pair of snowshoes for the three of you and one dinky pistol. And you can't walk at all. It would be a nice pickle, wouldn't it? Wouldn't your have a fat chance of getting down to civilization?"

The voice no longer held steady. It trembled with passion. This was no idle threat. The brain had already seized upon the scheme with every intention of carrying it out. The wilderness lay stark and bare, stripped of all delusion—not only in the snow world outside but in the hearts of these two men, its sons.

"I have only one hope," Lennox replied. "I hope, unknown to me, that Dan has already dispatched those letters. The arm of the law is long, Cranston. It's easy to forget that fact up here. It will reach you in the end."

Cranston turned through the door, into the kitchen. He was gone a long time. Lennox heard him at work; the crinkle of paper and then a pouring sound around the walls. Then he heard the sharp crack of a match. An instant later the first wisp of smoke came curling, pungent with burning oil, through the corridor.

"You crawled from your couch to reach that gun," Cranston told him when he came in. "Let's see you crawl out now."

Lennox's answer was a curse—the last, dread outpouring of an unbroken will. He didn't look again at the glittering eyes. He scarcely watched Cranston's further preparations: the oil poured on the rugs and furnishings, the kindling placed at the base of the curtains. Cranston was trained in this work. He was taking no chances on the fire being extinguished. And Lennox began to crawl toward the door.

He managed to grasp the corner of the blanket on the divan as he went, and he dragged it behind him. Pain wracked him, and smoke half-blinded him. But he made it at last. And by the time he had crawled one hundred feet over the snow crust the whole structure was in flames. The red tongues spoke with a roar.

Cranston, the fire-madness on his face, hurried to the outbuildings. There he repeated the work. He touched a match to the hay in the barn, and the wind flung the flame through it in an instant. The sheds and other outbuildings were treated with oil. And seeing that his work was done, he called once to the prone body of Lennox on the snow and mushed away into the silences.

Lennox's answer was not a curse this time. Rather it was a prayer, unuttered, and in his long years Lennox had not prayed often. When he prayed at all, the words were burning fire. His prayer was that of Samson—that for a moment his strength might come back to him.

CHAPTER II.

Two miles across the ridges, Dan and Snowbird saw a faint mist blowing between the trees. They didn't recognize it at first. It might be fine snow, blown by the wind, or even one of those mysterious fogs that sometimes sweep over the snow.

"But it looks like smoke," Snowbird said.

"But it couldn't be. The trees are too wet to burn."

But then a sound that at first was just the faintest whisper in which neither of them would let themselves believe, became distinct past all denying. It was that menacing crackle of a great fire, that in the whole world of sounds is perhaps the most terrible.

"It's our house," Snowbird told him. "And father can't get out."

She spoke very quietly. Perhaps the most terrible truths of life are always spoken in that same quiet voice. Then both of them started across the snow as fast as their unwieldy snowshoes would permit.

"He can crawl a little," Dan called to her. "Don't give up, Snowbird mine. I think he'll be safe."

They mounted to the top of the ridge; and the long sweep of the forest was revealed to them. The house was a singular tall pillar of flame, already glowing that dreadful red from which firemen, despairing, turn away. Then the girl seized his hands and danced about him in a mad circle.

"He's alive!" she cried. "You can see him—just a dot on the snow. He crawled out to safety."

She turned and sped at a breakneck pace down the ridge. Dan had to race to keep up with her. But it wasn't entirely wise to try to mush so fast. A dead log lay beneath the snow with a broken limb stretched almost to its surface, and it caught her snowshoe. The wood cracked sharply, and she fell forward in the snow. But she wasn't hurt, and the snowshoe itself, in spite of a small crack in the wood, was still serviceable.

"Haste makes waste," he told her. "Keep your feet on the ground, Snowbird; the house is gone already and your father is safe. Remember what lies before us."

The thought sobered and halted her. She glanced once at the dark face of her companion. Dan couldn't understand the strange light that suddenly leaped to her eyes. Perhaps she herself couldn't have explained the wave of tenderness that swept over her—with no cause except the look in Dan's earnest gray eyes and the lines that cut so deep. Since the world was new, it has been the boast of the boldest of men that they looked their Fate in the face. And this is no mean looking. For fate is a sword from the darkness, a power that reaches out of the mystery, and cannot be classed with sights of human origin. It burns out the eyes of all but the strongest men. Yet Dan was looking at his fate now, and his eyes held straight.

They walked together down to the ruined house, and the three of them sat silent while the fire burned red. Then Lennox turned to them with a half-smile.

"You're wasting time, you two," he said. "Remember, all our food is gone. If you start now, and walk hard, maybe you can make it out."

"There are several things to do first," Dan answered simply.

"I don't know what they are. It isn't going to be any picnic, Dan. A man can travel only so far without food to keep up his strength, particularly over such ridges as you have to cross. It will be easy to give up and die. It's the test, man; it's the test."

"And what about you?" his daughter asked.

"Oh, I'll be all right. Besides—it's the only thing that can be done. I can't walk, and you can't carry me on your backs. What else remains? I'll stay here—and I'll scrape together enough wood to keep a fire. Then you can bring help."

He kept his eyes averted when he talked. He was afraid for Dan to see them, knowing that he could read the lie in them.

"How do you expect to find wood—in this snow?" Dan asked him. "It will take four days to get out; do you think you could lie here and battle with a fire for four days, and then four days more that it will take to come back? You'd have two choices: to burn green wood that I'd cut for you before I left, or the rain-soaked deadwood under the snow. You couldn't keep either one of them burning, and you'd die in a night. Besides—this is no time for an unarmed man to be alone in the hills."

Lennox's voice grew pleading. "Be sensible, Dan!" he cried. "That Cranston's got us, and got us right. I've only one thing more I care about—and that is that you pay the debt! I can't hope to get out myself. I say that I can't even hope to. But if you bring my daughter through—and when spring comes, pay what we owe to Cranston—I'll be content. Heavens, son—I've lived my life. The old pack leader dies wheu his time comes, and so does a man."

His daughter crept to him and sheltered his gray head against her breast. "I'll stay with you, then," she cried.

"Don't be a little fool, Snowbird," he urged. "My clothes are wet already from the melted snow. It's too long a way—it will be too hard a fight, and children—I'm old and tired out. I don't want to make the try—hunger and cold; and even if you'd stay here and grub wood, Snowbird, they'd find us both dead when they came back in a week. We can't live without food, and work and keep warm—and there isn't a living creature in the hills."

"Except the wolves," Dan reminded him.

"Except the wolves," Lennox echoed. "Remember, we're unarmed—and they'd find it out. You're young, Snowbird, and so is Dan—and you two will be happy. I know how things are, you two—more than you know yourselves—and in the end you'll be happy. But me—I'm too tired to make the try. I don't care about it enough. I'm going to wave you good-by, and smile, and lie here and let the cold come down. You feel warm in a little while—"

But she stopped his lips with her hand. And he bent and kissed it.

"If anybody's going to stay with you," Dan told them in a clear, firm voice, "it's going to be me. But aren't any of the cabins occupied?"

"You know they aren't," Lennox answered. "Not even the houses beyond the North Fork, even if we could get across. The nearest help is over seventy miles."

"And Snowbird, think! Haven't any supplies been left in the ranger station?"

FORD OWNERS!

You Need

Advance Cork Insert

Brake Lining

Cork Insert makes Fords work wonderfully smooth—stops shaking and rattling—makes the brake quick-acting and surprisingly smooth. Requires only slight pressure on the pedals—makes Ford driving a real pleasure.

Cork Insert is far the cheapest in the end. One set outwears three sets of ordinary lining—saves you the expense and inconvenience of relining brakes. Does away with jarring vibration—makes your Ford last much longer.

Ordinary linings get a slick surface from friction and oil. This slick surface hasn't any gripping power. The corks in Cork Insert always grip smoothly, instantly—and have great wearing quality.

Bring in Your Ford Today! Let us equip it with Cork Insert. Our Repair Department is at your service. We do expert repairing.

We carry a full line of accessories. The best tires and tubes—oils and greases.

CHO-CHO, HEALTH CLOWN, TO BE HERE MAY 5

Firemen's Ball Clears Five Hundred Fifty For Fund

Jammed House Enjoys Fine Supper And Dance Afterwards Draws Over Hundred Numbers.

RECEIPTS SIX HUNDRED FIFTY

The firemen's big bazaar and ball, held in the opera house on last week Thursday evening, St. Patrick's Day, was a decided success from every angle.

The firemen took in around six hundred and fifty dollars in all, from the supper, auction and dance. The house was packed to the doors at all of the affairs, and nothing but a good time is reported.

The supper was served to around two hundred and eighty, and was universally pronounced a "fine feed." The auction, held after the supper, went thru in good shape, and realized around two hundred and fifty dollars. Everything imaginable had been donated, and the list of articles included about everything from hats to eatables.

The dance was very well attended, over a hundred numbers being sold, and a very enjoyable time is reported. The Goslin orchestra, of Clarion, furnished the music.

The firemen now have a neat little sum to apply towards the purchase of the equipment which they need so badly to give the town the adequate protection from fire which the city expects. The people of the town are to be congratulated for the manner in which they met the request of the fire company, and the splendid way in which they co-operated.

The boys have not decided as yet just what equipment they will purchase, but annoucement of it will be made at the proper time.

NOREM-RASMUSSEN

The following from the Clarion Monitor will be of interest to Belmond people, as it concerns a local young man:

At the Congregational parsonage Saturday afternoon occurred the marriage of Roscoe Norem of Belmond and Mrs. Hannah Rasmussen, of Mason City. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Paul Viehe and witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Meacham, of Belmond. The happy couple are now at home to their friends at Belmond.

"SPINSTER'S CONVENTION" TO BE GIVEN AGAIN

The ladies of the Methodist church have had so many requests that they again stage their play, "The Spinster's Convention," that they have decided to put on this most amusing and entertaining farce the second time. The play was given on last week Tuesday, and was pronounced very good by the large crowd who attended. The play will be staged the second time on Monday, March 28, in the opera house. Those who did not get a chance to see the fun the first time will be given the opportunity then of being highly entertained and amused.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Courtney were called to Dubuque last week by the serious illness of Mr. Courtney's sister, Miss Jane Courtney, who died there Sunday morning. Miss Courtney will be remembered by a number of Belmond people as she spent about six months here at the home of her brother last year.

WEAR A POPPY ON DECORATION DAY

Whereas, A movement has been instituted to adopt the poppy as the memorial flower of the American Legion thruout the nation; and

Whereas, Out of this should come some symbol to perpetually remind us, and to unfailingly teach coming generations the value of the "Light of Liberty," and our debt to those who helped to save it for us by paying the supreme sacrifice, and that we may not forget that

"In Flander's field the poppies grow
Among the crosses—row on row."

Resolved, By the American Legion in convention assembled, that the movement to have the poppy adopted as the memorial flower be endorsed; and, be it further

Resolved, That the National Convention adopt the poppy as the official memorial flower of the American Legion.

Note—By action of the National Executive Committee the Poppy should be worn on "Memorial" or "Decoration Day," and not on Armistice Day.

This resolution, adopted at the National American Legion convention at Cleveland, is published to remind that Memorial Day will soon be here and that every American Legion post in the state should be preparing to observe it fittingly. American Legion men, on that day, will be expected to wear the poppy in memory of our buddies who made the supreme sacrifice overseas, many of whom will sleep there thru eternity while others have been returned to the homes they gave their lives for.

GASOLINE EXPLOSION BURNS HANDS

While engaged in soddering an empty gasoline tank, at the Belmond Welding company shop, Merold Galloway was severely burned last week Thursday about his hands and arms. He was using a torch, and altho the tank was empty there was still gas enough left in it to blow the tank to slivers. Merold says he "didn't know it was loaded," but never again for him. His burns are coming along in nice shape.

HARD TIMES DANCE GREAT ENTERTAINMENT

About fifty of the neighbor folks in the Glen Cannon neighborhood east of town held a hard times dance at the Cannon home last week, and according to reports had a grand and glorious time. The men dressed in overalls and the ladies in big kitchen aprons, and prizes were given for the best costume. Nina Cannon won first in the ladies prize, and Boyd Hake in the men's. After the dance a delicious supper was served by Mrs. Glen Cannon assisted by Nina Cannon. Out of town guests at the affair were Mr. and Mrs. John Whipple of Manly, and Miss Herwig of Grand Union.

SUGAR COMPANY CLOSING BEET CONTRACTS IN COUNTY

Representatives of the sugar company report very good results with closing contracts this year for the beet acreage. Members of the Wright county beet growers association, it is reported, have signed up in quite large numbers for this season. Those farmers who furnished beets for the company last year are said to have realized good returns from their acreage and many have signed up for acreage this year.

TOMSON FAMILY HOLDS FAMILY REUNION

The T. O. Tomson home was the scene of a very enjoyable family reunion on Sunday of this week, when the children were all present for a big time. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peterson, of Hampton, with their children, Mr. and Mrs. Ollie Tomson and family of near Kanawha, with their family, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Greenfield and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Hans Hanson. A very enjoyable time is reported.

The president and committee in charge of the Spinsters Convention, desire to thank all who aided them in making the play a success.

New School Board Now On The Job

A. L. Luick, H. F. Luick, W. R. Ramsay, E. F. Bailey, Herman Schultz, Cato Griesy, Board.

SCHOOL CLOSES ON FRIDAY

The new board of education was organized Monday evening and Herman Schultz was introduced to the mysteries of that august body.

During the next few weeks they will spend considerable time in selecting and electing teachers. Now is the time for the patrons of Belmond to express their approval or disapproval of the present administration. The board will be glad to hear from you now, before they act, rather than after elections have been made. Your approval or criticism will be confidential with the board.

School will close for the Easter vacation March 25, and begin Monday April 4. We hope that both teachers and pupils will return after vacation with renewed energy for nine weeks of hard work. The school will close Friday, June 3.

Remember and keep Wednesday night, April 6, open for a musical treat. We have secured the Iolan Club of Coe College to appear here under the direction of Professor Newcomb of the Music Dept. A high class program consisting of vocal, piano, cornet and violin solos and readings will be given.

Philip McBurney says we need not hesitate to recommend the club to Belmond people, as they give an excellent program.

Remember the date, April 6, and watch the paper for further information.

Much interest is being taken in base ball and track. We have formulated a base ball schedule which, if accepted, will give us five or six good games in Belmond. We also expect to have two or three dual track and field meets this spring with neighboring schools.

The grade pupils are working on an operette to be given some time the latter part of April. Further noice will be given later.

The Annual Staff feels that a large part of the work on the B. H. S. Annual is over. The photographs are all at the engravers and the copy is all at the printers. We are now in hopes that it will be ready by May 1.

The Sophomores held their second semester party at the home of Miss Sharon, class teacher, last Saturday night. The entertainment committee was very successful in their efforts for amusement. Dainty refreshments were served. Everyone present reported a very enjoyable evening.

Th Seniors entertained the Juniors last Saturday evening in the high school gymnasium. In honor of that good soul who rid Ireland of snakes, green was the prevalent color in the decorations, and in the delicious refreshments which were served. The games which were played also had an Irish flavor. A delightful time is reported by everybody who attended.

The following pupils of the eighth grade are eligible for promotion according to their present standings:

Esther Amblie, Loretto Barry, Della Bayliss, Reka Buschmann, Helen Elder, Gladys Gunderson, Ernie Gunderson, Maurine Hake, Veron Hanson, Thelma Higley, Cecelia Holtzbauer, Cyril Jenison, Claude Johnson, Le na Johnson, Paul Johnson, Samuel Leinbach, Emma Luick, Marian McNulty, Marshall Nourse, Donald Pech, Elma Stapley, Elmer Peterson.

Some not listed here still have a chance for promotion if they will apply themselves to their work more, thereby bringing up their average.

We hope to be able to print a longer list at the close of the next period.

James Kral, Ida Harms Esther Peterson, Marie Elizabeth Blake, Billie Rieke, Lynn Hake and Harry Steenblock of the second grade were awarded the gold buttons for their splendid work in Penmanship.

Pierce visited school Friday morning.

WILL GIVE HEALTH LECTURE UNDER THE RED CROSS

World's Famous Clown, Traveling In The Interests Of Red Cross, To Deliver Lecture Here.

BELMOND ONE OF THREE TOWNS

Will Be At Clarion, Goldfield And Belmond On Same Day—Formerly With Barnum & Bailey.

Belmond will have the pleasure and privilege of seeing and hearing Cho-Cho, the Health Clown, on May 5th, according to present plans.

Cho-Cho, the Health Clown, is famous the world over. He was for a number of years with the Barnum & Bailey circus, and was one of the best clowns ever in the business. But Cho-Cho left the circus life several years ago, and has been traveling the country over spreading the gospel of good health and sanitation among the children of the nation. He has appeared before many hundreds of thousands of American children, in thousands of public schools, spreading better health ideas.

He will appear before the children of Goldfield, Clarion and Belmond on May 5th., being here in the evening of that day as presently arranged. He comes under the auspices of the Junior Red Cross, his tour being arranged by the extension department of the Iowa State College at Ames.

Cho-Cho talks to the children mostly, appearing in the costume of a clown and in his own initable way gives the children insructions in the care of their teeth, the use of milk, advantages of eating fruit every day, of drinking plenty of water, proper clothing, outdoor playing, and many other subjects of a similar nature. His lectures are unique, and his costume and ways drive the health ideas home with the children better than could be done otherwise.

Particulars of the exact time and place will be given later, altho it is expected that Cho-Cho will appear at the school house.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Clipper: Nathan Aldrich, a young farmer of Wright county, living near Rowan, faces a suit filed by his wife, Lillian who petitions for a decree of divorce and alimony of more than $2,500.

The plaintiff alleges they were married at Austin, Minn., on February 19, 1919, and lived together as husband and wife until February 26, 1921. She alleges that during the month of February, 1921, the defendant forswore his marriage vows and committed adultry with one Verda Kersey, and further avows that her husband and the co-respondent named have departed for parts unknown.

She states that the defendant has personal property valued at $5,000 or more, and is asking for $500 temporary alimony, $200 for attorney's fees, and the further sum of $2,000 as permanant alimony, together with the household furniture and the restoration of her maiden name, Lillian Butterfield.

The defendant is a young man, 24 years old, and this is the second time his marriage bark has been wrecked, a divorce from his first wife occuring several years ago.

Late word from Rochester says Sheriff Fisher is doing very nicely since his operation.

Geo. L. Meacham, drainage engineer, now has an office in the court house, being located in the basement opposite the room occupied by county agent Edwards.

Marriage licenses for week ending March 15: George W. Pyle and Slyvia Iverson; Roscoe Norem and Mrs. Hannah Rasmussen; George Klinetoo and Katie Loraine; Gilbert Lokerse and Mrs. Ethel May Kraft. —Monitor.

FREE AIR!

Free Air had sort of floated off the past week. We were undecided as to how it was taking. In running a newspaper you have to suit so many varieties of people; some of them will take kindly to locals while they won't care anything for the correspondence or editorials; and vice versa.

(That vice versa stuff we got from Matt Barry; we don't know what it means, but we'll take his word for it anyway.

Then a fellow told us last week that he missed it. Must of been reading it at any rate.

another fellow said that judging from this stuff we might be capable of running a high school paper.

The question bothering us—and it isn't bothering us much either—is, was he slamming us or the high school?

It's a funny life; and the more we live the more we realize it.

Down at the firemen's ball the other night, so they say, there was a fellow who imitated two diffiferent animals. He was on the floor giving the "camel walk." Now the camel walk, so they say, is an improvement on the shimmy, with some variations added. It is also somewhat worse than the shimmy. Marshal Hal Nourse waltzes out and informs the camel walker to walk outside and do it in quick time. The fellow hesitates, and a couple other guys comes and backs him up.

Nourse calls on Nightwatchman Rierson, and they escort the fellows outside, where it's cool. Then one fellow up and starts running down the street, and Rierson pulls his gat and fires away—into the air.

They say that the fellow looked a great deal more like an antelope than he did a camel.

Some of the firemen got out the old hose Saturday and flushed off the accumulation of winter dirt and truck from the pavements. As street cleaners they performed a fine job, and we rise to inquire why it would not be a good idea to have the city dads allow the boys certain sum for keeping the streets cleaned off this summer?

They did it Saturday for nothing, but there's no use of riding a free horse to death. They probably won't want to do it all summer for nothing. And it certainly is worth something to keep the city looking clean.

Remember he remarks you heard about the way the streets looked this spring? Highly complimentary, were they not? They were.

Spring is coming. The signs all point to it. We've heard geese flying over; seen a robin; heard a meadowlark; the boys are playing marbles; base ball is being talked; and you can tell by the way you feel.

Next Sunday the absolute proof will be forthcoming—the Easter lids will be on display at all churches.

Have you ever heard the settlement of that question: Does a woman go to church on Easter to display her new lid, or to attend the services?

Neither have we.

POULTRY AND ORCHARD DEMONSTRATION GIVEN

An orchard and poultry demonstration was held last week Tuesday afternoon at the home of Geo. P. Hardwick. Belmond and Pleasant townships combined in the demonstration, and a very large crowd was in attendance. W. J. Kocken was the specialist who addressed the meeting on orchards, and J. R. Redditt the specialists on poultry. A very interesting and instructive meeting is reported by those present.

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE LOSE FIRST CHILD

Mr. and Mrs. Claude Benson mourn the loss of their first child, a son, who died at birth on last Saturday morning. Brief funeral services were held at the house on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Edge in charge, and the babe laid to rest in the Franklin Grove cemetery. The parents have the sympathy of the entire community in the loss of their first born.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

POULTRY-ORCHARD DEMONSTRATIONS

The poultry-orchard demonstrations which were conducted by W. J. Kocken, orchard specialist, and J. R. Redditt, poultry specialist, in four sectional meetings in Wright county proved to be very successful and the attendance which totalled about 300 for the four meetings, seems to indicate that the farmers were interested in this demonstration work. Both specialists seem to know their job and everyone who attended the meetings seemed to feel well repaid for the time spent in attending these meetings.

Judging from the attendance at these demonstrations it would seem that the farmers are beginning to realize more keenly the value of group meetings, also the necessity of such meeings since it is impracticable for the county agent to give individual service to the Farm Bureau members.

REDUCED CORN PRICES

With the corn prices where they are at present and with a surplus of the 1920 crop on hand the corn acreage for 1921 will be reduced this year with a result that the total production for the county will be materially affected.

It would seem that in the face of the present low prices for corn that the farmer should do more seeding this year in order to work the clover or alfalfa into the regular rotation. In fact, in this splendid opportunity for the farmer to work some legume into his rotation so as to restore fertility to the soil for the coming years. By pracicing a rotation of crops, which includes some leguminous crop such as clover or alfalfa, it should be possible for any farmer under average Wright county conditions to grow the same number of bushels of corn on a reduced number of acres and with less labor and this year in particular seems to be the logical time to make this change.

FARM BUREAU MEMBER SAYS FARMERS TO BLAME

That the most economical and efficient system of marketing grain the world has ever seen is in sight in the United States, is the assertion of A. L. Middleton, vice chairman of the committee of seventeen, in an address last Wednesday night at the Iowa State College before the convention of county agents and extension workers.

"The farmers are to blame for the present system of marketing because as a body of men representing a great industry they have failed to provide a better one," said Mr. Middleton. "The present marketing machinery has been built to protect the interests of the grain dealer.

"Grain actually sold on the Chicago market amounts to only twenty-eight hundreths of one per cent of the total volume of business. The remainder is absolutely speculative. The ratio of cash to speculative transactions is one to fifty-one.

Mr. Middleton declared that the committee in investigations since its appointment, last November, has found absolute evidence that the grain interests can thrown the price of grain up or down almost at will.

"Farmers elevators are a success because they were brought into existence from necessity,' said Mr. Middleton. If a system could be worked out whereby products could be billed direct from the local warehouse to the points where they are consumed, the cost of handling at the terminal elevators would be materially reduced or entirely eliminated. A plan such as this would entail the erection of local warehouses. Warehouse certificates could then be issued to the producer upon which he would be able to borrow money.

While Mr. Middleton was silent as to the exact plan that would be recommended by the committee of seventeen, he said that it would proabably be similar to the one outlined above.

The Iowa Farm Bureau Federation has on hand at the beginning of the year of 1921, according to E. H. Cunnigham, secretary of the federation, a balance of $235,188.78. About $100,000 of this was on deposit; $50,-000 in cash; more than $63,000 in Liberty bonds, and about $12,000 in real estate.

The Federation's receipts, during the year 1920 totalled $392,852.64. More than $100,000 of this was obtained in county dues and more than $184,000 by the donations of members.

The federation spent a large amount of money during 1920. Of this sum, $8,245.24 was paid in salaries. The largest single item of expense for the federation during the year was that of organization, for which $63,055.69 was spent, Mr. Cunningham declares.

The Iowa Farm Bureau federation had already, at the beginning of this year, put up a considerable sum of money as advance expenditure for its 1921 annual covention, which will prob ably be held next December.

RINGWORMS ON CALVES CONTAGIOUS TO PEOPLE

The common sores that occur around the eyes of calves during late winter are caused by small parasites in the skin and are commonly called ringworms. The disease is characterized by scabs and loss of hair and is best treated by application of tincture of iodine.

A very small parasite gets into the canals of the skin and starts an inflamation which gradually spreads in more or less defined lines. The disease spreads from one animal to another, frequently affecting older animals, but is more prevalent in calves.

The most dangerous thing in connection with this disease is that it is contagious to people. Many people become infected on their hands or faces by handling and treating the affected animals.

A simple treatment consists of softening the spots with vaseline and later applying tincture of iodine once a day for three or four days.

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court of Wright County, Iowa.

October Term, A. D. 1921.

Lillian H. A. Aldrich, Plaintiff,
vs
Nathan Aldrich,
Defendant.

To Nathan Aldrich, Defendant:

You are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiff in the above entitled cause, is now on file in the District Court, of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright County, claiming and asking that the bonds of matrimony, now existing between you and the plaintiff aforesaid, be dissolved, and that she be granted a decree of divorce, on the grounds of adultry committed by you; also asking for the allowance of temporary alimony in the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, and permanent alimony in the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, also asking for the allowance of attorney fees for the compensation of her attorney; and that a writ of attachment has been issued herein by order of the Court, and that your personal property by virtue of the same has been attached and levied upon, to secure the payment of said sums mentioned as aforesaid.

For further particulars see petition now on file.

And that unless you appear thereto and defend before noon of the second day of the next term, being the October Term of said Court, which will commence at Clarion, Iowa, on the third day of October, A. D. 1921, default will be entered against you, and upon final hearing, the Court will render judgement against you, in favor of the plaintiff aforsesaid, for the said alimony; and costs of this action, as aforesaid, and that an execution will issue for the sale of so much of your property as may be necessary to satisfy said judgement, interest and costs, and for such other and further relief as to the Court shall seem equitable.

W. E. BULLARD,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

ROWAN M. E. CHURCH NOTES

Special music, lovely floral decorations, and the spirit of Easter optimism is the order of the day next Sabbath in the Methodist Episcopal church. A special feature of the morning service will be the baptism of some of our children and an Easter message of joy and hope. The pastor hopes that every home in town and country will be represented at the church services of this glorious Festival. The usual evening order of service will give place to a musical program prepared by the choir and Sunday school. This promises to be one of the best and most enjoyable evenings we have had, the following items to be given :

Voluntary ---- Miss Esther Fowler
Processional -- "O Saviour King", choir
Prayer and Reading ------ Pastor
Pianoforte Duet ------------------
Mrs. Murtel Myers, Miss E. Fowler
Chorus—"Supposing Him to be the Gardener—"Miss Ethel Gordon
Chorus—"In A Beautiful Song—Sunday school choir
Solo—"Teach Me to Pray"—Mrs. A. O. Pelley
Reading—"The Garden"—Miss Lillian Azeltine

Exercise—"Cross and Crown"—Garnet Stumph and Loraine Liming
Solo—"The Perfect Day"—Rev. H. Tomkinson
Reading—"My Neighbor"—Mrs. Roy Ryder
Anthem—"Rise, Glorious Conquerer, Rise"—Choir
Offering and Announcements
Chorus—"Risen Indeed"—Choir.
Exercise—"Abide With Me—Sunday School Class
Benediction

Both the Congregational and Methodist churches were packed to their utmost seating capaciy last Sunday, when the Sunday schools put on the following program of addresses:

"The Rights of the Child"—Rev. H. Tomkinson, Rowan.
"Sunday School Standards"—Miss L. Umbreit, Clarion.
"The Child We Teach"—Rev. Ada Anderson, Rowan.
"The Book We Teach"—Rev. J. F. Jamieson, Clarion.

The morning service was conducted by Rev. Ada Anderson in the Congregational church, and the evening by Mr. Edgar Bingham in the M. E. church. Our local Sunday school work received a great impetus from the messages.

The Rev. Harold Tomkinson has been away this week conducting special services in Thornton.

ROWAN CONG. CHURCH NOTES

Easter services at the Congregational church. Morning worship at 11 a. m. Special Easter music by choir. Sermon, "Risen With Christ," by Rev. Ada Anderson.

Members will be welcomed into the church at this service. Sunday school at noon.

The following special program will be given in the evening at 7:30:

Hymn—Congregation.

Piano Duet—"When the Lights are Low"—Ruth and Stella Emerson.
The Birthday of Hope—Rev. Ada S. Anderson.
Special—"Springtime Skies"—Choir.
The Sacred Pantomime—Evelyn Whitten, Fern Streveler, Bernice Williams.

Plan to be present at all services.

The Rowan Drug store has changed hands, the new proprietors being Fred Hackley and Frank Snyder.

The members of the W. C. T. U. will entertain their husbands at the R. H. Keith home on Friday evening, March 25.

Ed. Azeltine visited his sister, Mrs. S. D. Bingham, at the Presbyterian hospital in Chicago this week. He was also a business caller there.

Mrs. D. K. Stout and Miss Wilda Whitten were Clarion callers Monday.

Edgar Mantle and Reuben Cupp were Dows callers Monday.

Donald and Dale Farran were Belmond business callers Monday.

Mrs. Fred Smith, Miss Lula Strait and Mrs. Bonnett, of Clarion, were Rowan callers Saturday.

The M. E. Ladies Aid society held their annual Easter supper Friday, in the church basement.

Mr. L. D. Yeaman and Christopher McCallum were Garner business callers several days last week.

Friday evening, March 18, the Farm Bureau of Blaine township gave a play entitled "The Prarie Rose," in the high school auditorium. A good crowd was present and enjoyed it very much. The Thompson orchestra rendered music between acts.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to "Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

CHAPTER IV.—The girl sets out across the Divide, in the darkness, to bring a physician. She has a sense that she is being stalked by some animal, and becomes uneasy. Dan, who had been shooting, arrives home and finds Lennox. Both Lennox and Dan fear for "Snowbird's" safety, and Dan at once sets out to overtake her. The animal stalking the girl is the cougar which had finished Hildreth, now become a hunter of man. Failing arrives only just in time to save the girl's life, and in that manner pays part of the debt he owes her. As evidence of Dan's returning strength he strangles the animal, which, though wounded by a revolver shot from "Snowbird's" weapon, was a most formidable enemy.

BOOK THREE—THE PAYMENT.

CHAPTER I.—Hildreth's disappearance is unaccounted for until Dan finds his mutilated body and near it the evidence which will send Cranston to the gallows and break up the outlaw gang. A record cold winter sets in. Cranston, suspecting that Hildreth's evidence is in existence, visits the Lennox home in the absence of Dan and "Snowbird," to search for it. He fails to find it, and in his rage and disappointment sets fire to the house, Lennox being powerless to stop him. The almost helpless man drags himself outside.

"Not one thing," the girl told him. "You know Cranston and his crowd robbed the place last winter. And the telephone lines were disconnected when the rangers left."

"Then the only way is for me to stay here. You can take the pistol, and you'll have a fair chance of getting through. I'll grub wood for our camp meanwhile, and you can bring help."

"And if the wolves come, or if help didn't come in time," Lennox whispered, passion-drawn for the first time, "who would pay what we owe to Cranston?"

"But her life counts—first of all."

"I know it does—but mine doesn't count at all. Believe me, you two, I'm speaking from my own desires when I say I don't want to make the fight. Snowbird would never make it through alone. There are the wolves, and maybe Cranston too—the worst wolf of all. A woman can't mush across those ridges four days without food, without some one who loves her and forces her on! Neither can she stay here with me and try to make green branches burn in a fire. She's got three little pistol balls—and we'd all die for a whim. Oh, please, please—"

But Dan leaped for his hand with glowing eyes. "Listen, man!" he cried. "I know another way yet. I know more than one way; but one, if we've got the strength, is almost sure. There is an ax in the kitchen, and the blade will still be good."

"Likely dulled with the fire—"

"I'll cut a limb with my jackknife for the handle. There will be nails in the ashes, plenty of them. We'll make a rude sledge, and we'll get you out too."

Lennox seemed to be studying his wasted hands. "It's a chance, but it isn't worth it," he said at last. "You'll have fight enough without tugging at a heavy sled. It will take all night to build it, and it would cut down your chances of getting out by pretty near half. Remember the ridges, Dan—"

"But we'll climb every ridge—besides, its a slow, down grade most of the way. Snowbird—tell him he must do it."

Snowbird told him, overpowering him with her enthusiasm. And Dan shook his shoulders with rough hands. "You're hurting, boy!" Lennox warned. "I'm a bag of broken bones."

"I'll tote you down there if I have to tie you in," Dan Failing replied. "Before, I've bowed to your will; but this time you have to bow to mine. I'm not going to let you stay here and die, no matter if you beg on your knees! It's the test—and I'm going to bring you through."

He meant what he said. If mortal strength and sinew could survive such a test, he would succeed. There was nothing in these words to suggest the physical weakling that both of them had known a few months before. The eyes were earnest, the dark face intent, the determined voice did not waver at all.

"Dan Failing speaks!" Lennox replied with glowing eyes. He was recalling another Dan Failing of the dead years, a boyhood hero, and his remembered voice had never been more determined, more masterful than this he had just heard.

"And Cranston didn't get his purpose, after all." To prove his words, Dan thrust his hand into his inner coat pocket. He drew forth a little, flat package, half as thick as a pack of cards. He held it up for them to see. "The thing Bert Cranston burned the house down to destroy," he explained. "I'm learning to know this mountain breed, Lennox. I kept it in my pocket where I could fight for it, at any minute."

"The Thing Bert Cranston Burned the House Down to Destroy."

Cranston had been mistaken, after all, in thinking that in fear of himself Dan would be afraid to keep the packet on his person, and would cravenly conceal it in the house. He would have been even more surprised to know that Dan had lived in constant hope of meeting Cranston on the ridges, showing him what it contained, and fighting him for it, hands to hands. And even yet, perhaps the day would come when Cranston would know at last that Snowbird's words, after the fight of long ago, were true.

The twilight was falling over the snow, so Snowbird and Dan turned to the toil of building a sled.

The snow was steel-grey in the moonlight when the little party made their start down the long trail. Their preparations, simple and crude as they were, had taken hours of ceaseless labor on the part of the three. The ax, its edge dulled by the flame and its handle burned away, had been cooled in the snow, and with one sound arm, Lennox had driven the hot nails that Snowbird gathered from the ashes of one of the outbuildings. The embers of the house itself still glowed red in the darkness.

Dan had cut the green limbs of the trees and planed them with his ax. The sled had been completed, handles attached for pushing it, and a piece of fence wire fastened with nails as a rope to pull it. The warm mackinaws of both of them as well as the one blanket that Lennox had saved from the fire were wrapped about the old frontiersman's wasted body—Dan and Snowbird hoping to keep warm by the exercise of propelling the sled. Except for the dull ax and the half-empty pistol, their only equipment was a single charred pot for melting snow that Dan had recovered from the ashes of the kitchen.

The three had worked almost in silence. Words didn't help now. They wasted no sorely needed breath. But they did have one minute to talk when they got to the top of the little ridge that had overlooked the house.

"We'll travel mostly at night," Dan told them. "We can see in the snow, and by taking our rest in the daytime, when the sun is bright and warm, we can save our strength. We won't have to keep such big fires then—and at night our exertion will keep us as warm as we can hope for. Getting up all night to cut green wood with this dull ax in the snow would break us to pieces very soon, for remember that we haven't any food. I know how to build a fire even in the snow—especially if I can find the dead, dry heart of a rotten log—but it isn't any fun to keep it going with green wood. We don't want to have to spend any more of our strength stripping off wet bark and hacking at saplings than we can help; and that means we'd better do our resting in the heat of the day. After all, it's a fight against starvation more than anything else."

"Just think," the girl told them, reproaching herself, "if I had shot straight at that wolf today, we could have gone back and got his body. It might have carried us through."

Neither of the others as much as looked surprised at these amazing regrets over the lost, unsavory flesh of a wolf. They were up against realities, and they didn't mince words. Dan smiled at her gently, and his great shoulder leaned against the traces.

They moved through a dead world. The ever-present manifestations of wild life that had been such a delight to Dan in the summer and fall were quite lacking now. The snow was trackless. Once they thought they saw a snowshoe rabbit, a strange shadow on the snow, but he was too far away for Snowbird to risk a pistol shot. The pound or two of flesh would be sorely needed before the journey was over, but the pistol cartridges might be needed still more. she didn't let her mind rest on certain possibilities wherein they might be needed. Such thoughts stole the courage from the spirit, and courage was essential beyond all things else to bring them through.

As the dawn came out, they all stood still and listened to the wolf pack, singing on the ridge somewhere behind them.

It was a large pack. They couldn't make out individual voices—neither the more shrill cry of the females, the yapping of the cubs, or the low, clear G-below-middle-C note of the males.

"If they should cross our tracks—" Lennox suggested.

"No use worrying about that now—not until we come to it," Dan told him.

The morning broke, the sun rose bright in a clear sky. But still they trudged on. In spite of the fact that the sled was heavy and broke through the snow crust as they tugged at it, they had made good time since their departure. But now every step was a pronounced effort. It was the dreadful beginning of fatigue that only food and warmth and rest could rectify.

"We'll rest now," Dan told them at ten o'clock. "The sun is warm enough so that we won't need much of a fire. And we'll try to get five hours' sleep."

"Too long, if we're going to make it out," Lennox objected.

"That leaves a workday of nineteen hours," Dan persisted. "Not any too little. Five hours it will be."

He found where the snow had drifted against a great, dead log, leaving the white covering only a foot in depth on the lee side. He began to scrape the snow away, then hacked at the log with his ax until he had procured a piece of comparatively dry wood from its center. They all stood breathless while he lighted the little pile of kindling and heaped it with green wood—the only wood procurable. But it didn't burn freely. It smoked fitfully, threatening to die out, and emitting very little heat.

But they didn't particularly care. The sun was warm above, as always in the mountain winters of southern Oregon. Snowbird and Dan cleared spaces beside the fire and slept. Lennox, who had rested on the journey, lay on his sled and with his uninjured arm tried to hack enough wood from the saplings that Dan had cut to keep the fire burning.

At three they got up, still tired and aching in their bones from exposure. Twenty-four hours had passed since they had tasted food, and their unreplenished systems complained. There is no better engine in the wide world than the human body. It will stand more neglect and abuse than the finest steel motors ever made by the hands of craftsmen. A man may fast many days if he lies quietly in one place and keeps warm. But fasting is a deadly proposition while pulling sledges over the snow.

Dan was less hopeful now. His face told what his words did not. The lines cleft deeper about his lips and eyes; and Snowbird's heart ached when he tried to encourage her with a smile. It was a wan, strange smile that couldn't quite hide the first sickness of despair.

The shadows quickly lengthened—simply leaping over the snow from the fast-falling sun. The twilight deepened, the snow turned gray, and then, in a vague way, the journey began to partake of a quality of unreality. It was not that the cold and the snow and their hunger were not entirely real, or that the wilderness was no longer naked to their eyes. It was just that their whole effort seemed like some dreadful, unburdened journey in a dream—a stumbling advance under difficulties too many and real to be true.

The first sign was the far-off cry of the wolf pack. It was very faint, simply a stir in the eardrums, yet it was entirely clear. That clear, cold mountain air was a perfect telephone system, conveying a message distinctly, no matter how faintly. There were no tall buildings or cities to disturb the ether waves. And all three of them knew at the same instant it was not exactly the cry they had heard before.

They couldn't have told just why, even if they had wished to talk about it. In some dim way, it had lost the strange quality of despair it had held before. It was as if the pack were running with renewed life, that each wolf was calling to another with a dreadful sort of exultation. It was an excited cry, too—not the long, sad song they had learned to listen for. It sounded immediately behind them.

They couldn't help but listen. No human ears could have shut out the sound. But none of them pretended that they had heard. And this was the worst sign of all. Each one of the three was hoping against hope in his very heart; and at the same time, hoping that the others did not understand.

For a long time, as the darkness deepened about them, the forests were still. Perhaps, Dan thought, he had been mistaken after all. His shoulders straightened. Then the chorus blared again.

The man looked back at the girl, smiling into her eyes. Lennox lay as if asleep, the lines of his dark face curiously pronounced. And the girl, because she was of the mountains, body and soul, answered Dan's smile. Then they knew that all of them knew the truth. Not even an inexperienced ear could have any delusions about the pack song now. It was that oldest of wilderness songs, the hunting-cry—that frenzied song of blood-lust that the wolf pack utters when it is running on the trail of game. It had found the track of living flesh at last.

"There's no use stopping, or trying to climb a tree," Dan told them simply. "In the first place, Lennox can't do it. In the second, we've got to take a chance—for cold and hunger can get up a tree where the wolf pack can't." He spoke wholly without emotion. Once more he tightened the traces of the sled.

"I've heard that sometimes the pack will chase a man for days without attacking," Lennox told them. "It all depends on how long they've gone without food. Keep on and try to forget 'em. Maybe we can keep 'em bluffed."

"Maybe We Can Keep Them Bluffed."

But as the hours passed, it became increasingly difficult to forget the wolf pack. It was only a matter of turning the head and peering for an instant into the shadows to catch a glimpse of one of the creatures. Their usual fear of men, always their first emotion, had given way wholly to a hunting cunning; an effort to procure their game without too great risk of their own lives. In the desperation of their hunger they could not remember such things as the fear of men. They spread out farther, and at last Dan looked up to find one of the gray beasts waiting, like a shadow himself, in the shadow of a tree not one hundred feet from the sled. Snowbird whipped out her pistol.

"Don't dare!" Dan's voice cracked out to her. He didn't speak loudly; yet the words came so sharp and commanding, so like pistol fire itself, that they penetrated into her consciousness and choked back the nervous reflexes that in an instant might have lost them one of their three precious shells. She caught herself with a sob. Dan shouted at the wolf, and it melted into the shadows.

"You won't do it again, Snowbird?" he asked her very humbly. But his meaning was clear. He was not as skilled with a pistol as she; but if her nerves were breaking, the gun must be taken from her hands. The three shells must be saved to the moment of utmost need.

"No," she told him, looking straight into his eyes. "I won't do it again."

He believed her. He knew that she spoke the truth. He met her eyes with a half smile. Then, wholly without warning, Fate played its last trump.

Again the wilderness reminded them of its might, and their brave spirits were almost broken by the utter remorselessness of the blow. The girl went on her face with a crack of wood. Her snow shoe had been cracked by her fall of the day before, when running to the fire, and whether she struck some other obstruction in the snow, or whether the cracked wood had simply given way under her weight, mattered not even enough for them to investigate. As in all great disasters, only the result remained. The result in this case was that her snowshoe, without which she could not walk at all in the snow, was irreparably broken.

"Fate has stacked the cards against us," Lennox told them, after the first moment's horror from the broken snowshoe.

But no one answered him. The girl, white-faced, kept her wide eyes on Dan. He seemed to be peering into the shadows beside the trail, as if he were watching for the gray forms that now and then glided from tree to tree. In reality, he was not looking for wolves. He was gazing down into his own soul, measuring his own spirit for the trial that lay before him.

The girl, unable to step with the broken snowshoe, rested her weight on one foot and hobbled like a bird with broken wings across to him. No sight of all this terrible journey had been more dreadful in her father's eyes than this. It seemed to split open the strong heart of the man. She touched her hand to his arm.

"I'm sorry, Dan," she told him. "You tried so hard—"

Just one little sound broke from his throat—a strange, deep gasp that could not be suppressed. Then he caught her hand in his and kissed it—again and again. "Do you think I care about that?" he asked her. "I only wish I could have done more—and what I have done doesn't count. Just as in my fight with Cranston, nothing counts because I didn't win. It's just fate, Snowbird. It's no one's fault, but maybe, in this world, nothing is ever anyone's fault." For in the twilight of those winter woods, in the shadow of death itself, perhaps he was catching glimmerings of eternal truths that are hidden from all but the most far-seeing eyes.

"And this is the end?" she asked him. She spoke very bravely.

"No!" His hand tightened on hers. "No, so long as an ounce of strength remains. To fight—never to give up—may God give me spirit for it till I die."

And this was no idle prayer. His eyes raised to the starry sky as he spoke.

"But, son," Lennox asked him rather quietly, "what can you do? The wolves aren't going to wait a great deal longer, and we can't go on."

"There's one thing more—one more trial to make," Dan answered. "I thought about it at first, but it was too long a chance to try if there was any other way. And I suppose you thought of it too."

"Overtaking Cranston?"

"Of course. And it sounds like a crazy dream. But listen, both of you. If we have got to die, up here in the snow—and it looks like we had—what is the thing you want done worst before we go?"

Lennox's hands clasped, and he leaned forward on the sled. "Pay Cranston!" he said.

"Yes!" Dan's voice rang. "Cranston's never going to be paid unless we do it. There will be no signs of incendiarism at the house, and no proofs. They'll find our bodies in the snow, and we'll just be a mystery, with no one made to pay. The evidence in my pocket will be taken by Cranston, some time this winter. If I don't make him pay, he never will pay. And that's one reason why I'm going to try to carry out this plan I've got.

"The second reason is that it's the one hope we have left. I take it that none of us are deceived on that point. And no man can die tamely—if he is a man—while there's a chance. I mean a young man, like me—not one who is old and tired. It sounds perfectly silly to talk about finding Cranston's winter quarters, and then, with my bare hands, conquering him, taking his food and his blankets and his snowshoes and his rifle, to fight away these wolves, and bringing 'em back here."

"You wouldn't be barehanded," the girl reminded him. "You could have the pistol."

He didn't even seem to hear her. "I've been thinking about it. It's a long, long chance—much worse than the chance we had of getting out by straight walking. I think we could have made it, if the wolves had kept off and the snowshoe hadn't broken. It would have nearly killed us, but I believe we could have got out. That's why I didn't try this other way first. A man with his bare hands hasn't much of a chance against another with a rifle, and I don't want you to be too hopeful. And of course, the hardest problem is finding his camp.

"But I do feel sure of one thing: that he is back to his old trapping line on the North Fork—somewhere south of here—and his camp is somewhere on the river. I think he would have gone there so that he could cut off any attempt I might make to get through with those letters. My plan is to start back at an angle that will carry me between the North Fork and our old house. Somewhere in there I'll find his tracks, the tracks he made when he first came over to burn up the house. I suppose he was careful to mix 'em up after once he arrived here, but the first part of the way he likely walked straight toward the house from his camp. Somewhere, if I go that way, I'll cross his trail—within 10 miles at least. Then I'll backtrack him to his camp."

"Keep the Fire Burning."

"And never come back!" the girl cried.

"Maybe not. But at least everything that can be done will be done. Nothing will be left. No regrets. We will have made the last trial. I'm not going to waste any time, Snowbird. The sooner we get your fire built the better."

"Father and I are to stay here—?"

"What else can you do?" He went back to his traces and drew the sled 100 yards farther. He didn't seem to see the gaunt wolf that backed off into the shadows as he approached. He refused to notice that the pack seemed to be steadily growing bolder. Human hunters usually had guns that could blast and destroy from a distance; but even an animal intelligence could perceive that these three seemed to be without this means of inflicting death.

A wolf is ever so much more intelligent than a crow—yet a crow shows little fear of an unarmed man and is wholly unapproachable by a boy with a gun. The ugly truth was simply that in their increasing madness and excitement and hunger, they were becoming less and less fearful of these three strange humans with the sled.

It was not a good place for a camp. They worked a long time before they cleared a little patch of ground of its snow mantle. Dan cut a number of saplings—laboriously with his ax—and built a fire with the comparatively dry core of a dead tree. True, it was feeble and flickering, but as good as could be hoped for, considering the difficulties under which he worked.

The dead logs under the snow were soaked with water from the rains and thaws. The green wood that he cut smoked without blazing.

"No more time to be lost," Dan told Snowbird. "It lies in your hands to keep the fire burning. And don't leave the circle of the fire light without that pistol in your hand."

"You don't mean," she asked, unbelieving, "that you are going to go out there to fight Cranston—unarmed?"

"Of course, Snowbird. You must keep the pistol."

"But it means death; that's all it means. What chance would you have against a man with a rifle? And as soon as you get away from this fire, the wolves will tear you to pieces."

"And what would you and your father do, if I took it? You can't get him into a tree. You can't build a big enough fire to frighten them. Please don't even talk about this matter, Snowbird. My mind's made up. I think the pack will stay here. They usually—God knows how—know who is helpless and who isn't. Maybe with the gun, you will be able to save your lives."

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The Ladies Missionary society will hold their regular monthly meeting in the parlors of the church on Thursday afternoon at 2:30. The subject for discussion is our work in China.

Next Sunday is Easter and we all want to start the day right by being on hand for Sunday school at 10:00 o'clock. At the 11:00 o'clock service the Lord's Supper will be commemorated, members received and baptisms administered. Parents desiring to have their children baptized at this service will please speak to the pastor prior to this time.

The evening service will be the crowning service of the day. We are sure that it will be a fitting close of the day of rededication and consecration. The double quartette, with Miss Ely as accompanist, will render the cantata upon which they have been working so earnestly the past weeks. We hope and expect to see the house filled for this service. It will be one that will long be remembered by all who attend. Be sure to be present and receive the inspiration and help which it will give.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preacing services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Epworth League devotional meeting at 6:30 p. m. with Dorothy Purcell as leader.

Opportunity will be given next Sunday morning for those who desire to unite with the church, either by transfer of membership or upon profession of faith. Any desiring the rite of baptism will please notify the pastor before Sunday. Next Sunday is Easter Sunday. The attendance at the services last Sunday was very gratifying. However, there ought to be a still larger attendance next Sunday. Special music and appropriate sermons at both services next Sunday. A cordial welcome awaits you to worship with us.

M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL

We are very pleased indeed to report the splendid increases we are enjoying in attendance every Sunday. 167 were out last Sunday with an offering of $6.20 while a year ago we had 130 with a collection of $5.24. Sunday is Easter, let all those who have been coming be out, bringing a friend or two with them. We have passed the mark we aimed at, it being 150. Now it is our desire to try and have 175 out in the near future. If you have no Sunday school home of your own, you will find a cordial welcome in any of the classes. "Go to Sunday School.

The incomparable Nazimova appears at her best in this picture. And it is some picture, too, one you will be sorry you missed if you fail to see it.

The name Nazimova is one that is heralded from end to end of the civilized globe. So magnetic is it that the mere announcement of Nazimova's appearance at a theatre is sufficient to bring out record crowds. She has never done anything inartistic or commonplace. She has never registered a failure. That is one of the reasons why her vogue exceeds the vogue of any other living actress, and one good reason why you want to see this picture. LOCAL MAN HAS NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH

$50,000 Suit Features April Term of Court

Sugar Company Is Sued By Arthur Sanford For Breach Of Contract, Sanford Admitting He Too Failed.

MANY CASES UP FOR TRIAL

Monitor: O'Ressa M. Holly of Clarion will ask for a divorce from her husband Leo Holly, at the April term of court. Desertion is alleged.

Clerk Goslin issued a couple marriage licenses last week: Roy Hossman and Minnie Dorothy Howe, Alfred Skogerboe and Carrie Askvig.

Sheriff Fisher suffered a slight relapse last week and was compelled to return to his bed. Word from Rochester stated that he was on the mend again.

The board of supervisors met last week and established the McDougald drainage district in Norway township. Only one objection was filed and that quickly adjusted.

Cruel and inhuman treatment is alleged in the petition for divorce filed by Mrs. Wm. Dexter, who asks for the annullment of her marriage contract with Wm. Dexter of Lincoln township.

Two deserters from Fort Des Moines surrendered Monday to Deputy Lang and will be taken back to the fort. They gave their names as Private Robert E. Hunt and Pvt. Freeman Martell, members of Troop E, 14th Cavalry. The latter carried a Colt's 45 automatic pistol. Both were young men who had evidently tired of a soldier's life.

A $50,000 damage suit filed by Arthur Sanford, of Mason City, against the Iowa Valley Sugar Co., of Belmond, for alleged wrongful cancellation of a contract which plaintiff claims to have made with the sugar company for the sale of stock in the concern, features the filings in district court this week.

Sanford, in his petition, states that on January 29, 1921, he entered into a written agreement with the sugar company whereby he was employed to sell four thousand shares of preferred stock and two thousand shares of common stock in the corporation, his commission to be at the rate of 12 1-2 per cent of the total of the sales. He was to begin work February 1st and sell the stock within 90 days. He states the agreement could have been terminated only in th event that he failed to report $50,000 in sales within thirty days after signing the contract. He admits he failed to report the stock sales of $50,000 up to March 2, 1921, but that defendant lost its right to terminate the contract by advising the plaintiff, thru its board of directors, that it was its desire that he get more salesmen and increase his sales force. Plaintiff alleges he did this by going to Des Moines, where he employed ten additional salesmen, advancing each of them $50. On March 7 he brought his sales force to Belmond and went thru the plant, but about that time the corporation cancelled the contract.

He alleges he spent a large sum of money for advertising, and as a result of the breach of contract he is damaged in the sum of $50,000.

FORMER BELMOND MAN KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Alfred Englet Killed By Car According To Telegram—Details Of Accident Unknown—Funeral Here Thursday.

D. L. Cuppett received a telegram last week Thursday, that Alfred Englet, a former citizen of this place and well known here, was killed in an automobile accident and the body was being brought here for burial. It is not know in what manner he came to his death, the telegram not stating. The body will arrive today, and funeral services will be held at the Methodist church, Rev. Edge in charge, at 2:00 o'clock Thursday afternoon. An obituary will be printed next week.

WELL KNOWN OLD SETTLER DIES AT HOME IN GARNER

Mrs. A. Avery, Well Known In Belmond, Dies In Garner, Thursday, At The Age Of Ninety Years.

Mrs. A. Avery of Garner, the first white woman to settle in Hancock county and very well known by many Belmond people, died at her home in Garner last Thursday at the age of ninety years. Death was due to pneumonia.

The Hancock County Recorder had the following item regarding her demise:

This morning at 6:40, just at the dawning of a new day, the soul of Grandma Avery quietly and peacefully glided into Eternity. Without a struggle, she simply passed from her night's slumber into that long sleep from which there is no awakening.

Up until Saturday of last week, Mrs. Avery was in her usual good health. She was taken with a severe cold, pneumonia developed, and with her advanced age, it was impossible for her frail body to withstand the ravages of the disease. Altho she did not appear to be suffering any great pain, yet she was gradually weakening from the strain and those who were with her knew that the end was near.

Mrs. Avery was ninety years old on her last birthday, to our knowledge the oldest woman or person in Hancock county and perhaps no other person had a larger acquaintance over the county and enjoyed the friendship of a greater number of people than did she. A deep gloom has been cast over the entire community by the news of her death, as she was beloved by all who knew her.

FORMER BELMOND GIRL TO BE MARRIED IN MAY

Miss Jeanette Wolcott, Daughter Of Mr. and Mrs. Lon Wolcott, To Become Bride of James R. Griffen.

The following item from the Des Moines Register of Tuesday, this week, announces the coming marriage of a former Belmond girl, Miss Jeanet Wolcott, daughter of Lon Wolcott and granddaughter of N. M. Wolcott of this place. Miss Wolcott was born in Belmond and attended the local schools. The article reads:

A May wedding just announced is that of Miss Jeannet Wolcott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Wolcott of Fort Dodge, and Mr. James R. Griffen, son of Mrs. Mildred Griffen and the late James A. Griffen of Atlantic, Iowa.

Miss Wolcott is a graduate of the Fort Dodge high school and for three years has been office secretary to the superintendent of Fort Dodge schools.

Mr. Griffen was graduated from the Atlantic high school, afterwards attending the state university of Iowa. He is at present associated with the McQuilkin Furniture company at Fort Dodge and is a member of the Fort Dodge Rotary Club.

POPPY TAG DAY HERE THIS WEEK SATURDAY

Community Club Will Tag You On Saturday, Any Sum, For The Benefit Of French Children.

On this week Saturday, April 2, you will probably be approached by a pretty girl, carrying an armful of poppies, and a handful of tags, with the request that you buy a tag, for the benefit of the children in devestated France. If you do, then she will pin a poppy on your coat lapel, and that alone will be worth the price.

That day, under the auspices of the Community Club, will be tag day in Belmond. You are asked to give any sum you like, from a nickel to a dollar, and the proceeds of the drive will go towards helping the children in devestated France. In case of bad weather, the girls will visit the homes. These tag days have been carried thru in numerous places and always with good success. The children especially are invited to take a tag, for their little sums will be used in the benefit of other children.

Get your two-bits handy, and when you see the girls coming Saturday, come across. "Even as ye have done it unto the least of these—"

Efforts Being Made To Form Local Base Ball League

Efforts Now Under Way To Form A League Of Six Teams, To Play This Season On Schedule.

TEN GAMES PLAYED AT HOME

Negoiations are now going on looking toward the forming of a league of six neighboring towns, to play a regular schedule of base ball games this summer.

Five of the neighboring towns have already signified their willingness to join in such a league, namely, Garner, Kanawha, Klemme, Thornton, and Belmond. Negoiations are now going on with one other town to make the sixth team. As soon as this town acts favorably, a meeting will be called, composed of two or more representatives from each town, to lay out the season's schedule, make the necessary rules, etc. As at present planned, there will be 20 games ten of which will be played on the home diamond. No subscriptions will be taken to start the team, but season tickets will be sold. All gate receipts will remain at home and be divided among the home boys. It is planned to start the season about the 15th of May. All teams in the league are to be composed absolutely of home players, no team to hire an outsider.

Belmond has plenty of first class base ball material and should put up a winning team. With the support of the community the town r it, and, perhaps, in the fall, the "pennant." It is planned to hold a series at the end of the season, to determine which of the four leading teams shall be the league champion.

CLARION PLANNING ON FAST BASE BALL TEAM

Last week a Mr. A. Miller from Fort Dodge was in Clarion and, with the assistance of a local man, perfected plans for a high class base ball team in the county seat town this summer. Mr. Miller is said to be a professional player himself, and it is understood will manage and play with the team. Clarion has an unusual scheme in the organizing of their team; it is planned to hire most of the team from out of town, altho some local men will be used. An arrangement was made with Miller whereby he manages the team for a flat sum per month paying the team out of the gate receipts. He has already began hiring players and arranging schedules.

ALLEGED CAR THIEVES MAY BE BROUGHT BACK FOR TRIAL

Otto Schreck And Clarence Goodenough, In Jail In South Dakota, May Be Tried In Wright County.

A recent item in the Iowa Falls Sentinel reads to the effect that Otto Schreck and Clarence Goodenough, of that place, now held at Watertown, South Dakota, for trial on charge of being implicated in the shooting of a Watertown citizen in an attempted robbery, were to have their second trial last week. The first trial of the two resulted in a disagreement.

These two men are also accused of stealing two cars from this county during fair week last summer, one of the cars belonging to Lars Auestad of Belmond and latter identified by him at Watertown, where the two had taken it. If their second trial in Dakota results in acquittal, it is probable that they will be brought to this county to face the court again here for their alleged previous offenses. The result of the second trial is not known at this writing.

COUNTY TO GRAVEL ROAD TO LAKE FROM KANAWHA

It is understood that the commissioners of the county have let the contract for graveling the road leading to West Lake from Kanawha, and also from Kanawha to the Wright county line. The county has been doing a large amount of road graveling the county over, and while in its "fresh" state it is far from easy traveling, it will result in some fine roads as soon as beaten down, something the county has been very sadly in need of for many years past. The road from Salsburg to Clarion, and from Rowan to Dows, are among those in this vicinity which have been treated to a coat of good gravel.

FORMER BELMOND PASTOR AND BALL PLAYER MIX

Rev. Henry Horton, Former Minister Here, In Hot Scrap With Professional Ball Player at Orchard, Iowa.

The item printed below is taken from the Mason City paper, and refers to a well known former minister of Belmond, who moved to Orchard, Iowa, from this city:

OSAGE, Mar. 25—The little town of Orchard, six miles north of here, has been having quite a bit of excitement during the past few days, occasioned by the beating up of their minister, the Rev. Henry Horton.

A professional ball player named Harold Unger and claiming Waterloo as his home, had had a quarrel of long standing with Mr. Horton, which was said to involve a number of Orchard people.

It is claimed that it was at the instigation of others that he attacked Mr. Horton, beating him rather severely.

Unger was placed under arrest upon a charge of assult and battery and tried before Justice Stoughton of Osage. He pleaded guilty and was fined $100 and costs, and also placed under a bond of $2,000 to keep the peace.

DRAG THE ROADS

When the smiles of spring appear,
Drag the roads.
When the summer time is here,
Drag the roads.
When the corn is in the ear,
In the winter cold and drear,
Every season of the year,
Drag the roads.
When you've nothing else to do,
Drag the roads.
If but for an hour or two,
Drag the roads.
It will keep them good as new,
With a purpose firm and true,
Fall in line; it's up to you—
Drag the roads!

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Sorenson and son Chester drove to Owatonna, Minnesota, a week ago to visit their son Harry. On their return they stopped at Buffalo Center where they visited Bert and at Titonka to visit their daughter, Mrs. Clair Meacham, arriving home Friday. Chester stayed to help Bert for a while.

CHARLES BUCHANAN HAS HEAD CRUSHED IN BAD ACCIDENT

While At Work On Ditching Machine Using Jack To Lower The Dredge, Accident Occurs.

BONE IN FACE IS SMASHED

Wedge In Jackscrew Comes Out, The Handle Striking Him In The Head—Will Recover.

Charles Buchanan was the unfortunate and at the same time fortunate victim of an accident last Thursday which came within a narrow margin of costing him his life.

He was working with E. F. Bailey on a ditch about five miles south of town, repairing the big ditching machine used in the work. He had the machine up on a jackscrew, and in lowering the machine by the screw the wedge in the screw came out, the handle flying up and striking him on the side of the head.

The side of his face was badly smashed, the bone just below the eye being broken and the flesh badly bruised. He was rushed to the local hospital, where Dr. Steele gave him immediate treatment.

It was found that his injuries were not as serious as at first supposed. He was sent to Fort Dodge to an eye specialist, and reports yesterday were that he would soon be back, that no opertion would be necessary and that his eye would be saved.

WHY NOT HERE TOO?

Belmond needs, and has needed for some time, an uptown telegraph office. It has been urged by both the business industries of the city and the business men individually, but so far to no avail. The following item from the Monitor of Clarion, for last week, will be of interest to those in Belmond who are agitating an uptown office:

A Western Union telegraph man from Omaha was in Clarion last week seeking a first floor room for the purpose of opening an uptown telegraph office. President Thornley of the Commercial Club was unable to find a suitable room, but another effort will be made later. Such and office in Clarion would fill a long felt want.

We do high grade blacksmith and machine work, and are fully equipped to give you service and satisfaction, with an expert blacksmith in charge of that work and expert machinests on the lathes. "Lasting Satisfaction to follow every transaction.—E. Wege Mgr., at the United Mfg. Co. plant.

"Bob" Richardson, who is in the army, stationed in Texas, gets pretty lonesome sometimes to hear from his old friends in Belmond, and says he would like to have some of them write him and tell him the news of the home town. His address is Pvt. R. W. Richardson, Hg. Det. 3rd Inf. Brig., Camp Travis, San Antonio, Texas.

There will be a box social at the Grant Center school on Friday evening, April 1. Miss Bertha Holden of Ames will be the chief speaker of an excellent program. The proceeds will be used for the activities of the farm bureau.

SKIN GRAFTING IS SUCCESSFUL

Clarion Monitor: Ed. Whitman, whose burns from the recent gasoline explosion seem to be more severe than the other victims, had eighteen pieces of skin grafted on the back of his hands and fingers of both hands. Mrs. Geo. Richards, out of the kindness of her heart, very generously volunteered herself for the ordeal. Dr. Sams removed the strips from her arms.

Miss Iva Trumbell, who is superitendent of a hospital in Des Moines spent Easter with relatives and friends in Belmond.

MARRIAGES

KALVIG-CLEVELAND

At eight o'clock on Saturday evening, March 26th, occured the marriage of Mrs. Hattie Cleveland to Mr. Thomas Kalvig, the Rev. Trelstad of Kanawha officiating.

The marriage ceremony took place at the Lutheran parsonage in Kanawha, the couple being attended by Blanche Stueland and Alvald Stole, of that place.

Following the ceremony the happy couple came to Belmond, where they spent a few days visiting relatives, and then left for other points on a short honeymoon. Upon their return they will be at home after April fourth at Kanawha, where they will make their future home.

The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Hans Sampson, of Kanawha, and is a highly accomplished young lady with the true homemaking talents. She has taught school for several years, and has made her home in Kanawha for some time past.

Mr. Kalvig is a son of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Kalvig of Belmond, and is an industrious young man of the most sterling character and qualities.

The many friends of the couple with whom the Independent joins, unite in wishing them the best of happiness in their life together.

SCHOOL NOTES

The literary program last Friday afternoon was one of exceptional merit. The following program was enjoyed by the student body and visitors:

Piano Duet—Carol Tyrrell, Inez Boughton.
Reading—Valda Robinson.
Original Poem—Raphael Kernan.
"On Venice Waters"—Boys' Glee Club.
Reading—Ruth Knudson
Playlet—Sing A Song of Seniors.
Characters: Beatrice Leavy, Mamie Fulton, Marjorie Williams, Leona Smiht, Eloise Brooks, Cornelia Allison, Leona Jacobs.

Remember you have a date at the school auditorium next Wednesday evening, April 6. The Junior class has secured the Iotan Club from Coe College to give us a musical treat. The program will be varied and consequently entertaining to young and old. The evening holds special interest for Belmond from the fact that two of our local Coe students, Philip McBurney and Herbert Nelson, are members of the organization.

Others made a very favorable impression in special numbers on the Coe Glee Club program last spring. The Juniors will make a special canvass for the advance sale of tickets next week and in the vacation. Don't forget the date.

School will open April 4, for nine weeks hard work. Parents are asked to co-operate with the school in the home student work of every pupil above the 6th grade.

Now is the time to see that your child is making his grade and not at the close of the term, June 3.

We will be glad to have any parent call at the school house and talk over the work of the student with the teacher and the superintendent. Help us make every day in the next nine weeks count for advancement.

The Normal Training Club will not meet this week because of vacation. Watch the paper for further notice.

Most of the Belmond teachers are spending their vacation out of town.

FAMILY REUNION

and Mrs. Dan Wenzel held a family reunion at their home in Belmond on a week ago Saturday. All the children were present, as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brady and family, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Wenzel and family, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Wenzel and family, all from near Meservey. in the afternoon Herman Wenzel, of Belmond, joined them. A very enjoyable time is reported.

Clifford Trees and son James went to Rochester last week. James will have an operation and Mr. Trees will have an exmination to discover what is the trouble with him, as he has been ailing for some time.

KELLASTONE
IMPERISHABLE STUCCO

Why Kellastone? ---Permanence!

Neither Frost, Water, Fire nor Time, will destroy Kellastone. It is composed entirely of mineral ingredients that will last for ages. It contains absolutely no Portland Cement, lime, gypsum or plaster of Paris. No plastering, hair or wood fibre is used in its manufacture, and none should be added. It sets up dense and compact, hard as granite and weather defying. There is not a single ingredient in its composition that can possibly rot. Moisture cannot permeate it. Its durability has been convincingly proven by thousands of buildings in which Kellastone has been used. These claims are corroborated by the testimony of engineers, architects and practical builders who have used it for many years.

WILL BELMOND HAVE A BAND THIS YEAR?

R. E. Lee Aldrich Alias James Lord Bennet, Is Sued

Peculiar Case Of Alias Signed To Note By Aldrich Comes Up For Trial In District Court.

SEVERAL LOCAL CASES ARE UP

One of the most peculiar suits on record in this county was filed last week by the Wright & Franklin County Breeder's associaton of Rowan. The defendant in the case is R. E. Lee Aldrich, alias James Lord Bennet. The case involves the payment of a $100 note bearing the alias above referred to and executed by said Aldrich. The note is dated September 23, 1919. At that time the above assocation was soliciting shares for the erection of a stock pavillon at Rowan. As the story goes, the defendant was solicited on several occasions to subscribe for stock in the enterprise, but each time refused, saying he did not care to take out any stock. On the evening of the date above referred to Mr. Aldrich entered one of the Rowan stores and was again solicited. Several were present and in a joking manner remarked: "Don't let him get out until he signs up" and other such remarks. They formed a ring about him and one of the number handed him a blank application to sign. As the crowd had him cornered there seemed to be but one avenue of escape—that to sign up—so he hastily signed the above name, handed it back and left the store—thinking he had turned the trick on the "boys." The incident happened a year and a half ago and nothing more was heard of the matter until this action was started. Whether the jury will also treat the matter in the light of a joke or in a more serious vein remains to be seen.

Marriage licenses, excepting one bashful fellow from Eagle Grove, are as follows: C. R. Bates and Mrs. Ecco Stansberry, Henry O. Thompson and May Buhner, Joseph Darland and Adeline Mickelson, T. V. Weide and Libbie Brink. The groom in the last mentioned contract was under age and it was necessary to get his father's consent by telegraph.

"Goodbye, and be a good girl," is alleged to be the farewell words from the lips of Claude Jennings, formerly of Rowan and later rural mail carrier out of Clarion, when he left home recently. Last week Mrs. Blanche Jennings filed suit for divorce alleging that her husband was abusive and guilty of inhuman treatment, also the excessive use of intoxicating liquors.

Engineer Hilton was in attendance at the eighth annual convention of Iowa road officials held at Ames last week. Several nationally known engineers were on the program. Mr. Hilton read a paper on "Road Administration From the County Standpoint." which was well received. It was a profitable convention, nearly 400 engineers, supervisors and auditors being in attendance.

A resolution was passed at this meeting endorsing the appropriation bill to be considered at a special session of congress and opposing the proposed establishment of the national highway measure. This measure if it becomes a law, would take 30 per cent of the money from all counties not located on one of the proposed federal roads. The scheme would be to cross each state in the union with one paved road east and west and one north and south. That sounds good on the face of matters but a little study on the question will show that only a trifle over one-fourth of the counties in Iowa would be benefited as compared to the entire state under the appropriation plan. It would further delay the better roads one-third longer. The government or federal roads would a[illegible] fine for the tourist going from a[illegible] to state and for the pleasure F[illegible] but a greater need is involved. a[illegible] that an economic one. The first pl[illegible] most essential need for good a[illegible] w[illegible]

SPLENDID FARM BUREAU MEETING AT MARTIN HOME

Very Interesting "Get-Together Affair Held Thursday With Many Ladies In Attendance.

The "get-together" meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. A. E. Martin, Thursday afternoon, March 31, was very well attended and a success in every way. Mrs. A. E. Martin gave a demonstration in making ice cream and orange ice, in which the ladies were much interested. After the demonstration a social time was enjoyed and topics of interest to the busy farm wife were discussed.

There being no organization for the lade of the Farm Bureau of Belmond township, a business meeting was held, and the following officers elected:

Mrs. A. E. Martin ------ Chairman
Mrs. G. F. Elder ---- Vice Chairman
Mrs. Ralph Christie ---- Sec.-Treas.

These officers with the co-operators will constitute a board of directors. The co-operators are, the Mesdames Simon Simerson, M. R. Pierce, R. D. Box, R. L. Reed, A. C. Hinman, C. G. Johnson, G. T. Johnson, Garfield Halverson, I. L. Christie, It was planned to hold meetings once a month, and some line of work will be taken up at each meeting. Samples of the demonstrated ice cream and orange ice with cakes were served the ladies, and all pronounced the demonstration a success. The next demonstration will be with Mrs. Ira Christie in strawberry time. All who are not members better get busy and join. The following ladies were present:

Mesdames Simon Simerson, Lewis Hauge, E.. Thompson, J. Tiara, J. Mack, G. T. Johnson, A. C. Meyers, J. Henn, M. R. Pierce, R. Reed, H. Ruka, H. Emerson, A. A. Olson, Geo. Johnson, Guy Baker, M. G. Luick, J. Sloan, Geo. Elder Ralph Christie, Glenn Baker, Arthur Hinman, Oscar Hanson, W. I. Rosecrans, Ward Martin, Tom Brooks, Edd Hauge, and the Misses Frances Baker, Orelee Brooks.

MISS GRETCHEN BLANK DIES

Klemme Times: This community was saddened when it heard of the death of Miss Gretchen Blank. After a long period of suffering and agony Miss Gretchen passed away Monday afternoon at 5:15. She was unconscious since Sunday morning. Her father and mother and brothers and sisters were at her bedside when she passed from this world. Funeral services were held at Klemme.

Miss Blank was a sister of Casey Blank of Belmond.

OLD RESIDENT OF BELMOND DIES AT HOME IN NEB.

Mrs. Lizzie Luick, Former Resident Of This Place, Died On March 16th From Appoplexy.

Word was received here last week by relatives that Mrs. Lizzie Luick, a former resident of ths city, had died at her home in Hastings, Nebraska, on March 16th., death being caused by appoplexy.

Mrs. Luick will be remembered by many local people. She resided here for a number of years, and for the past five years she has been making her home with her daughter, Bonnie Luick, at Hastings.

Funeral services were held at Hastings, burial being at that place, her home town, beside her father and brother. Mrs. Luick was the mother of Nell Luick and of Mrs. Josephine Hubbard the former now residing in California and the latter at Durango, Colorado, both former residents of Belmond. There are a number of other relatives in and about Belmond, to whom their friends extend their sympathy.

The report in the Independent last week regarding the death on Tuesday evening of Bert Fisher, county sheriff, was happily untrue. Mr. Bullard, who furnished the informaton to this paper, says he received his information from reliable sources, but that they were misinformed. Everybody will be glad to know it, for Mr. Fisher has a county full of frends who hope for his speedy return in health from Rochester.

Health Lecture At Auditorium On May 6th

World Famous Clown To Speak To Children On Health In High School Auditorium.

TO BE HERE ON MAY THE 6TH

Cho-Cho will be in Belmond, Friday evening, May 6. This is the final date sent by his manager from the State College at Ames. We believe every child in Wright county should see Cho-Cho at one of the three towns, Goldfield, Clarion or Belmond, where he will appear May 6. We believe all children should see him because Cho-Cho is a real clown with a world reputation. He became most interested in children and left the biggest circus in the world just to belong to them. He has a special message for children. The little folks in the Eastern states know and love Ciho-Cho. For several years

Cho-Cho has entertained and taught them how to eat and play and work, to be strong men and women. This is his first trip thru Iowa and Belmond is very lucky to secure a date for his performance. The Junior Red Cross is paying his expenses so there will be no admission. The high school auditorium is the place where he will appear. There are only six hundred seats there and Cho-Cho wants a child for every seat. "Grown-ups" will take the back seats and the little folks the front seats. Remember the date—Friday evening, May 6th. Remember the place—high school auditorium. Plan to see Cho-Cho.

There will be no Normal Training club meeting this week.

MOORE-GOLDEN

On Wednesday, March 30th., at 12 o'clock noon occured the marriage of Miss Ada Golden of Cedar Rapids to Mr. Howard Moore of Belmond, the ceremony taking place at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. S. Golden.

After the ceremony, the bride and groom left for a short wedding trip to Chicago, coming to Belmond on Tuesday of this week.

The bride has been acting as bookkeeper in the office of Secretary of State W. C. Ramsay, at Des Moines, and while not very well known by Belmond people she is a young lady of many talents and abilities, and the many friends of Mr. Moore will welcome her to the city.

Mr. Moore is one of the town's best known business men, being head of the Moore Grain Company of this place. He is a young man of splendid character and attainments, and is among this city's best known citizens.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore will be at home at the Moore residence on Spruce street after April 10th.

The many friends of the couple with whom the Independent joins, extend their best wishes for a happy and prosperous life together.

Attorney W. E. Bullard was a visitor at the county seat last week, on matters pertaining to his legal business.

AMERICAN LEGION IS TO RAFFLE OFF FORD CAR

At One Dollar A Ticket, Legion Will Dispose Of Brand New Ford Coupe In Near Future.

The local post of the American Legion has a raffle on now in which they will dispose of a brand new Ford car, a Coupe, just coming from the factory.

The car will be exhibited as soon as it arrives, so that everyone can see what they can get for a dollar. The funds will go to the local post to be used in the maintining of their club rooms and the advancement of the ideals for which the Legion stands. The boys are now selling tickets and are having very good success. Get out your lucky dollar and take a chance; you may be riding the pavements this summer in a fine new car if you do.

ALFRED OTTO ENGLAT

Alfred Otto Englat was born June 3, 8178, at Grafton, Iowa. He moved with his parents from there to Corwith, Iowa, and at the age of 13 years moved with them to Belmond, Iowa. He was graduated from the Belmond schools in 1896.

In 1899 he was united in marriage to Miss Sadie Cuppett and to this union were born four children: two boys and two girls; Edward, Harold, Ruth and Eileen. The second son, Harold, died in infancy.

A number of years ago Mr. Englat moved with his family to North Dakota, where they lived for five years. They then returned to Belmond for about one year, before moving to Lavina, Montana, where they have made their home for the past twelve years, he being cashier of the bank at Lavina. Aside from his work in the bank, Mr. Englat has always shown great interest in and given himself unreservedly to public life and community welfare, serving for three years on the school board and president of the Lavina Commercial Club.

Mr. Englat joined the Masonic lodge while he lived in North Dakota and ever since has been an enthusiastic worker in the order, being instrumental in organizing a lodge in his home town of Lavina. He has also served for a number of years as District Instructor.

While not a member or regular attendant of the church, Mr. Englat was interested in its work and gave great assistance to his wife in the many responsibilities she accepted in that work. He was generally considered one of the most helpful and useful citizens of the community.

He left home about ten o'clock last Friday morning, going some miles into the country on business for the bank, and told Mrs. Englat that he would not be back for dinner. He did not return for supper; it was lodge night and he seldom ever missed, but did not come this night. The family waited all night but no word came from him and it was suspected that he had met with an accident. It was shortly after noon of the next day that Mrs. Englat received a phone message of the accident, and was later informed that Mr. Englat had been killed with the man who accompanied him. Those who visited the scene of the accident say that the indications are that both men were killed instantly. Funeral services were held from the church at Lavina, the pastor giving the address and the Masonic lodge conducting their church service.

Besides his wife and three children, Mr. Englat leaves to mourn his untimely death, one sister, Mrs. Annie Krusemark of Oregon, and six brothers, Fred of Chicago, Joe of Kanawha, George of Washington, Lew of Montana, John of Minneapolis, and Jake of Montana, a number of other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were conducted from the local Methodist church, in charge of Rev. J. H. Edge, the Masons conducting the service at the grave. Interment was made in the Franklin Grove cemetery.

L. L. Putnam was enjoying a visit from an uncle, who lives in the west last week. He had not seen him for fourteen years.

IF WE ARE, SOMETHING MUST BE DONE

From Present Indications The Town Will Be Without Band Unless Quick Action Is Taken.

CAN'T AFFORD NOT TO HAVE IT

Band Boys Do Not Seem Overly Anxious To Organize The Band For This Summer.

Is Belmond to have a band this year? From the present indications it isn't. Can the town afford not to have one? From past experiences it can't.

Those two questions are the ones it is up to the town to consider, and to act upon immediately.

It is understood that the band boys held a meeting recently, and that there was very little enthusiasm for a band this year. Just what the differences are, if any, the Independent is not prepared to say. But this paper does believe that every effort should be made to see that the band is given every co-operation and aid that can be given.

There are players enough in the town to make a band of fifteen of more instruments. There is no question whatever as to the ability of the players; Belmond's band the past few seasons has been one of the best amatuer organizations in the entire state. The questions of funds for the band need not be worried about; there are enough business men and public spirited citizens who see the benefits to the town of a band to put up the required sum.

Other towns around, even much smaller towns, such as Klemme, are gettng their bands in shape for the coming season, and it would seem that Belmond could not afford to lose out in its own. The value of a town band is unquestioned, both in the commercial and entertainment ways.

The Independent is willing and anxious to give the fullest co-operation and publicity to any efforts that may be made for the organizing of the band. Any help will be gladly given, as will practically every other business establishment in the city.

It is understood that the band boys will hold another meeting this week. It is to be most sincerely hoped that at this meeting they will be able to organize, to make suitable arrangements and begin practicing for the summer concerts. They will find the local firms and citizens willing to cooperate with them to the fullest extent.

HENRY CRIST BACK FROM HONOLULU

Belmond folks were glad last week to see "Uncle Heinie" back in the home town, after his winter's sojourn in Honolulu. Mr. Crist is looking the picture of health and says he is mighty glad to be back in the old town again. He says that the winter was ideal in Honolulu, and that he enjoyed his stay there to the utmost. In Honolulu, he says, they say that there are three crops grown: sugar cane, pineapples, and tourists, and the last is not least. The temperature there ranges from 54 to 96, the two extremes. There are a great many Japanese and Chinese on the island of Hawaii, and Mr. Crist says that they go thru the streets driving their big cars. He says that he was never in a place of that size where there were so few Fords; most of the cars are Packards, Pierce-Arrows and Cadillacs. On his way home he visited with a friend in Arizona, and saw several former Belmonders in California.

A number of young men from this place drove to Eagle Grove on this week Sunday, where a class of some fifty were initiated into the mysteries of the K. C's. Several of the delegates were from Belmond and Goodell. They say that Geo. Brady, who was one of the class, went thru the ordeal in fine shape.

FREE AIR!

The Air was lacking last week because there wasn't room. And when it comes to a question of news or Air, we believe there are more folks who prefer the news—not meaning to slam the Air, you understand.

The writer is sporting a new ring. It's a nice ring, gold, with three initials on it: E. L. S.

Elmer Left Suddenly, you know, and left an old vest hanging in his former place of employment. The other day we moved it, and look at what we found. We're keeping it until he returns that ten dollars we gave him for a wedding present.

But we hope there isn't anything contagous about it.

The other day there were two fellows right outside our window talking with the third party, bargaining for a bottle of hootch. They made the deal—or so we suppose—for they slipped said third party some real money, and then slipped over to the building onthe corner—vacant—stayed about ten minutes, and came out feeling fine.

You go west, then south, then west again a certain way, so they say.

The hootch question seems to be the question of the day, more important than the league of notions and the blue laws.

These blue laws are making a lot of folks see red. Nothing to get excited about. One fellow said that when they took away his corncob, they'd have to take away powder, paint and—so forth.

This same fellow said, too, that it looks like the Irish would never quit fighting over there. It makes no difference as to locality: an Irishman never quits. He can't, and live, to say nothing of being happy.

To say that an Irishman will never stop fighting is the same thing as to say that nothing is more certain than death and taxes.

And have you noticed the taxes this year? It is almost dead sure this year.

As a fellow in town said, when he first glimsed his bill for this year, "If taxes are sure as death, then we'll sure be dead if this keeps up."

And at that there be some who would have us cancel the debt that England owes us.

Ain't folks queer?

Don't believe it has been cold enuf yet.

Wanted—Number 333 in the American Legion lottery. Whoever has said number for sale, bring to this office and receive reward.

If the paper seems short, poorly made up, balled up and otherwise, blame it on the foreman—he's just bought a new car. You understand. The first effects are about the same as those of the first child.

So far, he's lost two nights' sleep, pied three forms, had several nightmares, tried the boat out to see how fast it would go—all the general run of first-time experiences.

Too bad, because he was a calm, cool, collected young man before he fell.

Speaking of cars, there was the April fool joke they tried to pull on Lloyd Skovlin the other day at Rowan. Lloyd was in the town on April 1, and when he came out of a store and was walking down the street he happened to notice that some fellow had placed a jack under the rear wheels of his car. Had he attempted to start he would have gone awful fast but arrived nowhere.

Which shows the value of observation.

Next week, and maybe for some time after, this paper will have a special department of widespread interest—very wide.

We're not saying what it will be because maybe it will fall down. But if it does come, don't fail to read it. You won't, tho; it will attract your instant attention.

NOTICE!

There will be a base ball meeting Wednesday evening at the city hall at 7:00 o'clock. All those who are interested in a team this year, and especially the ball payers, are urged to attend this meeting.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

MILLION AND A HALF FARMERS ORGANIZE

A million and a half farmers have banded themselves together under one head and labeled themselves Farm Bureau. What does it all mean? Why are all business interests and all earnest thinkers giving this matter such careful thought? It means that the farmers have organized and the business interests are worried thinking that the farmers will stick to their organization this time.

Indeed there are some who look upon the Farm Bureau movement with alarm and see in it a monopoly which will eventually squeeze to deats every interest which does not have a direct bearing upon agriculture but these people should rest assured that the purpose of the Farm Bureau is to advance the agricultural interests of our commonwealth, financially, educationally and socially thru co-operation among the people themselves wih no thought of injury toward any individual or any organization but with a definite purpose of justice and equity for all. The farmers of America are determined to have changes in laws, changes in finance and change in our marketing system of grain and livestock. The American farmer believes in comfortable homes, and in beautiful surroundings which means that he is progressive and strictly American.

WHY USE MILK?

Boys and girls are building bodies and need good building food. Milk is one of our best foods for growth, as it is the only all-round food.

Milk is the only food, commonly eaten, having a high per cent of calcium (lime). Calcium is needed for the growth of bones and teeth.

It was found in California that on an average the boys and girls who used milk were taller than those who used little or no milk.

In Iowa a very high per cent of boys and girls have defective teeth. One county superintendent asked it there was any connection between poor teeth and the lack of use of milk, for it seemed that all the pupils not using milk had poor teeth.

Three cups of milk should be allowed for every member of the family under 16. Adults should have at least two cups during the day.

FACTS ABOUT MILK

1—Milk is the cheapest animal food.

2—Milk at 15c a quart is as cheap a source of protein as meat at 35c a pound.

3—Milk at 15c a quart is as cheap a source of protein as eggs at 19c per dozen.

4—One quart of milk contains nearly as much solid matter as one pound of meat.

5—"No family has the right to purchase any meat until each member has at least a pint of milk daily." Dr. E. V. McCiollum.

6—A large steel plant has found it profitable to allow milk to be sold to the men during working hours—the men accomplish more work.

7—Milk has no waste—it is all used.

8—Plenty of milk with vegetables and cereals make a wholesome and economical diet.

9—Milk is the only all round food—it contains some of all the necessary food substances.

10—Whole milk added to the diet of the growing boy and girl helps to easy food substances.

11—Milk is a good body builder. Growing children should have it.

12—Milk is the best source of lime. It is a good bone-builder, it keeps your teeth hard.

13—Milk is one of the best protective foods.

14—There are more than 200 ways of using milk in cooking.

15—Deserts made from milk are body building foods.

16—Unclean milk is a disease carrie. Keep it clean.

Use milk every day.

GRANT BOX SOCIAL

A most interesting and successful box social was held at the Grant Ctnter school, Friday evening, April 1, under the auspices of the Grant township Farm Bureau.

A lively program consisting of several short programs by various schools within the township and of the principal address, preceeded by the sale of boxes. Mr. Joe Abernathy chairman from Boone township, gave a most interesting address on Farm Bureau activities and co-operation among the members. Mr. Abernathy emphasized the importance of sane co-operation in all undertakings by the Farm Bureau. Dale B. Jackson, secretary of the fair association, gave a short talk in explanation of the ladies' exhibits at the fair.

The box social started off with a contest for the laziest man and the prize, which consisted of a beautiful sofa pillow, stuffed with straw, went to John Fenninger and we are now wondering what use Mr. Fenninger will make of. this exceptional prize. The boxes, which were loaded to overflowing with good eats, were auctioned by Jack Munnis, a local auctioneer, who is known to all and things moved lively while Jock was at the block. After the boxes were all sold candy and luncheons were sold and the total receipts for the boxes and candy were $53.75. The success of this get-together community social was due to the efforts of the program committee, consisting of Violet Lukens, Mrs. Harry Woodley and Mrs. Jack Munnis.

The ladies of Grant township announce their next meeting for Friday afternoon, April 29.

SPRAY RINGS ARE ORGANIZED

Under the direction of W. J. Kocken, orchard specialist from Ames, several spray rings have been organized in Wright county. We understand that Troy township is to have two such organizations and the Eagle Grove township is to have one also.

The general plan of the spray ring organization is to have fifteen to 20 farmers who are interested in the spray work pool their interests in the purchase of a power spray rig to be used in spraying the trees of the various members of the spray ring, the advantage being that by pooling their interests in this way the farmers may obtain more reasonable prices on spray material and definite arrangement can be made for working on the orchards of the various members.

THE HOME GARDEN

At this season there is only one safe guide to our first sowings in the open. The present state of the ground must rule these earliest sowings. But where the garden has a warm exuposure and the soil is light we need not hesitate to make a start with a nummber of vegetables, if the ground has been prepared by digging or plowing and enriched with manure or fertilizers, says the Country Gentleman.

Presuming the ground has been prepared and the surface is so dry that a good seed bed can be made, we may go ahead with seed sowing. The soil must be in such condition that it works freely under the rake without forming balls or lumps.

On well-drained, light soils we may sow immediately beets, carrots, parsnips, peas, spinach, Swiss Chard, onions and lettuce.

Turnip or globe-shaped beets may be grown on comparatively shallow soil, as much of the bulbous root is made above the surface. The young plants will stand quite a severe frost, so that early sowing may be made immediately the ground is ready. Sow thinly—ten seeds to each foot of row will be ample—covering the seed not more than one inch. The usual distance between the rows is twelve to eighteen inches. Thinning out must not be delayed until the plants begin to crowd each other unduly.

Additional sowings should be made at intervals to late July or even early August.

Early carrots, sweet, juicy little roots, used while young and tender, make a welcome change. To secure an early crop, carefully prepare the seed bed. Manure of a fresh or strawy nature must not be used; rather rely on old decayed leaf mold. Heavy ground can be improved for this crop by the free use of roadside scrapings and wood ashes. Rake the surface fine and make it moderately firm. Sow thinly, covering the seed not more than half an inch. Thin out to two or three inches apart.

To secure perfectly grown parsnips no time should now be lost in making the first sowing. The ground should be deep, friable, and should not contain fresh strawy manure. On rather shallow ground grow the variety Early Short Round, as the roots do not require such deep soil as the long sorts such as Guernsey or Hollow Crown.

Cover the seed not more than half an inch. The drills should be eighteen inches apart. When large enough to handle, thin out the plants to about six inches apart.

Spinach is our most valuable spring "greens" and the spring sowing should be made at once. It may be sown broadcast between the rows of other crops. This crop cannot withstand heat; if sown late in April it is more than likely that the plants will form flower heads before they are well ready to use. However, by putting in a row of Swiss chard the first of this crop will be ready by the time the spinach is finished.

Practically every gardener plants a few sets of onions, but how many cultivate to secure fine, well-matured bulbs for winter and spring use?

Onions can be grown successfully on any good retentive soil, or even on lighter soil provided it contains plenty of humus and plant food. The soil should be rather firm for onions, so that it should be worked as early as possible to have time to settle before warm weather. A gross feeder, this crop requires plenty of manure and fertilizers, so that the ground must be made rich by using well-rotted manure, poultry manure, wood ashes or commercial fertilizers. It is not advisable to work the manure too deeply into the soil; aim to mix well with the top spit, to top six inches. The commercial fertilizer is applied on the surface after the manure is turned under, raking it into the surface soil as the seed bed is being prepared. Make the bed as fine as possible.

The rows may be twelve to 18 inches apart and should be made perfectly straight. One ounce of seed will sow one hundred feet of row, and if not sown thickly the laborious job of thinning will be considerably lessened. Be careful not to cover the seed too deeply; one inch is proper. If the soil is sufficiently dry it should be made quite firm over the seed. Sow quite early in the spring.

Immediately the little plants begin to break thru the soil cultivation must begin, stirring the surface at least once a week until the tops get too large. At the first thinning the plants may be left one inch apart, then the next time two inches apart, so that eventually the crop will be allowed three inches between each.

Small dressings of nitrate of soda at intervals of two weeks will be a great help, applying it first after the last thinning, and immediately before hoeing.

We must try to keep the onion fly from depositing her eggs on the plants. Pour one cupful of kerosene over a bucketful of sand, and strew the sand along the row of plants when about one inch high, repeating in six days. Another plan is to mix one part flowers of sulphur in six parts freshly slaked and finely powdered lime, applying it as suggested for the kerosene mixture.

KNOW THAT YOUR SEED CORN WILL GROW

By P. G. Holden.

The long growing season for corn in 1920 caused the most of us to believe that the corn, when harvested, was fully matured, well dried out and in good condition for seed.

But recent tests show that the corn did not dry thoroly and it is likely that the vitality of much of the corn we have saved for seed is low.

For this reason it is very important that every ear of seed corn should be tested before it is planted next spring.

Poor seed is one of the chief causes of a poor stand and a poor stand means a small yield.

There is nothing else that will do so much to increase the yield of corn on every farm as the making of a germination test of six or eight kernals from each ear to be used as seed and discarding those ears which show weak or sickly roots or stem sprouts. The most common mistake is to conclude that we can judge the germinating power of seed corn by looking at it and that it does not need testing.

A few days spent during March in selecting and testing our seed corn may be worth more to us at harvest time than a whole year's hard work.

It is nothing more or less than good business for us to know that the seed we put into the ground is healthy seed and that it will grow. And the only way we can tell good seed is by testing it.

One man in two days can test enough corn to plant 40 acres of ground. Testing will not cost to exceed 10 cents an acre. Yet, because it is "too much bother" to test seed corn, we pick out 600 ears, look at them, guess that they will grow, and plant them. As a consequence, more than 12 acres out of every 40 planted to corn in the average Corn Belt state produce nothing.

By testing we get rid of the dead, weak, disease-infected and mouldy ears. Testing does not hurt the corn It requires but little time and that at a season of the year when we have little to do. By testing we have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

There are several methods of testing corn but the limitations of this article will not permit of a description of any of them. Any county agent, any agricultural college, or any good farmer will be glad to tell his neighbor how to test seed corn.

After the corn has been tested, sorted, shelled and graded for the planter and the bad kernals removed, it should be placed in half-bushel sacks and hung up in a dry place. We should put in a sack serarate from the rest, the seed from the best 100 ears. When planting, we should use the seed from these "best 100 ears" on one side of the field and pick our seed corn from these rows next year.

If we have no good seed corn we should buy from our neighbors or some one in the community. We should not import seed corn from outside our immediate vicinity. Thousands of individual ear tests prove that home grown seed will yield on an average from eight to 20 bushels of corn more per acre than will imported seed. The best plan is to grow our own seed and test every ear intended for planting.

Investigations conducted over a period of several years by various agricultural colleges and by the U. S. Department of Agriculture have proven beyond doubt that rot diseases of the corn root, the stalk and the ear have been one of the chief causes of thin stands, of larger numbers of weak and stunted plants; of stalks that are down, or leaning, or broken, of barreness and nubbins; of chaffy immature ears; of reduced yields.

It is possible that rot diseases carry over from one year to another in the soil; it is certain they carry over in the seed, and one of the best methods for the control of these rots is the selection of disease-free seed ears.

The germination test will help us in picking out these diseased ears. Kernals that are diseased may show good germination but the stem sprout will be discolored—pink or brown or some other shade that will readily show the experienced corn grower that something is the matter with them.

In some instances a diseased seedling looks apparently healthy, except that it has a small number of roots. Such kernals should be cut open with a knife to see if they are rotted or moldy on the inside.

The safest rule is: Discard every ear that looks suspicious.

"OATS SUPPLY"

The following is a trascript of an article appearing in Wallace's Farmer of March 25, 1921, and is of particular significance in connection with the corn situation outlined in the same periodical the week before. The article on corn appeared in this paper last week:

The oats surplus as of March 1, 1921, is about but not quite such a serious matter as the corn surplus. This year we enter the planting season with 690,000,000 bushels of oats on farms, as compared with 473,000,000 bushels, the average of the past ten years. The excess stocks, amounting this year to 217,000,000 bushels, are equivalent to the crop grown on 6,800,000 acres. This would indicate that if we are to have a normal carry over into 1922 the oat average of the United States should be reduced from 42,000,000 acres to 36,000,000 acres.

As a matter of fact the spring is so favorable to oat seeding and so many farmers are reducing their corn acreage and increasing [illegible] ...ge that we shall probabl[illegible] about 43,000,000 acres of oats. This means that with an average season we shall have even greater reserves a year from now than at the present time. This makes it absolutely certain that oats will continue to sell for less than cost of production for another year.

In Iowa on March 1 we had one-sixth of the tota oat reserves of the United States. To be exact, we had 115,000,000 bushels as compared with 78,000,000 bushels, the average of the past ten years. The surplus is such that if it were not for the corn situation which is even more dangerous we would advocate reducing the oat acreage of Iowa by 1,000,000 acres If every farmer in Iowa should seed this year five acres less oats than last year we should, with an average year, still have a normal carry over into 1922.

IF YOU HAVEN'T PAID YOUR AUTO TAX YET, YOU BETTER

After Sheriff Fisher gets back from Rochester one of his biggest jobs will be to collect the delinquent automobile tax. The new law gives that official power to seize your car and hold it at your expense at the rate of $1.00 per day, in addition to a $2.00 fee, cost and milage. Treasurer Allen reports about one hundred delinquent automobiles for Wrght county. He will need to properly advertise the delinquents in May. Fifteen days later the sheriff must get busy. Suppose one-half of the owners redeem their cars, will some one tell the sheriff where he is going to store the remaining fifty cars? Just picture for yourself that number of autos parked about that official's residence in Clarion. That section of the law which refers to this matter is as follows:

On April first of the year 1921 and annually thereafter, the department shall forward to the county treasurer of each county, a list of all motor vehicles in said county on which the registration fee has not been paid, showing the amount of the delinquent fee, registraton number, make and factory number, together with the name and address of the owner of each car as disclosed by the records. In the first week in May of each year the county treasurer shall cause to be published in each of the official newspapers in his county, a list of all motor vehicles owned within his county, upon which the license fee has not been paid for that year. Such list shall show the factory number, make and model of the vehicle together with the name and post office address of the owner thereof as shown by the records of his office and the amount of the license fee and penalty due upon the vehicle. Immediately after the publication of the list as herein provided, it shall be the duty of the county treasurer to collect the license and penalty.

It shall be the duty of the sheriff of the county to forthwith proceed to the collection of the unpaid fees and penalties as certified to him by county treasurer by taking possession of the motor vehicle described in said certified list and proceed to advertise and sell same upon ten (10) day's notice for purpose of collecting fees, penalties and costs. Said certified list shall for all purposes be a sufficient warrant therefor. The procedure of the sale of the motor vehicle for the collection of the license fees, penalties and costs shall be the same as that provided for the collection taxes on personal property by distress and sale as set forth in section 1406 of the Code. Should a motor vehicle on which the fee is delinquent be removed from the county in which it was originally registered, either by transfer or removal by owner to another county, without having notified the county treasurer or department of such transfer and the sheriff knowing to which county same was removed, may forward the warrant to the sheriff of the county where such motor vehicle is at that time, when he shall proceed to collect the same as tho the vehicle had been originally registered in his county, and make return to the county treasurer of the county from which he received the warrant.—Monitor.

ORGANIZING COUNTY POSTS OF AMERICAN LEGION

Organizers are in the field with the object of strengthening the American Legion organization by establishing a county organization in each of the 99 counties of the state for the purpose of drawing the various units of each county into closer cooperation and harmony.

The formation of a county post, says the Clarion Monitor, would in no way interfere with the working of the posts as units, but would broaden the influence of the local organizations and give them greater power and more representation in the higher units.

A plan of procedure outlined by one of our neighboring counties provides for the election by the convention of the county units of a temporary chairman and secretary, and by each post at its next regular meeting of the executive committee of the county unit. When all the committeemen are named the temporary chairman and secretary will call them together for a meeting. A permanent chairman and secretary will be elected by the executive committee. The committee will also complete the county organization and plan its various activities. All Legion members of the county are to be members of the county unit, but each post is to have but one delegate and but one vote, regardless of the size of membership.

Such an organization in Wright county might be beneficial in many ways, one of which we would suggest would be to hold an annual celebration of the part the American Legion took in winning a victory for the allies in the world war. This could be made an anual event each fall tht would draw greater crowds than any other event that might be conceived. The place of holding the event should be passed around among the various towns of the county with established units of the Legion.

Very little outside talent would be necessary to entertain the crowds, as prizes could be offered to bring out close competition between teams from the different units in drills and athletic events of various kinds, which, ogether with plenty of band music, and well decorated streets, and business houses would furnish entertainment for all. The Legion would be able to sell concessions for the events to an amount which would furnish a fund to care for the greater part of the expense incurred.

The meeting of the Community Welfare Club last Friday was attended by a large crowd. Many of those present were new members.

The membership drive was a big success. Mrs. A. E. Martin winning with 75 members, most of them being new ones who had never belonged to the club before. To each captain was given the eggs in her nest and Mrs. Martin's helpers each received a "bunny." The total membership of the club is now about 200.

If there are any ladies who were not solicited in the campaign, do not feel slighted or think you are not wanted, but come to the meetings, pay your dollar and you will be most cordially welcomed.

The bills for shrubrey for the city hall and for more play ground equipment were allowed.

The program, which was on furnishings and decorations for the home, was in charge of Mrs. Gfeller. It was very helpful and enjoyed by all.

Miss Florence Simerson entertained the club with a vocal solo and an instrumental trio by Pauline Peterson, Harriett Gowdy and Uneta Packard was enjoyed by all.

The serving committee with Mrs. Gowdy as chairman served ladyfingers and tea, while a pleasant social hour was spent.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE NEW PRESIDENT

The old is out and the new is in; what will the new be like?

That is a question which every citizen awaits an answer to. Harding's policies and actions will be as closely examined and scrutinized as those of any man who has ever occupied the presidential chair.

Harding, as the nominee, was not the popular choice; he was slipped in thru politics pure and simple. But since his nomination, the way he conducted his campaign, and the earnest and sincere way, together with his practical, common-sense methods and ideas since his election have done a great deal to gain him the public's favor, and he went into the White House with the best wishes and hopes of the great majority of the American people.

Harding's plain ways, his common sense and willingness to co-operate and work together with others have gained him a wide favor. The people were tired of one-man affairs, they believed with reason that two heads were better than one, and the fact that the new president started out, or in, by getting together with the rest of the men of affairs, has met with popular favor.

Of course, the country is expecting many things which it will not get; is expecting too much, more than can in reason be realized; but it expects many things which it will get or the present adminstration will be, as they said in the army, 'Out of luck" the next election. The Republican party has not by any means secured a long-time lease on the capitol at Washington; it is on trial, and according to the way it lives up to the promises made and the things expected depends its future. While the country was tired of the old rule, the country by no means put out one in order to get another just as bad.

Woodrow Wilson left the White House with the sentiment of the nation mostly against him. His rule had been too autocratic, too much "I" and not enough "we." But time will greatly change the sentiment and the feeling of the American people towards him. He will never go down, in the opinion of this paper, as the greatest man of the nation's history, as some think, but he will in future be credited with what he has done. One of the greatest men of his time. For Wilson accomplished much that in their displeasure the majority of people have overlooked, and the future will give him credit for the things he has done. His one great fault was his famous "single-track" mind, and his failure to consult others was one of his greatest failures.

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The attendance at all the services last Sounday was good. The Sunday school started the new quarter with a number above the high mark. The evening attendance was considerable above the average. The young people choir added much to the service and their assuming the responsibility for them guarantees good music for that service. Come and enjoy the services with us.

The ladies of the Aid society will hold a social afternoon in the parlors of the church on Thursday. This is a good place to get acquainted and you are invited to come.

The Sabbath school opens at 10:00 a. m. and the morning worship is held at 11:00. The evening services begin at 8:00 and close in an hour. We invite you to worship with us.

roads in Wright and all other Iowa counties for that matter, is for the transportation of its farm products to market. To support any measure that will delay bringing about such a condition is a mistake.—Monitor.

W. Werheim of Eagle Grove for $8,000, alleged damages arising out of a Montana land deal. He alleges that in December, 1918, he was induced to purchase an undivided one-sixth interest in 5,730 acres of land in the Rosebud in Montana, on the representation that it was all good soil, with a climate adapted to the growth of general farm crops; that the land was covered with a growth of grass which made it valuable for pasture; that land was worth on the market for $15 an acre; that it was mortgaged for $3,340. But, the plaintiff alleges, the land was not worth more than $3 per acre to the defendant's knowledge, and that the mortgage was in excess of $3,340; that it was desert land, growng sage brush only, and because of the alleged fraudulent representations, he was bound to pay $11,340, being damaged in the sum of $8,000, which he asks.

R. F. Taylor is suing the Northern Iowa Gas & Electric Co., of Eagle Grove, for $50. He alleges that on March 7 he was passing by company's plant in Eagle Grove at a time when the plant was discharging such quantities of steam that he could not see his way; that a team and vehicle ran into his auto, damaging it $50.

Joseph Nadland is suing Chas. Long to recover $60.75, alleged to be due for corn and hay raised on plaintiff's farm and sold by the defendant contrary to the terms of the lease which had been entered into and signed by both parties, but which he cannot set out because lease has been lost. The defendant answers this petition denying each and every allegation, and asks for dismissal of the suit with costs to be taxed to the plaintiff.

The First National Bank of Belmond is suing R. E. Webb to collect $101, due on note, with interest.

H. Forrestal is suing the Belmond Construction Co., et al, to collect a balance of $366.63, alleged to be due for sawing which plaintiff states was done on a contract.

W. H. Jenison is suing Harm Menke to collect $215 alleged to be due on notes past due.

LOCAL GIRL RECEIVES HIGH HONOR AT COE

The following clipping from the Cedar Rapids Republican of recent date will be of interest to all Belmond people, as it concerns a local young lady who has been highly honored by Coe College at that city:

The new officers of the Coe Young Womens' Christian Association—the new president and her cabinet—were installed with beautiful and impressive ceremonies at the regular meeting in Sinclair Memorial chapel, Wednesday morning.

The Coe Y. W. C. A. is the strongest college Y. in the middle west. It is active on the campus and in Cedar Rapids. Under the leadership of Miss Martin, this association has done a great deal of work in the past year. Its social service department has been doing work in all parts of the city. Nine phases of this activity, including missionary classes at Kenwood, are featured.

Entertainments at the home for the Friendless, and at the Home for Aged Women, reserves in the schools of the city, leadership of summer clubs for girls, hospital work, work among the industrial girls with physical training classes, and work at the Mexican settlement, are included. This work was especially aided and furnished by a Coe student whose home is in Mexico. This young woman was able to help a great many of the people by her personal attention this winter.

Miss Beatrice Leinbach is the new president. She is a Junior in school, having spent her first year at Des Moines college, but in the short time she has been here Miss Leinbach has won reconition in many of the activities of the school. She is also vice president of the Womens' Athletic Council and hocky manager, a member of the Glee Club, captain of the Junior basketball team, president of the Alethia Literary society and a member of the Cosmos staff. In addition she is an advanced student in organ and voice.

F. J. Nolan, of Fort Dodge, Geo. Dauber of Estherville, and J. S. Clemens of Mason City, traveling agents for the American Railway Express company, were in town yesterday looking over the field for consolidating the three express offices, making one central office up town. The three gentlemen took average of the past six months, and found that a consolidation would be a fine thing for all concerned. It will now be placed before the general manager for the O. K. of that gentleman and of the vice president. If they consider the matter favorably, the much needed and wanted consolidation will take place. J. S. White has been named for agent of the consolidated offices.

As an example of the way business is in the job printing line, the Independent had some work last week for a local lawyer which required, according to low, certain size type, which the Independent does not have on its linotype. Phone calls were tried to both Clarion shops, to Hampton, and to three places in Mason City, in an effort to secure this type set up. Seven calls in all were tried and not a place had time to do the work now; all were too busy with work already contracted.

—I—

John Kent, a brother of Will Kent of this place, died at his home in Dows last week, funeral services being held at that place. Deceased was well known to a number of local people.

Mrs. Ole Lein returned last week from a two-month's visit at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James Hanson, and family, of Hartland, Minnesota. She says they had a fine winter at that place, altho it got rather cold several times, much more so than it did here.

—I—

Charley Papousek went to Des Moines last week, to see his mother, who lives there and who has been very ill the past week or so. Other relatives from Garner were also called to her bedside.

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.

In the little town of Gitcheapolis small Dan Failing dreams boyish dreams, tinctured with melancholy over his supposed physical weakness. There, years later, he meets Destiny.

BOOK I—REPATRIATION.

CHAPTER I.—Warned by his physician that he has not more than six months to live, Failing sits despondently on a park bench, wondering where he should spend those six months. A friendly squirrel practically decides the matter for him. His blood is pioneer blood, and he decides to end his days in the forests of Oregon. Memories of his grandfather and a deep love for all things of the wild help him in reaching a decision.

CHAPTER II.—In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the household are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. His extreme weakness in the face of even a slight exertion convinces him that the doctor had made a correct diagnosis of his case.

CHAPTER III.—From the first Failing's health shows a marked improvement, and in the companionship of Lennox and his son and daughter he fits into the woods life as if he had been born to it. By quick thinking and a remarkable display of "nerve" he saves Lennox's life and his own when they are attacked by a mad coyote. Lennox declares he is a reincarnation of his grandfather, Dan Failing I, whose fame as a woodsman is a household word.

BOOK TWO—THE DEBT.

CHAPTER I.—Dan, now thoroughly proficient in woods lore, learns from Lennox that an organized band of outlaws, of which Bert Cranston is the leader, is making trouble in the vicinity. Landry Hildreth, a former member of the gang, has been induced to turn state's evidence. On his way to the city Hildreth is waylaid by Cranston, shot, and left for dead. Cranston, however, overlooked the fact that Hildreth might have documentary evidence on his person, and is satisfied that his enemy will never reach the city to tell what he knows of the operations of the gang.

CHAPTER II.—A cougar, on a personal hunting expedition, finds Hildreth in a thicket, where he had crawled after being shot by Cranston. The cougar finishes Cranston's work, and in striking down man becomes a forest outlaw. Failing, on his way home from a visit to "Snowbird's" lookout station, comes upon Cranston in the act of starting a forest fire. The men quarrel and fight. Failing is no match for the sturdy mountaineer and is saved from death only by the intervention of "Snowbird," who drives the outlaw from his victim by threatening him with a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—Cranston grossly insults the girl. Failing promises her he will punish him when he has fully recovered his strength, and the girl looks on the promise as a compact. A few days later Silas Lennox, while chopping wood in the forest, is pinned under a falling branch and badly hurt. "Snowbird" finds her father and gets him safely to the house and to bed.

CHAPTER IV.—The girl sets out across the Divide, in the darkness, to bring a physician. She has a sense that she is being stalked by some animal, and becomes uneasy. Dan, who had been shooting, arrives home and finds Lennox. Both Lennox and Dan fear for "Snowbird's" safety, and Dan at once sets out to overtake her. The animal stalking the girl is the cougar which had finished Hildreth, now become a hunter of man. Failing arrives only just in time to save the girl's life, and in that manner pays part of the debt he owes her. As evidence of Dan's returning strength he strangles the animal, which, though wounded by a revolver shot from "Snowbird's" weapon, was a most formidable enemy.

BOOK THREE—THE PAYMENT.

CHAPTER I.—Hildreth's disappearance is unaccounted for until Dan finds his mutilated body and near it the evidence which will send Cranston to the gallows and break up the outlaw gang. A record cold winter sets in. Cranston, suspecting that Hildreth's evidence is in existence, visits the Lennox home in the absence of Dan and "Snowbird," to search for it. He fails to find it, and in his rage and disappointment sets fire to the house. Lennox being powerless to stop him. The almost helpless man drags himself outside.

Then the rifle spoke again, and a second wolf—a large male that crouched on the other side of the sled—fell kicking in the snow. The pack had leaped forward at the first death; but they halted at the second. And then terror came to them when the third wolf suddenly opened its savage lips and screamed in the death agony.

Up to this time, except for the report of the rifle, the attack had been made in utter silence. The reason was just that both breath and nervous force are needed to shout; and Dan Failing could afford to waste neither of these vital forces. He had dropped to his knee, and was firing again and again, his gray eyes looking clear and straight along the barrel, his fingers without jerk or tremor pressing again and again at the trigger, his hands holding the rifle as in a vise. Every nerve and muscle were completely in his command. The distance was far, yet he shot with deadly, amazing accuracy. The wolves were within a few feet of the girl, and a fraction's waver in the gun barrel might have sped his bullet toward her.

"It's Dan Failing," Lennox shouted as the fourth wolf died.

Then Snowbird snatched her pistol from her father's hand and opened fire. The two shells were no longer needed to free herself and her father from the agony of fangs. She took careful aim, and although a pistol is never as accurate or as powerful as a rifle, she killed one wolf and wounded another.

Frenzied in their savagery, three or four of the remaining wolves leaped at the body of one of the wounded; but the others scattered in all directions. Still Dan fired with the same unbelievable accuracy, and still the wolves died in the snow. The girl and the man were screaming now in the frenzied joy of deliverance. The wolves scurried frantically among the trees; and some of them unknowingly ran full in the face of their enemy, to be shot down without mercy. And few indeed were those that escaped—to collect on a distant ridge, and, perhaps, to be haunted in dream by a death that came out of the shadows to blast the pack.

Again the pack song would be despairing and strange in the winter nights—that age old chant of Famine and Fear and the long war of existence with only Death and Darkness in the end. And because it is the voice of the wilderness itself, the tenderfoot that camps in the evergreen forest will listen, and his talk will die at his lips, and he will have the beginnings of knowledge. And perhaps he will wonder if God has given him the thews and fiber to meet the wilderness breast to breast as Dan had met it; to remain and to fight and to conquer. And thereby his metal will be tested in the eyes of the Red Gods.

Snowbird stood waiting in the snow, arms stretched to her forester as Dan came running through the wood. But his arms were wider yet, and she went softly into them.

• • • • • • • • • • •

"We will take it easy from now on," Dan Failing told them, after the camp

"We Will Take It Easy From Now On."

was cleared of its dead and the fire was built high. "We have plenty of food; and we will travel a little while each day and make warm camps at night. We'll have friendship fires, just as sometimes we used to build on the ridge."

"But after you get down in the valleys?" Lennox asked anxiously. "Are you and Snowbird coming up here to live?"

The silence fell over their camp; and a wounded wolf whined in the darkness. "Do you think I could leave it now?" Dan asked. By no gift of words could he have explained why; yet he knew that by token of his conquest, his spirit was wedded to the dark forests forever. "But heaven knows what I'll do for a living."

Snowbird crept near him, and her eyes shone in the bright fire light. "I've solved that," she said. "You know you studied forestry—and I told the supervisor at the station how much you knew about it. I wasn't going to tell you until—until certain things happened—and now they have happened, I can't wait another instant. He said that with a little more study you could get into the forest service—take an examination and become a ranger. You're a natural forester if one ever lived, and you'd love the work."

"Besides," Lennox added, "it would clip my Snowbird's wings to make her live on the plains. My big house will be rebuilt, children. There will be fires in the fire place on the fall nights. There is no use of thinking of the plains."

"And there's going to be a smaller house—just a cottage at first—right beside it," Dan replied. He could go back to his forests, after all. He wouldn't have to throw away his birthright, fought for so hard; and it seemed to him no other occupation could offer so much as that of the forest rangers—those silent, cool-nerved guardians of the forest and keepers of its keys.

For a long time Snowbird and he stood together at the edge of the firelight, their bodies warm from the glow, their hearts brimming with words they could not utter. Words always come hard to the mountain people. They are folk of action, and Dan, rather than to words, trusted to the yearning of his arms.

"We're made for each other, Snowbird, darling," he told her breathlessly at last. "And at last I can claim what I've been waiting for all these months."

He claimed it; and in open defiance to all civil law, he collected fully 100 times in the next few minutes. But it didn't particularly matter, and Snowbird didn't even turn her face. "Maybe you've forgotten you claimed it when you first came back, too," she said.

So he had. It had completely slipped his mind, in the excitement of his fight with the wolf pack. And then while Lennox pretended to be asleep, they sat, breathless with happiness, on the edge of the sled and watched the dawn come out.

They had never seen the snow so lovely in the sunlight.

[THE END.]

GARNER HAS SOME MOONSHINE EXCITEMENT

Garner Signal: Some moonshiners and bootleggers have thought they were getting off easy when they were being fined $5 or $100 after entering pleas of guilty in district court. But they are going to find out differently before the government gets thru with them. Mike Senna, a beet weeder, entered a plea of guilty and was given a small fine for moonshining. Now comes a request from the government to come across with a sum that makes his fine look like nothing. He is fined $2,000 for having a still in his possession illegally. He is charged a federal tax of $6.40 a gallon for making whiskey. The first notice from the government called for a payment of about $3,500, and because he doesn't pay it he is drawing a fine of $100 a month. In time there is going to be quite an amount piled up against him. In his case, it doesn't matter so much, as he can't pay it, but this will probably be a lesson for some others to learn from, as the fine would be collected, if he was worth it.

MRS. ANSON AVERY

Lovina Philo was born in upper Sandusky, Ohio, January 22, 1831, and died at Garner, Iowa, March 24, 1921, aged 90 years, 2 months and 2 days. She was united in marriage to Anson Avery, Sept. 9, 1847, and in 1854 she with her husband left Michigan in an immigrant wagon for Iowa, and arriving in Hancock county, settled in what is now known as Avery township, becoming one of the earliest settlers of the county. Her husband was called by death November 22, 1903, leaving the heroic woman who had with him shared the hardships of pioneer days. Since her husband's death she has made her home at Goodell and Garner.

She was the mother of six children, four of whom survive her. Alice, the oldest, the wife of Marshall Fuller of Alberta, Arkansas, and George Avery of Belmond, who was the first white male child born in Hancock county, Mary E., wife of A. W. Schmalle of Garner, and Louis G. Avery of Goodell. One son died in infancy and Layton who died early in manhood, leaving a son, Layton E. Avery who was cared for by his grandparents. Grandma Avery was a remarkable woman. Her whole life was active and unselfish. She lived to see the fifth generation and when the call came she sweetly fell asleep.

She united with the Methodist church in early life and afterwards was identified with the United Brethern and Congregational church. Thus has passed another hero of the great conflict of converting the wild west into fertile fields. Her work is done. She rests from her labors.

The children were all present at the funeral. She also leaves besides the four children, 15 grandchildren, 27 greatgrandchildren and five great great grandchildren.Garner Signal.

WAVERLY SUGAR FACTORY NOT TO RUN THIS YEAR

The million dollar sugar factory at Waverly will not operate this coming season, according to reports from authentic sources. The low price of sugar is given as the reason for closing down the plant, which was recently remodled at a cost of about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The plant was built about ten years ago and ran for several years, then closed down for a period of eight years. Last season the plant made around four million pounds of beet sugar, and had contracted for an acreage this year of 2,500 acres. About three hundred men are idle as the result of closing the factory.

SOME ANCIENT HISTORY

Mr. Luick dropped into the Independent office one day last week and told us some "ancient history" of the town. He had been to the Englat funeral anl his thoughts ran in queer channels.

The first cemetery, says Mr. Luick, was started on the hill west of town, across the river, and there are three graves over there now, on land belonging to Henry Groen. They are th graves of Mrs. Andrew Dumond and her child, who died of disease about 1855 or '56, Mr. Luick recollects and were buried on the highest spot on the hill across the ravine north of the Baldridge home. The third grave is that of an Englishman, whose name is not known, and who froze to death. He had a claim on the south side of what is now known as East Lake, near Kanawha, living in a log cabin and trapping mostly for a living. In the midst of winter he ran out of food, and started for Belmond to procure some. He was caught in a blizzard, lost his way, and was found west of Hickory grove frozen.

The present cemetery was donated, the original ground, by Henry Luick and Dr. McNutt, the latter a sort of traveling herb doctor. The first burial was that of Mary E. Clifford, a granddaughter of McNutt, Clifford residing then on what is now known as the Pletch farm east of town, or in that neighborhood.

Who knows some more "ancient history"? If you know any unusual or interesting incidents of Belmond's early days, send them in, the Independent will be glad to print them.

Telephone Depreciation

Some folks think that there is no depreciation expense in a telephone plant; that the ordinary upkeep of the plant--"the current repairs"--offset all depreciation.

The principal objection to this idea is that it isn't true. Let us take a familiar illustration---your automobile tires; you repair the punctures and blowouts and lengthen the life of the tire, but it wears out just the same.

The cure for depreciation is enlire replacement---poles rot, wires rust, switchboard and equipment give out.

First National and State Bank In New Home

Consolidated Banks Now Doing Business In Fine New Building—All Accounts Are Transfered.

LIST OF OFFICERS NEXT WEEK

This week is moving week for the First National and State banks, who transfered their records to the new building yesterday and are now doing business at the new place.

With this move the First National Bank goes out of exhistance, consolodating with the State Bank and forming a new bank to be known as the State Bank of Belmond, with a capital of $80,000.

The affairs of the First National, notes, accounts, money, etc., have been transfered to the State Bank and the business of the First National's customers will be given the same attention and care at the new bank as was given at the old. Checks on the First National will be honored at the State.

The officials of the First National Bank wish to thank their customers for the patronage they have given them in the past, and to assure them that they will be protected and welcomed to the new institution.

The list of officials of the new bank is not now completed, but is expected to be ready for announcement some time next week.

GARNET SELMA CHAPMAN

Garnet Selma Chapman, youngest child of J. E. and Julia A. Chapman, was born on the home farm south of Belmond, July 19, 1919, and died at the family home in Belmond on April 5, 1921, at the age of one year, eight months and sixteen days. Garnet Sema was the youngest of nine children, six brothers, John, Charles, Edwin, Harvey, Elmer and Grant, and two sisters, Daisy and Slyvia, still living. Aside from these a large number of other relatives mourn her early death.

She was a very sweet and loving child, and being about nine years younger than the next youngest member of the family held an exceptional place in the affection of the home. While she had never been a real strong and healthy child, yet her baby innocence and sweet and patient disposition made her a joy and comfort to all.

"Dear little hands, I miss them so!
All thru the day wherever I go—
All thru the night, how lonely it seems,
For no little hands wake out of my dreams.
I miss them all thru the weary hours,
I miss them as others miss sunshine and flowers;
Daytime or nightime, wherever I go,
Dear ittle hands, I miss them so."

Funeral services were conducted from the Methodist Episcopal church in charge of Rev. J. H. Edge, Thursday afternoon and interment made in the Franklin Grove cemetery.

NEED A FARM HAND?

If any farmer in this vicinity is in need of a farm hand, call at this office and we'll supply the demand. The supply of labor seems to be much greater than last year, for the Independent had seven answers to a "blind" local ad last month in which a man was wanted for work on the farm. This paper has had probably a half dozen inquiries within the past week or ten days, from young men seeking work. So if any farmer reader of the Independent needs any help, if he will let us know we will be glad to locate a man for him, at no charge whatever.

Charley Johnson was reported as being on the sick list last week a few days, but is better now.

TWO CLARION MEN LEASE CORNELIA PAVILION

Two Members of Goslin Orchestra Lease And Will Hold Dances Twice A Week.

Two young men from Clarion, R. M. Goslin and D. H. Warner, have secured a lease on the dance pavilion at Lake Cornelia, and are planning on holding dances there twice a week thruout the summer season. They expect to remodel the pavilion, adding to the length, roofing in the structure and screening it all around. They plan to employ a watchman, to look after the cars of those who drive to the dances, and will furnish the music with their own orchestra for most of the dances, bringing in an outside orchestra about once a month.

This will doubtless make Cornelia the Mecca of the younger set this summer, as the improvements planned will overcome the greatest objections that have been held to the pavilion.

CLARION BAND TO START CONCERTS NEXT MONTH

The Clarion Municipal band according to the Clipper expects to start the season with a concert soon indoors and following this, after a couple weeks rehearsal, will start the regular season's concerts within a couple of weeks. The Clipper says in part: "The band will be a credit to the community and when the open air concerts start there is no doubt but that they will attract people from our trade territory and beyond."

Bert Fisher, County Sheriff Dies Suddenly

After Weeks Of Illness And Bitterly Fought Battle For Life, Sheriff Dies At Rochester Hospital.

FUNERAL AT EAGLE GROVE

Wright county was saddened Sunday when the news arrived that Bert Fisher, Sheriff of the county, had died at the hospital at Rochester that morning at 7:30 o'clock, after weeks of illness and a hard-fought battle for life.

Sheriff Fisher probably had more friends in the county than any other man in it. He was a splendid character, an honorable and upright man and made friends wherever he went. He had been sheriff for three terms and began this year on his fourth term. As a police official he was second to none in the state and made Wright county a county that was to be steered clear off by crooks of every character.

Bert Fisher was born at Campaign, Illinois, on May 30, 1870. The family came to Iowa when he was a young boy, locating first at Webster City, where they remained for two years and then moved to Eagle Grove. He was a police officer at that place for twelve years, for six years he was then deputy sheriff. He was married on January 1, 1896, at Woolstock to Frank R. France, to which union six children were born, five boys and one girl.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at the home of his sister, Mrs. W. C. Smith, at Eagle Grove. Court was adjourned and the bar went to the funeral in a body, the court house officials sending a fine floral offering. A large delegation of Clarion friends attended the funeral.

Mr. Fisher's mother died some years ago, his father still living and making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Smith, at Eagle Grove.

It is understood that Mr. Fisher's death was due to pancrea. An autopsy was held at Rochester.

Miss Marie Leavy and sister Beatrice returned last week from their visit with friends and relatives at Grinnell.

Civil War Veteran And Old Settler Dies On Sunday

Well Known Citizen Dies After Only Short Illness—Came Here In Early Days.

FUNERAL SERVICES ON MONDAY

The community was shocked and grieved Sunday when the news was given out that D. L. Cuppett, one of the old settlers and a veteran of the Civil War, had died at his home here that morning. Mr. Cuppett was one of the town's best-known and most popular citizens, and his passing is mourned by the entire community. Funeral services were held Monday at the Congregational church, with the Rev. Leinbach in charge. The following obituary was read:

David L. Cuppett was born on December 25, 1841, in Bedford county, Pa. In 1852 Mr. Cuppett's father moved with his family to Delaware county, Iowa. David attended the public school until he was old enough to go to work in a pottery where he was employed for four years, when on September 10, 1861, he enlisted at Dubuque in Co. G, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry. He first served under General Curtis at the battle of Pea Ridge, Missouri, on March 6, 7, 8, 1862. On March 7 Mr. Cuppett received a wound in the right shoulder and he was sent home on a two months' furlough. He returned to the army in July and took part in the western campaign and was in the battles of Chickasaw, Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Brandon and Cherokee, Miss, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge in Tenn., and Ringgold, Georgia. He came home on furlough in 1863 and received as honorbale discharge on Jan. 1, 1864. He again enlisted on the same day and took part in many battles in Georgia, So. Carolina and North Carolina. He took part in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., and was honorably discharged at Louisville, Ky., July 18, 1865. He was promoted to the rank of corporal in May, 1864, and in two days was promoted to Orderly Sergeant. He was later promoted to second Lieutenant and served for a time in this capacity, but never received his commission.

After Mr. Cuppett's discharge from the army he returned to his home at Dubuque, where he became a partner with his former employer in the pottery business. He continued in this relation for two and a half years when he returned to Colesburg, where he purchased an interest in a general store. He remained in Colesburg for about two years and a half when he moved to Belmond in the fall of 1871. Here he was first engaged in the hardware business with Mr. E. S. Hubbard. This partnership continued for several years when Mr. Cuppett bought out his partner and continued the business alone.

In 1891 Mr. Cuppett sold out his hardware interest to Val Griesy and devoted his attention to the implement business until the year 1906 when he sold out to Mr. Harry Tyrrel.

Mr. Cuppett was married to Lucretia K. Hubbard on Sept. 24, 1866 at Colesburg, Iowa. To this union six children were born three of whom suhvive their father, Arthur B. and Mrs. Bailey of Belmond, and Mrs. Sara F. Englat of LaVina, Montana. The deceased children were Mrs. Mary A. Thake, who died Oct. 24, 1919, Lee H., who died Sept. 10,1914, and Harold S. who died Nov. 7, 1884. Mr. Cuppett's wife died on April 26, 1917.

Mr. Cuppett was made a Mason by King Solomon lodge No. 210 on Feb. 9, 1883. He was a charter member of the Odd Fellows lodges of Belmond and also of lodge of the Grand Army of the Republic. He has held many places of trust both in the town and community and was one of few who saw this communiy when it was almost naked prairie grow to the thriving town and community.

There were twelve children in Mr. Cuppett's father's family, only one brother is still living, Mr. Wm. M. Cuppett of Cresco, Iowa, who has been for some time an invalid.

Besides the three children Mr. Cuppett leaves eleven grandchildren and six great grandchildren, and a large circle of friends and neighbors who mourn his death.

FREEZE FRIDAY AND SATURDAY HURTS LITTLE

Heavy Freeze Visits This Vicinity Last Week But Does Not Injure Fruit Much.

This vicinity was visited by a good solid cold snap on last Friday night, the weather turning colder suddenly in the late afternoon. The freeze that night withered some of the gardens which were more advanced, but little damage is reported to the fruit trees. The cold snap was followed the next day by continued cold weather, with intermittant spits of snow thruout the day, and Saturday night sufficient snow fell to lightly cover the ground.

JOHN FINLEY KENT

John Finley Kent, a brother of Wm. Kent of Belmond and uncle of Miss Rena Purdy of this place, was born at Middletown, Ohio, on August 6, 1844, and died at his home in Dows last week. He came to Illinois with the family in 1849, residing there two years and then moving to Cedar county, Iowa. A few years later he move to Wright county where he had since made his home except for about a year and a half, which he spent in Alden. He assisted his father on the farm until he was 25 years of age, then he married and moved to Belmond where for several years he ran a hotel, known as the old Kern House. He retired from the hotel business and was engaged in the furniture and agriculture business here. He moved to Dows in 1881. [illegible] services and interment were at that place.

Explains Why School Taxes Are So High

Raise In Teacher's Wages Not The Cause For High Tax Rate For Belmond This Year.

OLD WARRANTS BEING PAID OFF

A number of patrons have inquired concerning the high rate of school tax this year, hence the following statement may be of interest to others:

The advance made in teacher's salaries the past year has caused only a small increase in the tax rate, but we have been compelled to add two extra teachers to take care of the increased enrollment in the grades during the past two years. In addition to the above, the Board levied an extra tax to pay off a large number of warrants which have been carried for a number of years at 6 per cent interest and no fund set aside to call them in.

Unless something unforseen happens, the school tax rate will be considerable lower next year.—E. S. yler.

Klemme high school came to Belmond last Friday to play ball, but the weatherman decided that it was too early to start the season and sent a rain and cold wave. Klemme is reported to have a very good team for a small village, and undoubtedly we will cross bats with them later in the season.

The boys are experiencing difficulty in securing cars to take them to Dows where they play their first game of baseball this season. The high school scedule depends upon the ability of te players to return games.

The Normal Training club will meet Saturday, April 16, at 8 o'clock. Miss Quigley will give a fourth grade language demonstration. Special ef-

PLANT WILL BE SHUT DOWN 'TIL NEXT YEAR

Lack Of Necessary Funds Is Given As Reason For Closing Factory Until Next Season.

MASON CITY TO TAKE BEETS

Acreage Of Over Four Thousand To Be Taken Over By Plant At Mason City.

The plant of the Iowa Valley Sugar Company will not operate this year.

This informaton was given from authentic quarters Monday, and is the first official word given out as to the future policy of the company.

The factory will be closed, the force in all lines cut down to the barest necessity, and only sufficient force retained to keep the plant from deteriorating.

The company had contracted for over four thousand acres of beets for the 1921 season, and this acreage it is understood has been transfered to the company at Mason City, who will receive and pay for the beets the same as the company here.

The reason given for ceasing operation is first and foremost the lack of sufficient funds. As is very well known, the plant here was operated at a loss last year, due primarily to the high labor cost and the drop in sugar prices. The company was undercapitalized to start with, the cost of construction was larger than expected, and they had insufficient reserve funds to carry them thru the coming season.

The company, to meet its pressing obligations and those of the preparatory campaign for the operating season, has to have the assurance of $200,000. Owing to present conditions of the money market, it has not been able to obtain this assurance and the directors considered the wisest thing to do was to suspend operations for this season.

There will be no overhauling of the plant this year, simply care taken of the factory to prevent excessive deterioration.

The factory will resume operations next year, for the 1922 season, and the interim will be used to get the affairs of the company squared away so that operations can be resumed next year. The sugar company is not "broke," as some of the wildest rumonrs have had it—there are far more assets than liabilities—but no concern can operate without liquid capital, or ready money, and this the company, owing to the loss sustained in its initial campaign, has not.

The closing of the factory means a large financial loss to the community, and the coming year will drive the fact home to many. The company has placed into circulation in this vicinity from one to two million dollars during the time it has been in course of construction and operation, money which the town and the community would not have had otherwise. The lack of this amount or even half of it the coming year will be felt in nearly every line of business.

The company last year dispensed around five hundred thousands for beets, grow by the farmers in and around Belmond. The payroll for the operaing season was close to one hundred thousand dollars, and the purchases of supplies and materials locally and in the state ran into the tens of thousands. How much was paid out locally for labor cannot be definitely given, but that it ran into many thousands no one can doubt.

BELMOND BOY TAKES CHARGE OF MOVIE

Pat Champlin of Dows, a former Belmond boy and well known here, has taken charge of the moving picture theatre at Lakota, and left last week to assume his new duties. Pat has been engaged with his father, in the restaurant business.

FREE AIR!

Did you ever stop to think of the news that isn't printed?

In any community, the most interesting news—from some angles—is the news that never sees print.

Take it right here in Belmond; a quiet, peaceful, little town; if the newspapers were to spill all they have on file, great would be the sensation therefrom!

Boy howdy!

And the editors would be dodging bullets at every corner.

But editors get used to dodging bricks and bullets and other household utensils. If an M. D. makes a mistake its buried; if a preacher makes one the judge fixes it; but when ye ed makes one—good night.

Queer what the printed word will do, isn't it? And how folks will take it.

This paper was the mark for the verbal whiz bangs of some folks a while ago for not splurging in red ink a sensation that was going the rounds. They just ripped us up and down and then tore us across. We didn't print the news; we were controlled, spineless, toadying to the Upper Class, so on and so forth and also.

One guy who roasted us the hardest never stopped to think that nothing had been said when he got stewed, pulled and fined—which was "news."

It makes a difference whose tire is punctured, doesn't it?

Did the freeze hurt your garden? If you need any good rich dirt to start another, you can get all kinds of it free of charge, paying just for the hauling. Where? Off the pavements.

Grand Jury Investigating John Berg Case

Grand Jury Reported To Be Looking Into Case Of Local Cashier Who Misappropriated Funds.

RESULT NOT KNOWN SO FAR

Clipper—The outstanding feature of district court, which convened this week, is a thoro investigation of the John Berg case from Belmond, in which Berg, former cashier, is facing probable indictment for embezzlement. Many witnesses from Belmond, including bank officials, have been subpoenaed and are giving testimony before the grand jury. It is not thought that this case will be disposed of before next week some time, as the investigation is a slow and tedious one, and is believed to be covering a period of several years back, when the speculations are thought to have commenced.

That Berg not only stole money from the bank, but from the bank's customers as well is rumored. One account goes that one of the bank's good customers lost several thousands in Liberty bonds which Berg appropriated to his own use. The bonds were in the custody of the bank. Another story is to the effect that one customer lost several thousands deposited there against a land payment last March, Berg failing to place the deposit on the books and appropriating it to his own use also.

The fact that Berg had apparantly effected some kind of a settlement with the stockholders of the bank is cutting no figure with the grand jury in the investigation. Public sentiment is behind the officials in this action, and will endorse the investigation and prosecution, should the facts warrant it. Berg is said to have lost large sums of money in land speculations, some of it going into Montana land deals. A few years ago he is reported to have made some big money on a Minnesota land deal, but his later ventures probably swallowed the profits of the successful venture. The

MISS IMLAY RECOMMENDS MORE MILK

Miss Florence Imlay, milk utilization specialist from the Extension Department at Ames, has just completed a campaign in Wright county for the purpose of urging the more general use of milk and milk products.

Miss Imlay's talk on milk were directed particularly to the growing boys and girls in the various schools of the county. In impressing upon the minds of the young folks the use of more milk the specialist compared the growing body of a child to the building of a house and pointed out how necessary it is to have the different materials in completing the structure.

In speaking of foods for nutrition of the body Miss Imlay said that many people are actually starving to death not because they have insufficient food but simply because they have not the proper kinds of food and explained quite in detail how necessary the use of milk is to the body and especially to the growing child since a young person who is developing requires so much lime for the building of bones. According to Miss Imlay four cups of whole milk are equal to 46 average potatoes and 36 pounds of beefsetak in lime content. She explained also how the lime that is found in milk is used in building good hard strong teeth and went on to say that experiments have shown that people with soft and decayed teeth have been found to be persons not using milk.

One of the most convincing parts of Miss Imlay's lecture was the display of the pictures of two rats which had been experimented with to determine the value of milk in an average diet used by the human which was given those two rats. Both rats were fed the same ration except that milk was added in one case and it was found that at the end of the experiments the rat which had received milk in its ration was bigger, healthier, more active and in general exhibited more "pep" in its actions while the other rat grew poor and lifeless.

Everyone who heard Miss Imlay talk is thoroly convinced that more milk should be used in the preparation of our foods because it is one of the best balanced foods that is known.

BLAIN HOME TALENT

Members of the Blaine township Farm Bureau spent considerable time during the winter months in preparation for giving the play "Prairie Rose," which was given recently at Dows, Belmond, Galt, Rowan and Blairsburg.

Those who took part in this home talent play should be congratulated upon the splendid showing made in presenting the play. Those who saw the play report that the various parts were well handled and everyone who took part in the play should feel that their efforts were highly appreciated.

This is another instance of the people of Blaine township showing their ability to enlist the talent of their home community in the service and entertainment of their own community. We understand that the proceeds of this play are to go in part towards financing the next picnic which is to be held in the picnic park just north of Dows some time next June under the auspices of the Farm Bureau of Blaine and Vernon townships of Wright county and Morgan and Oakland townships of Franklin county.

IS YOUR FARM FREE FROM T. B?

Records which have been compiled by the state veterinarian show a very high per cent of cattle tested to be affected by the deadly disease of tuberculosis. In most cases where tuberculosis was present in the cattle the other animals on the farm including the chickens and hogs were also found to be affected by this disease. In many cases it has also been found that where tuberculosis was present in the livestock of the farm the children of the family were also affected with the disease.

In many cases people think that by using milk from a healthy looking animal they are not running a chance of contracting the disease by the use of the milk, but it very often occurs that the healthiest looking animal is the one affected with these disease germs. Since it is possible for any farmer to have his herd tested for tuberculosis free of charge under government supervision it would seem that every farmer should know whether or not the milk which is used by the family contains the deadly tuberculosis germs. Applications for tuberculin testing of herds may be had by applying to the county agent.

MUCH POOR SEED DUMPED IN IOWA

Iowa is the dumping ground for much low grade clover and grass seed and in many cases as high as 50,000 Canadian thistle seeds are sown per acre along with this seed, says H. D. Hughes, chief of farm crops at the Iowa experiment station at Ames. "In few states," says Mr. Hughes, "has as much low grade seed been sold as in Iowa in the past years."

Last year one lot of two tons of seed was shipped into one Iowa county as "pure." Upon examination it was found to contain 64.6 per cent timothy, 8.8 per cent alfalfa, 7.7 per cent red clover, 16 per cent millet, 2.8 per cent red top and 2.5 per cent weed and several other small percentages of other weeds.

Each pound of this mixture contained an average of 23,000 weed seed consisting of thirty different kinds, among which were Canadian thistle, buckthorn and dock. When the farmers refused to pay for this seed, which they had thought before the test to be fine, the seed company explained by saying they thought a mistake had been made and screenings had been sent.

Another farmer bought what was said to be good clover seed which when tested was found to contain fourteen kinds of weed seed. He returned it to the seedman and took a substitute clover which looked better. This he planted before testing because it looked btter and then a later test showed it to contain 21 kinds of weed seeds.

Samples containing as high as 29 kinds of noxious weeds have been sold running as high as 10,000 seeds to the pound and this was paid for at first class seed prices.

FREEZE DID NOT HURT IOWA

"Iowa farmers have no great need to be alarmed over reports of heavy loss of fruit due to the cold weather we have had, according to C. V. Holsinger, extension specialist in horticulture at Iowa State College. Prof. Holsinger just returned from a trip thru all of southern Iowa and parts of Missouri and Kansas as far south as Kansas City, where studied the effects of the recent freeze on fruits.

"In no Iowa counties except those in the southern tier is there reason to think that any buds have been damaged," he stated. "That is the only section where the fruit was far enough along to be ruined by low temperature. Southern Iowa peach growers are quite fortunate this year. There were many peach buds killed but because only from two to five per cent of the total number of buds that come out are required to produce a good crop, it is only reasonable to believe that plenty of them went thru the frost to insure a crop. Peaches, pears, plums, cherries and apricots in Missouri and Kansas were completely wiped out because they were in bloom at the time of the freeze. The killing temperature reached as far south as Dallas, Texas. Oklahoma fruit growers suffered a great loss."

There is nothing that can be done to save fruits that have been nipped once, according to Prof. Holsinger. After the temperature gets much lower than 28 degrees there will be much loss if the tree is in full bloom.

The foregoing was given out before the freeze of Friday night, April 8, and reports on the extent of damage, if any, due to this cold snap are not available at this writing. It is not probable, however, that any great amount of damage was done.

FARMERS MUST BACK THEIR SELLING AGENCIES

At a meeting of the Farmers' Live Stock Marketing Committee of 15 at Chicago on April 7, the necessity of having local co-operative live stock shipping associations supporting the farmers' co-operative live stock selling agencies on the terminal markets was emphasized, in order producers may sooner and more adequately correct the abuses that exist there at the present time. When farmers' co-operative selling organizations handle the bulk of the live stock received at these markets they then will be able readily to bring about more orderly marketing, stabilization of prices, more economical handling and better service.

The Committee of 15 is studying the marketing methods of the Equity Co-operative Exchange and the Farmers' Union with a view of learning what has been accomplished by these two large successful co-operative selling agencies owned and controlled by farmers. These two organizations will form an excellent foundation upon which to build a greater organization of farmers' cooperative selling agencies on all other terminal live stock markets.

ORGANIZATION AND CO-OPERATION URGED

Speaking before 175 representative of universities, colleges and liberal clubs at Cambridge, Mass., on April 5, Senator Ladd of North Dakota, pointed out that lack of proper credit for farmers' needs, transportation charges that place him at a disadvantage and lack of adequate laws to enble farmers to co-operate in marketing their products were hindrances to agriculture. As remedies he suggested organization, co-operation, a proper appreciation of business methods and protection of the interests of agriculture to the same extent as other industries are protected.

FARMERS ADOPT GRAIN MARKETING PLAN

After two days of discussion, the 107 delegates representing every grain growing section of the United States in a ratification conference at Chicago on April 6 and 7 voted unanimously to accept the grain marketing plan recommended by the Farmers' Grain Marketing Committee of 17.

Under the provision of the plan as adopted, farmers will market their grain thru their own national sales agency, known as the United States Grain Growers Inc., which will be under the supervision of a board of 21 directors. Amendments to the plan providing for compulsory pooling of wheat in states where wheat predominates and compulsory pooling of at least one-third of all farmers' grain were defeated. Voluntary pooling is to be permitted.

HOPPER FEEDING OF POULTRY A MEANS OF SAVING LABOR

Receptacles or hoppers that feed automatically are used on practically all exclusive poultry farms, and there are advantages in having them on the general farm.

They are commonly used for feeding mash, grit and shell.

An important advantage is the saving of labor. Fowls will help themselves and the hopper wil not require filling oftener than once a week or longer.

It allows the birds to balance their own ration or to supply any deficiency in it. This is especially the case on any farm where the fowls have to forage for much of their food.

It is sanitary as compared with wet mash feeding, where the birds often cool their feet in the mixture, where it may spoil if not eaten promptly.

There is slight danger of over-feeding, unless there is little else for the birds to eat. In beginning hopper feeding where chickens are unaccustomed to mash it is well to have the hopper open for only an hour or so the first day, gradually increasing the time.

The requirements of a good hopper are capacity, sureness of operation, and freedom from waste in feeding.

Grit and shell can be fed in a small hopper having a partition.

It is more economical to build than to buy large hoppers. Persons interested may receive plans for a hopper by writing to the poultry department of the state college at Ames.

WHY SHOULD A RETAILER ADVERTISE HIS STOCK?

Replying to this question, one might ask why should a retailer open his front door? Really, why should a retailer go into business if he does not intend to advertise? Why should a retailer attempt to go into store keeping if he does not intend for the public to know he is in business and what he has to sell?

Some retailers think of letting the public know when they have some special bargains in goods that have been carried a long time and are somewhat shelf worn and are out of date and must be disposed of. It is then a big splurge is made and new clerks are added for a few days and big sales are enjoyed for a short time and when it is all over a rest is taken from the unusual ten day's task. But old easy days are on again and trade has resumed its normal dull routine. The merchant is content to turn over his merchandise about twice a year and advertise only to get rid of goods that are slow sale. The idea is gained that advertising is essential only when something has grown stale and unsalable by the usual efforts. It is then that advertising is put to the hardest test and if it fails it is condemned as being a useless and unproductive sales feature.

This is like advertising only when business is dull, thus giving advertising an unfair test. Successful merchants do not wait until business is dull to advertise. They keep their advertising going during the brisk season that there may not be any dull periods. They carry a given number of clerks, but they cannot wrap up merchandise until folks come in and buy, and they are not supposed to use the telephone to bring in trade.

We have for a long time heard the adage: "Keep your name before the public." And this is why so many names are seen on the roadside fences. Yes, and they put names on tombstones and keep them there a long time. But they do not create trade.

If the name is kept before the public in connection with real, for-sure salesmanship merchandising so that the public will think more of your store and the goods you have for sale than of your mere name, then something is accomplished. Keep your name before the public but hitch it up with your merchandise and the service to be had in your store and the good values you have to offer and the pleasure to be enjoyed while in your store. Then there is profit in so keeping your name before the people. Put sales talk in your advertising talk the same as you put in your sales conversation and you will bring the public into your store. Unless advertising is regarded as a part of the sales effort it is not being used to its best advantage and fullest effect.—Business Chat.

IF EDITORS TOLD THE TRUTH

Awhile ago the editor of an Indiana newspaper grew tired of being called a liar, and decided he would tell the truth in his next issue. The paper contained the following items:

"John Bonin, the laziest merchant in town, made a trip to Bellville on Monday. He said he was going on business, but he went for booze."

"John Coyle, our groceryman, is doing a poor business. His store is so dusty and dirty, how can he do much?

"Rev. Sty preached last Sunday night on 'Charity.' His sermon was punk and fully an hour long."

"Dave Cankley died at his home here on Tuesday. The doctor gave it out as heart failure. Whiskey killed him.

"Married—Miss Sylvia Robs and James Collins were married last Saturday night at the Baptist parsonage by Rev. J. Gordon. The bride is a very ordinary town girl who doesn't know any more about cooking than a jackrabbit and never helped her mother three days in her life. She is not a beauty by any means and has a gait like a duck. The groom is an up-to-date loafer. He has been living off the old folks at home and his life is not worth shucks. It will be a hard life."

"Died—Ezra Plumb, aged fifty-six years, six months and thirteen days. Deceased was a mild mannered pirate with a mouth for whiskey. He came here in the night with another man's wife and joined the church at the first chance. He owes seven dollars for the paper, a large meat bill, and you could hear him pray for six blocks. He died singing 'Jesus Paid It All,' and we think he is right—he never paid anything himself. He was buried in an asbestos casket, and his friends threw palm leaf fans in his grave as he may need them."—Exchange.

SOME MERCHANTS DON'T SEE

No local merchant can afford not to advertise in weekly newspapers of the better class. It is a sad commentary upon small town business men that they don't see the advantage to them of carrying an advertisement in the small town paper every single week. Such an advertisement is the cheapest salesman that the merchant can employ. The money spent in advertising in the better class of weekly newspapers is an investment and not an expense and it is the best-paying investment that the merchant can make but not one in a thousand publishers of the weekly papers is compensated anywhere near what he is worth to the merchants and to the community in which he lives and to whose interests he dedicates his life. Every editor of a weekly newspaper is constantly working in behalf of every merchant in his community, whether that merchant patronizes the local paper or not; but every merchant of every community, unfortunately, 'oes not have the business common sense and the business foresight to see that it is to his own advantage to help support the country editor by advertising—telling the people in the newspaper what he has, how it can be used and what it costs.—Union Gazette, Newark, N. Y.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whoop-

Belmond Local News

P. J. Scarbro of Brookings, South Dakota, was a visitor here a few days the first of this week, meetng old friends and renewing acquaintances. Prof. Scarbro was superintendent of the Belmond schools for some eight or nine years, moving from this city to Brookings to become state leader of the boys' and girls' clubs of that state. Mr. Scarbro has had very good success with his work in South Dakota and has increased the membership for the clubs materially. Mrs. Scarbro accompanied him. They have been to Chicago where the Professor attended a convention, and from there they went to Cedar Rapids to visit her folks, coming from Cedar Rapids here. They left yesterday for their home at Brookings.

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court of Wright County, Iowa.

October Term, A. D. 1921.

Lillian H. A. Aldrich, Plaintiff,

vs

Nathan Aldrich, Defendant.

To Nathan Aldrich, Defendant:

You are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiff in the above entitled cause, is now on file in the District Court, of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright County, claiming and asking that the bonds of matrimony, now existing between you and the plaintiff aforesaid, be dissovled, and that she be granted a decree of divorce, on the grounds of adultry committed by you; also asking for the allowance of temporary alimony in the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, and permanent alimony in the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, also asking for the allowance of attorney fees for the compensation of her attorney; and that a writ of attachment has been issued herein by order of the Court, and that your personal property by virtue of the same has been attached and levied upon, to secure the payment of said sums mentioned as aforesaid.

For further particulars see petition now on file.

And that unless you appear thereto and defend before noon of the second day of the next term, being the October Term of said Court, which will commence at Clarion, Iowa, on the third day of October, A. D. 1921, default will be entered against you, and upon final hearing, the Court will render judgement against you, in favor of the plaintiff aforsesaid, for the said alimony; and costs of this action, as aforesaid; and that an execution will issue for the sale of so much of your property as may be necessary to satisfy said judgement, interest and costs, and for such other and further relief as to the Court shall seem equitable.

W. E. BULLARD,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

KELLASTONE
IMPERISHABLE STUCCO

Why Kellastone?
---Permanence!

Neither Frost, Water, Fire nor Time, will destroy Kellastone. It is composed entirely of mineral ingredients that will last for ages. It contains absolutely no Portland Cement, lime, gypsum or plaster of Paris. No plastering, hair or wood fibre is used in its manufacture, and none should be added. It sets up dense and compact, hard as granite and weather defying. There is not a single ingredient in its composition that can possibly rot. Moisture cannot permeate it Its durability has been convincingly proven by thousands of buildings of which Kellastone has been used. These claims are corroborated by the testimony of engineers, architects and practical builders who have used it for many years.

LET'S CLEAN THE STREETS

This editorial is not offered in a spirit of criticism, but as a suggestion for improving the city, making a better impression on the traveling public, and beautifying the town.

The pavements of the town need cleaning, and need it badly. Everybody will agree to that. They are covered with the winter's accumulation of dirt and refuse on the streets not flushed by the hose. They are very disagreeable, not only to look at, but to housewives as well, for every wind sweeps a cloud of dust into the homes. And nothing makes the ladies more mad than to clean up the house and then have a film of dust spread over everything from the streets.

Whether the city treasury contains funds for cleaning the pavement or not, this paper is not prepared to say. But the suggestion is offered that the city authorities look into the matter and see whether there are sufficient funds to have the streets flushed from the city mains. The firemen we believe would undertake the job if it were made worth while, and the cost should not be prohibative. The streets could be quickly and easily cleaned by this method, without raising a disagreeable cloud of dust and without taking a very long time. It is self evident that they are in need of the cleaning. We have good streets, well paved, and it seems too bad to leave them covered with dirt all summer. The rain only washes the dirt to the gutter, and on some streets the gutters are now so choked with their accumulations of dirt that the flow of water is more or less blocked.

A little water, a little labor and a little funds will solve the question in the cheapest way. Let's go to it.

THE BALL TEAM

The efforts of local fans to form a base ball league among the towns in this neighborhood should meet with the support of the community. The plans as at present made, call for an all home team—no hired players either here or on the other towns' clubs. This means that the games played will be absolutely a home exibition by home men, that the receipts will all stay at home and the games be played for home people.

Belmond has plenty of talent for an all home team, and such a team should receive the united support of the ball fans of the city. The present plans do not call for a cent to be solicited to start the ball going; there are sufficient funds now in the treasury, together with the sale of season tickets, to start the ball going.

A good ball team means good clean amusement during the summer for the town, is something that most people enjoy, and the home team this year should have the loyal support of the community.

IF THE PAPERS PRINTED ALL THE NEWS

What a howl would go up; what a sensational time would be had; and how many bullets the editor would have to dodge if—the paper printed all the news!

For the most sensation news, the news that everybody knowns but that never sees print, is the news that is intentionally left out. Any newspaper man, every time he puts his paper to press, leaves out news that would start every tongue to waging in the town. An he leaves it out on purpose, because considers that to print iit would do more harm than than good.

Does the public, we wonder, realize and appreciate what a newspaper publisher has to decide; what he has to take responsibility for; when he puts his paper in the mails? He can unmake nearly every prominent citizen of his town; stir up a row in the churches that would break them wide open; and ruin the reputation of a lot of the controlling interests.

But he doesn't; he keeps still; and listens to them tell the rest of the world what's what. But if he wanted to—Boy howdy!

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The Ladies Aid will hold their business meeting for the month in the parlors of the church on Thursday.

The Webster City Association meets at Alexander next Tuesday and Wednesday. A good program has been prepared and all who can are urged to attend.

Last Sunday was a banner day for attendance at all the services—the largest number at Sunday school for over six months. We hope to see more present next Sunday. We have a good superintendent and good teachers and we can accomodate about 100 more.

The solo by Miss Sideon and the music by the young peoples' choir was greatly appreciated by all. Come next Sunday night and enjoy the service with us. Miss Sideon has charge of the evening choir.

Sabbath school at 10:00, morning worship at 11:00 and the evening services at 8:00. Come.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.
Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 7:00 p. m.

The attendance at the services last Sunday was very gratifying. Let's do as well or a little better next Sunday. Faithfulness is a very noble trait of character.

Harry Wolle came home Saturday night to spend Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wolle. Harry has charge of a ditching gang at Perry, Iowa.

The school base ball team has been practicing lately for their schedule of games, which commences this month.

—I—

Sunday was a real spring day, and as a consequence there were several hundred people out enjoying the day and the scenery. The American Legion benefit play being given on that day drew a large number of people, and the streets looked like a celebration day.

—I—

We have often wondered why LuVerne Smith walks to Belmond nearly every Sunday. At first we thought he went there to hold down a chair in some young lady's home but we have abandoned that idea, Vern is too bashful. At least we have discovered that he is official "spike counter" for the Rock Island Railroad between Klemme and Belmond. That is why he walks between Klemme and Belmond so often. Vern reports that there are 36,960 rail ties between here and Belmond, 31,335 spikes in the ties and that on each trip he takes 38,269 steps. He miscounted a few times and had to go back the next Sunday to verify the report. However the above is official and if you don't believe it walk to Belmond some Sunday with Vern and take an adding machine with you.Klemme Times.

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Courtney have returned from their visit at Dubuque.

—I—

Unknown thieves broke into the garage conducted by Mr. Kemp one night recently and stole some parts from a car that had been left there for repairs. The robbers gained an entrance thru a back window, leaving the same way. No trace has been found as to the guilty parties at this writing. The value of the aricles taken was small.

GRAND JURY INVESTIGATING JOHN BERG CASE

seven grand jurors serving the county in this investigation are G. H. Lewis, Eagle Grove; R. H. Lester, Goldfield; J. A. Lowden, Clarion; W. A. Burrows, Dows; Ole Melhus, Clarion; S. J. Packard, Renwick; and Newton Brown, Eagle Grove.

Blanche Jennings was divorced from Claude Jennings, formerly of Clarion. He was charged with a friendliness for John Barleycorn, and left home some time ago.

The divorce case of Lillian Aldrich vs. Nathan Aldrich was continued, because of lack of service.

C. N. Reese, suing W. L. Kent, was given judgement for $399.59, and $29.-97 and costs extra.

The Rowan State Savings bank, suing Tom and Mary Whitten, was given judgement for $428.83, with interest and attorney's fees and costs added.

The Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. secured judgement against Wm. Albert for the sum asked.

Thursday is naturalization day, and several applications for citizenship papers are being heard.

The April term of district court was begun Monday with Judge G. D. Thompson presiding. Assignments of cases for the term were made Monday and equity cases occupied the attention of the court until Tuesday evening when an adjournment was taken until Thursday.

The second week of the term will be devoted to the old cases set for trial, among which are the following:

H. Hodges vs. G. H. Jameson, law.

S. Michael vs. Chris Lammers, law.

Bridget Brennan vs. W. M. Wood, law.

John Orr, a minor, by his next friend, Jessie Orr, vs. Carol Brown, law.

E. F. Mosher vs. Chester Hunt, et al, law.

Robert Wildman vs. Clarence Franklin, law.

The National Finance Co. vs. C. A. Hettling, law.

Cement Products Co. vs. Berkland & Little, law.

James M. Fort, Adm., vs. G. H. Jameson, et al, law.

James M. Fort, Adm. vs. Farmers Grain & Lumber Co., Dows, law.

James M. Fort, Adm., vs E. Evens, Oscar Rhodes and Luella Rhodes, law.

James M. Fort. Adm., vs. Hans Peterson, law.

The following cases are assigned for the third week, but before they are cleaned up the court will take up criminal cases:

F. W. Spencer vs. E. Tyck, equity.

C. R. I. & P. Railway Co. vs. Board of Supervisors of Wright, et al, equity

O. O. Sandven vs. Board of Supervisors of Webster county, et al, equity

Severt Amonson vs. Board of Supervisors of Webster county, et al, equity.

Helen Ryerson et al vs. Board of Supervisors of Webster county, equity

L. E. Goslin vs. Bunah Irene Goslin, equity.

The Fort Dodge pawn broker charged with receiving stolen goods from the Goldfield and Woolstock stores, has been granted a continuance of his trial until the August term of court by Judge Wright. The Messenger makes the following mention of the matter:

In asking for a postponement of the trial, the defense stated that Mrs. Sarah Selicovitz, "who will testify to material and important things in the case," is unable to appear in court on account of serious illness. The witness, according to the motion, was present at the store when the transactions were made. Her testimony the defendant's counsel states, will be to the effect that the pawnbroker "paid a fair price for the merchandise purchased; that the boys told him they were closing out stock from their store in Minnesota, and that they came to the store at 10 instead of 7:30. a. m.

Selicovtz was bound over to the grand jury in December, 1920, after Sheriff George Bassettt and the sheriffs from Hamilton and Wright counties had raided the shop and seized a large quantity of goods identified as that stolen from merchants at Goldfield and Woolstock.

A message from Rochester was received yesterday (last Tuesday) stating that there was no change in the condition of Sheriff Bert Fisher, who has been near death for the past week. Mrs. L. L. Kirkpatrick, who has been with Mrs. Fisher at Rochester for the past two weeks, returned Monday. She reports that the nurses have given up hopes but that the doctor still thinks there is a chance.

The grand jury is reported to be investigating the case of Cashier Berg of the Belmond State Bank. It has been the general opinion of all that the matter should not be allowed to go unnoticed. While everyone expresses regret and sympathy for Mr. Berg, yet the laws of our land cannot be carried out along such lines.

A. M. Axen is suing Will Woosley for $185.37, alleged to be due as a balance on rent account. $392 was alleged to be due on hay and pasture rental. Plaintiff alleges he was to pay $7 per acre for hay and pasture land figured at 56 acres, but learned later on that there were only 46 acres in the grass land. He sets out credits on the excess because of labor, corn and twine, and claims an additional $24 for a hay sling outfit which was either removed from premises or destroyed.

Wherever Fashion Gathers You'll Find Woodruff's Shoes

There is no denying that women know style when they see it. The fact that most women are aware of "What's What" makes each of them eager to possess apparel that radiates style-distinction.

Most women know, too, how important is foot-wear to the final effect of ultra-fashionable attire.

"Woodruff's" shoes have become famous for their ideal adaption to the truly smart costume. Wood uff shoes have an inimitable knack of appropriately and fashionably completing the costume of discriminating women.

Wherever fashion gathers—wherever there is want for style and quality, you will find—

EXPLAINS WHY SCHOOL TAXES ARE SO HIGH

fort should be made to attend this meeting, as fourth grade language work is difficult to teach, and all who attend will receive many helpful hints and suggestions.—A. M. R.

The boys' and girls' basket ball teams were royally entertained at the Sharon home Saturday evening, the hostesses being the Misses Thomas, Stedman and Sharon. All games indulged in pertained to basket ball. The guests tried their luck at basket shooting in a somewhat different manner than they used to. Some of the guards discovered they had missed their calling. At eleven o'clock the guests were asked to retire to the dining room where a delicious two-course lunch was served. A picture of both teams in a basket-ball folder was presented to each one, after, which the guests departed all carrying with them memories of a "wonderful" time.

A special assembly of the high school, with the eighth grade as visitors, was held last Friday afternoon for the purpose of awarding the "Honor B" to the members of the boys' and girls' basket ball teams who had earned them during the season just closed. Participation in six "association" games required. Miss Stedman and Mr. Skovlin as coaches, made very fitting presentation speeches, commending each player for giving the faithful practice and loyal support which is necessary for the coach to demand in order to build up a winning team. The following were recipients of the "B":

David Luick, William Vestweber, Merrill Stapley, Clifford Johnson, Irving Madsen, Lewis Parsons, Everett Parsons, William Tyrrell.

Beatrice Leavy, Agnes Dillon, Elaine Rierson, Mary Forristal, Katherine Thiltgen, Mabel Cramer, Leona Jacobs.

Mr. Skovlin was pleasantly surprised by the presentation of a charm in the form of a miniture basket ball as a token of the appreciation of the hours which he, as a business man, has given so willingly to the athletic interests of the school.

"Wonder what the high scool boys and girls tink about?" The cartoonist might endeavor to answer in his way, but we have another way. As we are given space in the next few weeks, we shall print several themes from members of the ten grade English class in which they ave endeavored to ezpress their opinion editorially.

Physical Training For Every Student

Phyical training should be a part of every school course and every student required to take it. This training should be given in school hours and an instructor hired for this purpose only. The classes should not be long and tiresome—let us say, classes from two to three times a week of forty or forty-five minutes each. A period like this with some well directed exercise, would corr many physical defects among our boys and girls.

We have at present perhaps thirty or forty students who are taking this line of work along with their other school duties. These persons get too much exercise, and the remaining members of the student body don't get any, which they are badly in need of. If B. H. S. intends to have good healthy students, capable of doing number one work, let them begin now providing opportunity for every student to use the gymnasium, and they will see the good results of this beneficial activity.—Mildred Parsons.

It Is Time To Act.

Belmond has no athletic field close to the school building. The school has always been able to rent Mr. Luick's pasture to play baseball in, but sooner or later, no doubt, this field will be sold for residence lots. There has also always been difficulty in paying the rent for the use of this lot. But the real disadvantage of using this field is that it is situated so far from the school that it can be used only for base ball. In future years the Belmond high school will want a football team, but they will have no convenient place to play.

The block just north of the school ground would make an ideal athletic field. This block could be purchased comparatively cheap now, to what it can be later when more houses are built upon it. At that, it would take nearly a year to clear it and get it ready for use. So it is very important that the matter be pushed if possible at once, while adjacent ground is available.—Winston Thiltgen.

Moral Emblems.

Please don't skip this description of Robert Hervey Randolph—six feet straight up and down, broad of shoulder and narrow of hip. sandy-haired, blue-eyed, nose slightly up-ended and wearing a saddle of faint freckles, clean shaven, well groomed, very correctly dressed, and twenty-six years old. Let it be added that his eyes were placed just far enough apart to stamp him forever honest; he had an open and most prepossessing countenance.

At the moment of the start of this rapid yarn, he was standing in the Van Telliers' library, looking down in pained and flushed surprise at Miss Madge Van T., who was sitting in a huge leathern chair half facing the fire in the open grate, one leg very much under her, the other waving a satin-and-silk combination of foot and ankle in distracting accompaniment to her disturbing speech.

"Bobby," said Miss Van T., "you are darned good-looking; you're strong, straight, and a gentleman; there are times when you are wholly adorable, but, nevertheless, I'm not going to the show with you tonight, or to the opera tomorrow, or anywhere any more. There, there, dear boy; you don't have to say anything. You have one of those faces that is absolutely beyond the aid of a vocal organ. It says everything that is in your heart of gold before your brain has time to tinkle a bell."

"Look here, Madge," said the pained Mr. Randolph: "are you making fun of my face or of my brain or of both?"

"My dear," said Miss Van T. quite gravely, "I'm not making fun of you in any way whatsoever. I'm merely telling you how lovable you are, so that you will understand how serious it is when I say that I've decided not to love you any more."

"B-but how can you help it?" stammered Mr. Randolph, his tongue for once saying the same thing as his face at the same time.

Miss Van T.'s breast fluttered as though rising against its mistress to the defense of this disingenuous young man, and she was obliged to swerve her eyes from his and draw a long breath before she answered.

"I can, because I will," she said, her face paling. "Oh, Bobby, can't you wake up? Look round you and come to earth! You are born and bred on Manhattan, yet you've never seen New York."

"I guess you're right," said Bobby thoughtfully. "Look here, Madge: why should I try to see New York, and why should we be talking ash-cans when I've got you to look at in one of the most bewitching and abbreviated bits of dress goods that ever revealed a completely adorable person? Tell me that."

"Well," said Madge, her face hardening, "I will. It's a long story, not in words but in generations. The Van Telliers have lived in East Ninth street since the year one of the island. That is, they used to live here; now they hardly exist. They are merely an assorted lot of animated corpses that crawl out of their tomb periodically to take a strange air, leaning on a rotten stave called the 'Old Order.' Listen to this, Bobby: The new New York is a fever, and I've caught it. I want a rainy-day car, a calling-car, and a touring car; I want dresses that will stab with envy the heart of every woman that looks at them; I want my jewels to run to size and quality, and I want a yacht just for the papers to talk about, because I hate to ride in the smelly things."

Bobby's eyes had grown rounder and wider as the list progressed.

"Do you think you could get along on a hundred thousand a year?" he asked very softly.

"I don't know," she said slowly. "I've been going into the subject rather thoroughly, and a hundred thousand would be running it on a pretty close margin. By the way, just what is your allowance under that crazy will?"

"Ten thousand," said Bobby.

"Well," said Miss Van T., "there you are! Just enough to keep you comfortably in debt, and you want to marry me on it! It wouldn't be quite so out of the question if you knew you were going to have it forever, but you don't. It may be cut off—"

"Any day," said Bobby promptly. "It isn't likely, after all these years, but it may."

"Well, there you are!" Miss Van T. repeated herself. "I'm not altogether a pig, Bobby. Ten thousand with you thrown in is enough to make any woman think three times, but the truth is you have been killed by too little and too much kindness. If you had never gone on as super for a disappearing heiress, you might have amounted to something by now. Instead of making you, that money has buried you."

"You don't know me altogether, Madge," said Bobby. "Do you think I've never thought things out? When I need to make money, I'll do it. The great thing nowadays, it seems to me, is not to have too much."

"Not to have too much!" exclaimed Miss Van T., a puzzled frown on her forehead. "Bobby, do you know that you've said something original? No; I won't put it quite as strong as that, but I will say that you've given birth to an exotic idea.

"But it doesn't alter things as far as I am concerned," she continued, almost without a pause. "In fact, it only simplifies matters. You've signed the warrant. I want loads of money; you're afraid of having too much. So we'd better turn our backs on each other and march."

Mr. Randolph looked at her through narrowed eyes.

"I suppose," he said, "you have picked out the man with a hundred thousand a year?"

"Not finally," said Miss Van T., "though they are not so scarce in this hurly-burly world as your question implies. After all, it isn't the cash I'm keen on, but what it will bring. If necessary, I'll earn my own living."

"Earn your own living!" exclaimed Mr. Randolph. "Will you please tell me how you could earn anything?"

"Well," said Miss Van T., "I've had a couple of offers without even asking. When I tried to jew Simon Simon down on this very frock on the grounds that I was hard up, he said, in the nicest way, that he would take me on at sixty a week any day during the next five years."

"And the other?" asked Mr. Randolph.

"The other," said Miss Van T., dropping her eyes, "was Beacher Tremont. He wasn't quite so nice, but he offered more. He said he was looking for a private secretary, who could name her own price."

"During the next five years—at your own price," repeated Bobby, his mind dazed but nevertheless going straight to the kernel of each proposition. "Madge, do you know what you're saying? Do you know the horrible things you infer?"

She moved one hand impatiently.

"Bobby," she said, "don't get theatrical. I tell you New York is a fever. I've caught it, and I'm not a bit sorry. The choice between being a Van Tellier corpse and a fastish woman is easy. The semi-declassees of New York, if they play for high enough stakes, have a world of their own that is worth moving in. Money is merely an adjunct to it—nothing but the bridge across which clever men come to show themselves off at their untrammeled best."

"Madge," said Bobby, at once frightened and earnest, "you only half know what you're talking about. There is such a world as you speak of—it's the world of insatiably hungry women. It's brilliant and fascinating for a while, but it breathes a poisoned air, and all its roads lead down. Every woman that goes into it with her eyes open has an idea that, with her beauty and her brains, she can buck the tiger and get away with it. She won't look over her shoulder and read the record of an endless losing run on the black."

"It Would Take Me Years to Learn to Kiss You Again."

Miss Van T. smiled.

"I'm already beginning on my reward," she said. "You've never talked so well before in your life."

"It's more than talk," said Bobby, flushing angrily. "And the ways of access that you have imagined!" he continued. "You read happy stories to the public taste of midinettes, showroom girls, and dress-models, and perhaps you think they mirror the life. Why, Madge, the taunts that those girls fling indifferently at virtue and at vice are so vile that they couldn't be repeated even among half-decent men. And the other way, the private door for the private secretary. That's a road of burned bridges. Every man, decent or indecent, feels a queer sinking of the heart when he hears of a woman taking it." He looked at her shrewdly. "And yet you may do it," he said, half to himself. "If you are one of the hungry women, God help you, for they all walk blindfolded."

"They don't walk," said Madge, flushing, and her eyes gleaming strangely. "That's just the point: they rush, whirl, and—"

"And crash," finished Bobby.

"That's the very word," said Madge. "If you'll only keep on the way you've started, I'd love to talk to you all night."

"No chance of that," said Bobby, straight-lipped. "I'm through, and I'm going." He turned toward the door.

"Not without kissing me good-by, Bobby!" cried Madge.

He looked over his shoulder with a polite but impersonal smile.

"I'm not much on kissing strange women," he said lightly. "It would take me years to learn to kiss you again."

He left the room and the house.

With his top-hat pushed back on his head, the ends of his muffler flying loose, his overcoat half unbuttoned, he swung up the deserted lower reaches of the Avenue, punctuating his thoughts with the solid rap of his stick on the pavement. It might be supposed that he was thinking and mourning over the sudden demise of the Miss Van Tellier he had thought he had known for many years, but such was not the case.

Mr. Randolph was not built on mourning lines; at the moment under review, he was thinking about himself and the strange fate that had made him a foster-child of fortune. He proceeded to look back ten years. Just a decade ago he had had his one meeting with the young lady whose disappearance had brought him an unstable affluence. It had taken place on this very avenue and less than forty short blocks away. He had reason to remember the encounter, for it had brought into sudden conjunction a lovely Persian cat, a lovely wire-haired terrier, a lovely child, and himself. The cat had dashed from a proud front door to cross Forty-something street under the nose of a taxi-cab; the dog had flown in yapping pursuit and, in the act, yanked his young mistress off her pins. He, Mr. Randolph, had seized one of her flying feet, hauled her and the terrier back to safety, and no sooner placed her upright and smoothed down her absurdly short skirts than he, she, and especially it, the dog, became the center and circumference of an animated pinwheel.

Her unshaken determination to hold to the leash, whatever happened, brought disaster. The said leash wound three times round her ankles and those of Mr. Randolph, bringing them both down kerplunk and facing each other. "My, what a bump!" she had cried, in startled tones, and then thrown back her curly head and laughed.

It was so that he remembered her—a child of ten or eleven summers and no winters, merry as a sunny day, dark-haired, dark-eyed, pink-cheeked, pampered but unspoiled. She had risen and taken his hand, told him her name, thanked him, ordered a flurried nurse to thank him, shaken her finger at the terrier, and said, "Good-by" and "Come on, Maggie," all while he was still rubbing the seat of his first long trousers.

On that day she had been Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton, petted darling of the gods and Mr. Brewster Thornton, banker and widower; two months later had come Thornton's financial smash and, immediately afterward, his spiritual, moral and bodily collapse. Everything that had made for life in him having been swept away, he died as a matter of course, and was buried. For sole inheritance, little Genie Thornton found herself possessor and possessed of one Maggie O'Rourke, a nurse of long standing, of earnest and faithful face, and a monster heart imprisoned in a pitifully thin chest.

It had taken Genie's great-uncle, Asa Thornton, six more months to forget a quarrel of sixteen years' standing with his nephew, and by that time child and nurse had been seeped into that lower world which can't afford morning and afternoon editions and is too busy praying for daily bread to look for a rain of manna in the daily press.

In short, Maggie and her charge, traced down the ladder of reputable, disreputable and impossible lodgings, had slipped ultimately from sight and the ken of people with addresses, and, as a result, Mr. Robert Hervey Randolph, whose relationship to Mr. Asa Thornton is of no import whatever to this tale of cause and effect, came into ten thousand a year and a string—the string being the possible reappearance of Miss Imogene Pamela.

"Bob," had said old Asa, on the verge of a tardy demise, "I'm not introducing you to a war between conscience and self-interest. There's no silly story-book test about my money; you are under no obligation to look for Imogene or to shout if you step on her by any twist of chance. My lawyers have all the instructions necessary along those lines; they are to make every reasonable effort, and if they succeed, wh· you're man enough to look out for yourself. It—it isn't going to make a devil of a lot of difference to me where the cash goes so long as I die with—die with the credit."

With that last sentence, his mind had stumbled and wandered off to memories of his nephew Brewster. Looking back from the vantage of twenty-six years, Randolph caught, for the first time, the full import of Asa Thornton's farewell words to him and to life: "Die with the credit." They held the kernel of the old man's carefully measured amend.

"Great old top!" murmured Mr. Randolph aloud, and half unconsciously turned to the left at Forty-second street. Five minutes later he was caught in the maelstrom of the Thanksgiving crowd milling around Times square.

Presently he found himself on the edge of a human sea, banked up to give passage to a honking empty taxicab. Here was another question for a suddenly inquiring mind. Where did taxi-cabs, empty ones, go to in such a hurry? The door of this one was swinging open, and the proof of how intent the crowd was on its myriad individual goals is evidenced by the fact that a dozen voices did not inform the driver that the season was off for fans on wheels.

The cab was moving more slowly than Mr. Randolph's subconscious mind, which led him to step into it and quietly close the inviting door. Upon seating himself, he tried to analyze the impulse that had lifted him from the curb. He decided that it was not so much the curiosity as to the destination of empty cabs as a natural and ancient dislike for being pushed and elbowed by people.

It was not long before the cab, unwittingly loaded for bear, drew up with a final honk at the stage-door of the Crocodile. Immediately came a rasping voice that was vaguely familiar to Mr. Randolph.

"Well," it said, "you sure took your own time getting here." The driver, expert in aggravating repartee without words, pressed the bulb of his atrocious horn three times. "Cut it out!" said the rasping voice. "There isn't any hurry now."

It was incredible, reasoned Mr. Randolph with himself, that anyone should forget that voice once heard, and he was right. He remembered it. It was the voice of Mr. Duke Beamer, whom he had had the distinct pleasure of blackballing for one club in college and three in town. Mr. Beamer, to his honest mind, was the best living example of animated slime in tailor-made clothes.

Mr. B. was not alone; Mr. Randolph could just see his companion through the slant of the half-raised window-glass, and even that distorted glimpse was very close to a vision. The girl was young, beautiful, and troubled. Her cheeks were thin and pale, her parted lips aquiver; her chin was atremble. Of course she was very cheaply but neatly clothed.

"Make up your mind," said the rasping voice. "Ride with me or walk the streets by yourself, and don't forget that there's no job behind you. You've said good-by to that door for good."

The girl's wan face went through that contortion which says, "I won't cry," and doesn't, thereby achieving a pity beyond the meed of tears. The quivering of her lips, the trembling of her chin grew more pronounced—only to steady down as she swept up stricken and imploring eyes to the face of the unseen man.

"Oh, Duke," she begged, "promise—promise you'll be always good to me."

"Of course, little one," said the rasping voice, promptly and much relieved, promising lightly to pay on demand, in full for a soul delivered in advance. "You'll never regret it, believe me."

The girl tore her doubting eyes from his face and stepped toward the cab. Mr. Randolph made himself exceeding small in the corner nearest the curb. An unseen agent opened the door; the girl slipped in and turned to seat herself; her escort made to follow. Then did Mr. Randolph suddenly lean forward and proceed to push in the face of Mr. Beamer with his open hand and the full weight of his shoulder. That astonished scion of a once gentlemanly house reeled backward and sat down on the pavement kerplunk.

"My, what a bump!" spoke a keen young voice over Mr. Randolph's shoulder, but he was too occupied to take note of it at the time. He leaned far out so that the driver could get the full effect of his modish top-hat and spoke cryptic words.

"My, What a Bump!"

"Ten dollars' worth of the park," is what he said.

The driver welcomed the sudden apparition with a friendly grin, honked defiantly three times, and threw in the clutch. They were off, and trailing after them came such a string of blasphemous utterances as made Mr. Randolph wince.

The girl was laughing. No longer did her eyes search for a gleam they thought they had lost forever. It was there within them, come back to rollick in her pupils and spill itself in reckless spending.

"Oh! Oh! What a bump!" she gasped.

"Funny, wasn't it?" said Mr. Randolph weakly.

"Awfully," said the girl.

Thereupon fell a long silence. The cab cut across the traffic, reached the Avenue, and eventually the dark park before Mr. Randolph found anything further to say.

"Funny, wasn't it?" he remarked.

The girl cast him a startled look.

"Why," she gurgled, "that's what you said before."

"So I did," said Mr. Randolph, frowning thoughtfully. "So I did. By the way, what's your name?"

The girl caught her breath and swallowed her laughter.

"Vivienne Vivierre," she said, after a pause.

"How awful!" commented Mr. Randolph. "One of those deliberate alliterations that go with the back row of the chorus."

"Front row," Vivienne defended promptly, but unsmiling. Her lips twitched down at the corners. "At least, it was front row."

"I know," said Mr. Randolph. "You've been fired. I heard what Beamer said to you. How long have you known that snake?"

"Not very long," she answered. "He got me on, and I suppose he got me off." She drew a long breath and turned appealing eyes to Randolph. "Please," she said, "don't let's talk about him. I want so to be happy for a few minutes. I love the park at night with its border of lights. Let's play a game."

"'A game?'" said Randolph doubtfully.

"Yes. We'll guess which is Central Park West and which is One Hundred and Tenth street and which is the avenue. It is not as easy as you think after you've been going round a while. I'm feeling d-dizzy a-already."

"You are!" exclaimed Mr. Randolph. "Well, let me tell you it isn't from buzzing round a two-mile circuit. What did you have for dinner?"

Miss Vivienne shut her lips tight.

"Won't you please play my game?" she asked faintly.

Mr. Randolph frowned as though considering the subject very seriously, but the matter that held his attention was not the proposed guessing-match. That would not have been fair nor amusing, as the deadlights of his own very comfortable apartment blinked at him every time they came to Fifty-ninth street. He was justifying to himself a very questionable move. He wished to feed this stray damsel and, at the same time, talk to her with a purpose. He could not see himself doing it in a cabaret, and every hotel supper room had already become one of those things. He came to a decision and spoke.

"I'll take a hand in your game, all right, but not just as you think. Do you—would you trust me?"

Immediately the girl was on her guard. She looked into his face and read it.

"I would never have thought of not trusting you if you hadn't asked that old, old trap question," she said gravely.

"Forget that I asked it," said Mr. Randolph promptly, and leaned out to give the driver his address. A thin-lipped and weary scorn was still on that individual's face when he drew up before Mr. Randolph's abode and honked three times derisively to the world in general as seen from the front of a taxi.

"Wait," said Mr. Randolph to the jehu, as he handed out the girl. She paused with one foot half-way to the curb, but that single word directing anything as expensive as a taxi to stand by reassured her.

Randolph preceded her to show the way and turn on lights. He never looked back to see if she followed, and this implied trust in herself seemed to drag her after him up the single flight of stairs that led to his rooms.

"Old-fashioned but cozy," he said, as he applied a latch-key and opened a door that gave directly on a large square sitting room. "I hate elevators in a place you call home."

In an open grate was a dying wood fire. He proceeded to poke and feed it at once, saying over his shoulder:

"Sit down anywhere, will you?"

Facing the fire was a deep and much worn leathern couch, with a pedestal at each end carrying shaded lamps. They were the only ones he had lighted and their glow was so subdued that it blended with that of the fire without fighting it. The girl chose to seat herself stiffly in a corner of this couch.

Mr. Randolph looked at her rigid pose with marked disapproval, but said nothing. Having rejuvenated the fire till it leaped merrily to an attack on the fresh backlog, he left the room and was absent for a considerable time. When he returned, it was to place a small table before his guest, and then he fetched a tray well loaded with those things which grace in perpetuity a healthy bachelor's larder.

He drew up a chair for himself and, with an inviting nod, started to eat a great deal and very rapidly.

"Get in on the lunch while there's time," he admonished. "I warn you there's nothing more in the house."

The girl gave him a grateful look and proceeded to fill herself with the most sustaining food within reach. She did not fail to note that there was nothing to drink but water. When they could eat no more, Mr. Randolph removed the table, and then seated himself in the opposite corner of the couch.

"You don't seem to be at ease here," he said presently. "If you think you'll be more comfortable, we can go down and sit in the cab. I want to talk to you."

The girl considered gravely for a moment; then her face broke into a rippling smile that swept up and settled in her eyes. She reached for a cushion, put it at her back, tucked one foot under herself, and waved the other in the same fashion as had Miss Van Tellier earlier in the evening.

"Now Talk," She Said.

"Now talk," she said.

"Do you like me?" asked Mr. Randolph.

She nodded her head.

"You're not afraid to be here?"

She shook denial.

"Have you ever been in a man's room before?"

She looked him straight in the eyes and made no other sign.

It was Mr. Randolph's turn to flush.

"Then," he said, "if you like me and if you're not afraid, please begin at the start and tell me all about it."

The girl's eyes fell and sought the fire. Her face slowly paled to the shade of her somber thoughts. She was no longer pretty; she was beautiful, with a revealing transparency that made her seem unfleshed, a disembodied spirit of sincerity and truth, indubitably pure.

"I had a nurse once," she said, in a low voice, "and a wire-haired terrier, a show-dog and a darling. His name was Sport." She raised solemn eyes to Randolph's face as though measuring his powers of understanding. "My nurse died and then, one day, I had to sell Sport; I wasn't old enough to sell myself."

She stopped speaking with an unmistakable finality. Randolph was overwhelmed by the flood of information that this slip of a girl had packed into two-score words. A life-story in four lines and a revelation of the heart thrown in for good measure! Over and above that, he had to reckon with the confirmation of a suspicion which had been slowly establishing itself in his mind that he had met her before, that not for the first time this night had those soft lips, curved for merry words, cried, "My, what a bump!" within his hearing.

So many considerations pressed to his immediate attention that he awoke to the actual present too late to stem the tide of tears that suddenly rose to the girl's eyes.

"Oh," she sobbed, "what is to become of me? I was so happy here, if you hadn't made me think!"

If anything has been said in the course of these pages to give the impression that Mr. Randolph was modeled after Joseph or hewn out of ice or packed with probity to the exclusion of red blood, forget it. At the sight of those tears, he slid the length of the couch to first base, fielded the girl in his arms, switched her round so that she lay across his knees, drew her face against his shoulder, and rocked her gently.

"You poor kiddie," he said softly, "what a devil of a time you've had! But believe me when I tell you it's all over. This is the night that starts your old happy sun into the blue sky again. Don't worry."

She stopped crying and looked up into the honest face so close to her own, puzzling as to how just those words could have come from it; but the world had taught her a hard lesson in varying standards. She drew a long quivering sigh.

"If you could only wait until I love you, body and soul," she breathed.

"What on earth do you mean?" asked Mr. Randolph.

"Why, then it wouldn't be so bad—so ugly."

"I don't get you," remarked Robert Hervey.

"A man told me just a little while ago that he was making a catalogue of reasons why women give themselves," she continued. "He had eleven already, and yet he was one of the nicest men I've met. He talked to me as though he were showing me a way that I must travel alone."

"Really?" said Mr. Randolph, stiffening perceptibly.

"The lowest reason of all was for cold cash," she went on, as though he had not spoken. "Then came the glitter of precious stones, and, after that, silk underwear."

FIRST BALL GAME PLANNED FOR SUNDAY

The first base ball game of the season is planned for this coming Sunday afternoon, at the local diamond east of the Rock Island depot. The game will be between two local teams, and will be simply a practice game. It will be the first of several such games before the regular season opens up. Those who will form the two teams Sunday are:

Catchers—Morse and Fulton.
Pitchers—Thomas, Wenzell, Dillon, Chapman, Skovlin and Foss.
First base—Packard and Atty. Jensen.
Second base—Jones and Kaufman.
Third base—Heinsch and Wolf.
Short stop—Collins and Scott.
Right field—Parsons and Nelson.
Center field—Harbison and Amblie.

Left field will be filled by the extra pitchers when they are not in the box.

It is expected to arrange the final details of the base ball league this week, a meeting being held for that purpose. As soon as everything is arranged, the schedule of games will be announced.

The game Sunday will start at 3:00 o'clock, and will be free of charge, no admission being charged at the gate.

CONTEMPLATIONS

I've dabbled in rhetoric, waded in Greek,
Thru chemistry hewn me a path,
I've pondered accounting until I was weak,
And swum boldly forth into Math.
I've studied Psychology, ethics, geology,
Harked to the Clarion call
Of collge and learning, for knowledge I'm yearning,
But what is the use of it all,
At all,
Oh, what is the use of it all?

There'll come graduation, I'll find occupation,
Existence that's meagre and lean;
While a respected safe-blower will move in next door
And ride in a big limousine.
But professors don't gimme instructions in "jimmy,"
How to burgle a safe in a wall.
We delve in in the mystery of Spanish or his'try,
And what is the use of it all,
At all,
Oh, what is the use of it all?

With my education and some concentration
I'll hold me a job as a clerk,
I'll keep my position thru constant ambition
And strictest attention to work.
And while I endeavor to keep ends together,
Some yap who can clout a base ball
Gets great compensation without education
Oh, what is the use of it all,
At all,
Oh, what is the use of it all?

Some chap pugilistic, with tendencies fistic,
Who can scarce write his name on the checks,
May fight thirty minutes and find there's no limits
To the size of the purse he collects.
The man with the learning at night comes returning
To three rooms, a kitchen and hall;
While the bird who can wrestle may live in a castle;
Oh what is the use of it all,
At all,
Oh, what is the use of it all?

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whooping cough.

Nature

Medicines that aid nature are always most effectual. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy acts on this plan. It allays the cough, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. Thousands have testified to its good qualities. Try it when you have a cough or cold.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

Senior Class Play To Be Given Next Month

"Nothing But The Truth," Class Play, To Be Given About May 16—Many School Doings.

FIRST BALL GAME AT CORWITH

ybody is busy as this week closes the 5th six-week period of the year. Only six more weeks of the school year remains, but much is to be done.

More play-ground apparatus arrived this week and we hope to get it in place and ready for use before school closes. The new apparatus, the traveling rings, will be of interest to the upper grades and high school pupils as well as the lower grades

No more cold weather wanted by the ball team, as we have had very little chance to practice and get ready for Hampton, April 27, the first home game of the season.

The ball team expects to go to Corwith next Friday, if weather and roads permit, and expect a hard but victorious game.

Now is the time to plan to attend the remaining events of the school year.

April 29 ____________Grade Operette
May 6 __ Cho-Cho, the Health Clown

The class play will probaby be held during the week of May 16. It promises to be the best play for several years. "Nothing but the Truth" is highly recommended.

Commencement week, May 30-June 3.

Last Saturday evening the members of the Freshman class gathered at the high school gymnasium for their second class party. The entertainment had been well planned and games were provided to occupy the entre evening.

Physical Exercise A Necessity

There has long been a question in the minds of the school officicials as to whether they should require every pupil in high school to take physical exercise or not. There is only one answer to this question. It should be required, for what a student do in his school work with a poorly developed body? Of course, the opposing side would raise as an argument the fact that some pupils are not physically able to take athletic exercises. We admit this fact to be true; still, with a good physician's aid, these students, who have weak hearts or other physical defects, could be found and excused from active training or given work especially adapted to their condition.

There is still another unanswerable argument on the affirmative side. As we have good a gymnasium, why not use it for the benefit of every student in high school, instead of the few—not more than thirty at present "reaping the harvest" from it. The only ones who are now obtaining any benefit from the gym are the members of the basket ball teams The only pupils who will be admitted into the basket ball squads are those who aready have good physical health Therefore, it is only the pupils who do not especially need the physical training who are at present obtaining it. With these unquestionable facts in mind, I sincerely hope that the school board will take immediate steps to have physical training a required part of the school activities.—Leona Reed.

Why Be Untidy?

Tht looks of the halls of the school building could be much improved by an intensive cultivation of the habit of tidiness on the part of each individual pupil. Coats and other wraps are hung on the locker doors, which are usually wide open. Hooks are provided for the wraps, so why not use them? Books, papers and various other articles are strewn around on the floor outside of the lockers. It is not an uncommon thing to hear someone saying, "I can't find my pencil," or, "My notebook's gone." Have you seen anything of it?"

If the books and papers are kept tidy, in the lockers, not only time and money could be saved, but the appearance of the hall would be vastly improved.

A pupil is judged by his attitude toward keeping other people's property as well as his own. B. H. S. does not want any of its pupils to be thought of as careless or disinterested in those details which tend to make their school the best in the country.—Cloe Thomas.

The literary program of last Friday was marked by the appearance of an unusual number of freshmen in individual contributions. When that ordeal is over, the freshman feels that he is truly initiated into the society.

Ex-Cashier Indicted By Grand Jury On Two Counts

Ex-Cashier Who Misappropriated Funds From Bank To Face The Court On Two Charges.

BONDS ARE PLACED AT $20,000

John Berg, ex-cashier of the State Bank of this place, and who misappropriated the funds of that institution, last fall, was indicted by the grand jury last week on two counts. Bonds were fixed at thirty thousand dollars, and it is understood these bonds were later reduced to twenty thousand.

The bonds have been furnished, a number of local men standing good for them.

It is not known at this time when Berg's trial will take place. He is represented by three attorneys, Jensen of Belmond, Files of Webster City, and Birdsall of Clarion.

A number of local men, and some of the bankers of the county, were called before the grand jury. On what counts he was indicted is not known, the report being that one of them was in connection with Liberty bonds, which he is alleged to have used unlawfully.

Mr. Berg has been at the Steele hospital here for several days, being ill. Dr. Steele has been deputized as deputy sheriff.

Mr. Berg has made no effort to make a "get away," and the fixing of his bonds at the amount stated was more form than need.

Walt Ramsay came up from Des Moines last week to spend a few days at the home of his brother Wallace and to meet old friends.

Another Pioneer Goes On The Long, Long Trail

G. H. Richardson, Pioneer Banker Of Belmond Dies In California After Lingering Illness.

FOUNDED FIRST BANK HERE

The people of Belmond were saddened last week when word was received here that G. H. Richardson had died at his home in Rialto, California.

Mr. Richardson died on Tuesday night, April 12, after but a few days of serious illness. He was in bed but five days. Altho he had been failing for several years, the friends had hoped that the change of climate would restore him to his natural state of health. Death was due to advanced age and the infirmities incidental to it.

The body was brought back to Belmond, his home for many years and from which place he moved a year and a half ago to California. Funeral services were held yesterdy at the Congregational church, of which he was a member and had long been a faithful worker, the Rev. Northrop of Parkersburg, a former pastor, preaching the sermon and the local lodge of Masons in charge.

Interment was in Franklin Grove cemetery, beside some of his family. tives.

Mr. Richardson was born in Waterloo, Canada, 77 years ago, February 7, 1844. He came to Belmond from Alden in the days just after the civil war. For a time he was engaged in the stock and grain buying business, having charge of the old elevator at the Iowa Central tracks.

Later he founded the first bank in Belmond, The Iowa Valley Bank, later changed to the First National Bank. This bank was a private bank, but Mr. Richardson's dealings were so fair and acomodating that the bank prospered greatly, and he was enabled to erect the present building occupied by the First National up to the time of its consolidation with the State Bank.

Mr. Richardson was a member of the local Masonic lodge, and for a time was Master of the lodge. He had always been prominent in pubic works and improvements, had been numbered among the progressive citizens of the town, and made a host of friends both in his private and business ilfe.

A complete obituary will be printed next week.

THE NEW CIGARET LAW

The new cigarette law requires all dealers in small towns to pay a license of $50 a year. The fee for small cities is $75 and for the large places it is $100, says the Clipper. Those who pay the amounts named are supposed to take a special interest in the enforcement of the law. If they violate the law their $1,000 bond will be surrendered. License fees go to town and city treasuries and the stamp fee to the state treasury. It is believed that the new law will bring $1,000,000 a year into the state, town and city funds.

FORMER BELMOND WOMAN DIES SUDDENLY AT HOME

Mrs. David W. Colvin, Resident Of Belmond Many Years Ago, Dies At Home In Pocahontas.

The Pocahontas Democrat recently carried an item of the death at her home there of Mrs. David W. Colvin, who will be remembered by the older people of Belmond as a former resident of this place. She and her husband were engaged in the restaurant business here some twenty or twenty-five years ago. The Democrat said in part:

The people of Pocahontas were given a shock Thursday morning of last week when it was learned that Mrs. D. W. Colvin had died suddenly during the night at her home in this city. Wednesday afternoon she was seen on the street by her friends and from all appearances was in the best of health. She chatted and visited with them and was in a very happy state of mind and spoke of several plans she had made for the coming summer.

Hattie May Forest was born at Waterford, Washington county, Ohio on March 15, 1871. In the summer of 1887 she was united in marriage at Beverely, Ohio, to David Colvin. They made their early home in Waterford, and at Morris, Ill., coming to Iowa in 1891, taking up their residence at Ames and several other places in northwest Iowa. Twenty-one years ago they located in Pocahontas and have continued their residence here until the time of her sudden death on March 30.

Prospects For Band Appear To Be Better

Band Boys In Touch With Leader And Will Hold Meeting This Week To Consider.

OLD PLAYERS PROMISE TO PLAY

The band boys will have another meeting this week, and the prospects right now appear to be first class for a good band here this summer.

The boys are negotiating with the leader of the Hampton and Ackley bands, an experienced musician who has gained a wide reputation for the work he has done.

This leader has been leading the Ackley band for several years. He received $1,200 a year last year, and the business men of that place gave him a six hundred dollar raise this year, so that he is now receiving for this year's work $1,800.

The leader spends two days a week at Hampton and two at Ackley, and has promised, if arrangements are completed here, to spend the same time at Belmond with the band. It is also planned to have him conduct classes in music during his two days here each week, and there are already a number of prospective pupils.

The boys, when definite action on the band has been taken, will notify the Chamber of Commerce, who will then start the campaign for funds. A trifle over $1,300 was raised last year for the band, but there are a number of business establishments which were not on the list last year who are expected to be on this season, for it will require as much or more money to carry the program thru this year.

It is at present planned to have a four months' concert season, beginning about the first of June. The prospects so far are good, the boys are willing to concede much, and with a little boosting the town can have its band. Get behind and push, for Belmond needs the band; we can't afford not to have it.

CITY COUNCIL PLANNING ON STREET CHANGES

Desire To Rename Spruce Street, Main Business Street, And Call Side Streets By Numbers.

ASK SUGGESTIONS ON NAME

Independent Offers Five Dollars In Cash For Best Name Submitted For Spruce Street.

Can you suggest a better and more appropriate name for Spruce street?

If you can, you stand a chance of winning five dollars.

The city authorities, after considering the matter, have decided that the proper thing to do is to name the street, and then change all the east and west streets on the north and south sides to First street north, First street south, Second street north and so on.

But they want a more appropriate name for the main business street. Spruce street as the present name is unknown by many, while Main street, as it is usually called, is in reality the next street south of Spruce.

After the streets have been named, the names of them will be placed on all corners, and the houses numbered, so that in directing a stranger where to find a certain house or a certain building, he will not be told to "go three blocks east, then go four and a half blocks north, then cut across that place with the big cottonwood trees, and its the third house on the north side of the next block." Instead he can be told that the party he seeks lives at No. 231 Blank street, or at the corner of First street south and Market street.

The council wishes to know the ideas of the people on the question, and ask that the citizens of the town send in their suggestion to them, or to the mayor, for what they think is a good name for Spruce street.

To make it more interesting and worth while, the Independent will give five dollars in cash to the person who first sends in the name that is chosen. An accurate record will be kept of the names and the time received, so that if two or more send in the same name, the one who sends it in first wins.

The council and mayor will judge the names. No time limit was set, but the council is anxious to have the new name suggested as soon as possible, so the quicker you send in your choice the more apt you are to win the five dollars.

Names will be judged on their suitability. Remember that Spruce street is the main business street, not a residence street proper, and send in a name that will apply. The names suggested will be printed in the Independent next week, and the winning name and name of the person who suggested it, printed as soon as decided.

Come on, send your suggestion. Five dollars to the best one sent in.

Don't send the names to us, but to the council or mayor.

DO YOU WANT WORK?

If any young man in the town of Belmond, or in the vicinity at all, wants a job at good wages, inquire at the Independent office and he can quickly get it.

Last week the Independent offered to help find help for the farmers, if they wanted any, and cited the fact that several young men had inquired at this office for jobs on the farms.

The farmers evidently want some help, for no less than half a dozen came in or called up to take advantage of the offer made. They are offering from $35 to $50 a month and "found," which right now and for some time to come, evidently, is good wages.

And so, do you want work? The Independent will be only too glad to bring the supply and demand together. Who's first?

FREE AIR!

As we have remarked before, the way folks will take something that is put in the paper varies considerably.

Take that list of fines last week, the special department you were to be on the lookout for, you remember.

Some folks didn't like the department at all—queer. And others were of the opinion that said department was a whiz.

And there you are.

That department isn't really ours, you know; we just print it. The copy is furnished and originates with His honor.

We want Matt to have due credit for this feature, because he deserves to have it.

One guy, he just bawled the everlastin' blazes outa us for having the thing on the place: said we had no business printing such stuff, it ought to be kept quiet. Not to us, he didn't say it; wonder why?

If such things should be kept out then such things shouldn't be done.

You know how it is.

Then there was another fellow, who came in and laughed with us at what we said recently regarding the way he negoiated a deal for some home made hootch. He seemed to think it was a joke, and took it that way.

Which kind of folks are the joy of the editor's life.

We have a suggestion to make to the government, one that we believe will prove of great value in making the foreign policy of the nation stronger and more effective.

We suggest that they appoint none but small town editors to foreign offices. A diplomate has to trike a happy medium without being struck himself, and at this the small town editor has the finest kind of training. He becomes expert.

There was a report, last week, that Hizzoner had been pulled for parking his car on the wrong side of the street, and would have a regular trial just like other folks. We wondered whether he would do like the judge in Nome, Alaska, who got on a tear and arrested himself. The judge had been fining the rest of the boys pretty steep for the same offense, and they all wondered what he would do to himself.

The judge pleads guilty to himself, and fines himself one hundred bucks, and then, in view of the fact that it was his first offense, he remitted the fine on good behavior.

But we don't believe Matt could get away with that kind of a noise. And anyway, he declares he hasn't been pulled yet anyway. (He said not to say anything about this, because he might get it yet.)

We understand that some of the high brows have been criticizing the English we use in Free Air. They picked all kinds of flaws in the way we treated the language.

Free Air isn't here for the last ten of the upper four hundred, the aristocrats of the bulging-brow viewpoint; the Air is here for the phebian class, the plain every-day you-and me folks who call a spade a spade and not an agriculture implement, and who call people folks not inhabitants.

This stuff is written to put the plain birds hep to the bunk of the times, to keep the jazz mixed with the uplifting thoughts of the universe spread upon the breeze by those intellectuals who contemplate the starry heavens filled with noble and uplifting thoughts that never seem to lift 'em very far above the ordinary kind.

If you get the meaning, which is doubtful, because we hardly know the meaning ourself.

It's so easy to criticise the mistakes of others, but hard not to make a few ourselves. Take the American Legion benefit play last week Sunday. There were some who gave the boys happy thoughts for having the play on Sunday. And we wondered whether they objected, too, during the war, to the boys fighting on Sunday, and whether they wrote the enemy notes asking if he would kindly consent to call off the fuss on Sunday so the boys wouldn't break the Sabbath—and the enemy's heads.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

In the face of the present low prices for farm products and with a price which is not proportionately reduced for the finished product which he must have to live, the average farmer is asking "Where do we go from here?" He is wondering whether he has reached the bottom of this period of deflation. He is asking himself whether he should plant the usual acreage of the various crops when the price which he received for last year's crops was less than half the cost of production, counting cost of seed and labor used in the different operations.

If history repeats itself we all must expect to experience a period of depression, a time of low prices which necessarily follows a war period. We must all sit tight and not rock the boat but have faith in the future which surely holds relief in store for all of us. We all know that industrial and commercial conditions have a great influence in this present crisis and there are those who would say that the discouraging times which we are passing thru will have a good effect in that they will bring about a reduction in the price of labor in the various lines of industry and commerce.

Everyone knows that in the face of the low prices for farm products, with corn selling at 31c, oats at 23c, and hogs at less than 8c, the outlook for the farmer, the producer if you please, is rather discouraging at present with very little relief in the near future in sight. In the midst of these low and declining prices the farmer is fortunate in having an organization such as the National Farm Bureau Federation to look to for some relief in the present emergency. The farmer should not expect the farm bureau to give immediate relief in this crisis since it was brought on by conditions which can not be controlled by any one organization but he should rest assured that the American Farm Bureau federation as well as our local farm bureau will bend every effort towards a relief from the existing conditions of agriculture in the United States.

LAKE TOWNSHIP HOLDS SOCIAL

Lake township Farm Bureau held their regular monthly social at the Lake center school Tuesday evening, April 12.

An interesting program consisting of dialogues and recitations by the local school and short talks by J. H. Abernathy of Boone township and the county agent was enjoyed by about one hundred men and women and children of Lake township.

Our local farm bureau is beginning to enlist the services of some of the men living within the county. It has been found that we have plenty of talent right at home and the farm bureau is beginning to draw on this talent in conducting meetings within the county.

From a practical standpoint the address which was given by Mr. J. H. Abernathy, who is chairman of the Boone township farm bureau, was more interesting, more instructive and more to the point than any address which has been given by specialists from the extension staff at Ames. Mr. Abernathy has a pleasing way of presenting facts and figures which was very convincing in preaching the gospel of the farm bureau.

Boone township should be congratulated upon the fact that they have a man who is so thoroly versed in the activities of the farm bureau as a state and national organization and also that he is capable of presenting this information in such a pleasing manner that townships are beginning to ask for Mr. Abernathy in different parts of the county.

IOWA SOCIAL AT STOUT HOME

Iowa township farm bureau held a social and business meeting at the home of Sim Stout, two miles north of Rowan, Wednesday evening, April 13.

About forty or fifty Iowa farmers and their families turned out to this meeting and gave their loyal support to the organizaton of a community club in the vicinity of Rowan.

In laying plans for the social developements of the community an executive committee of three members was appointed by the chairman to take full charge and be responsible for the regular social meetings which are to be held hereafter. It was decided that one member of the executive social committee was to be selected from the north, central and south portions of the township, the township to be divided into three districts or tiers of three school districts each, thus making the north tier to consist of school districts No. 1, 2 and 3. This system of social organization in the county has been tried by several other townships and has given very satisfactory results, and we believe that with the talent which Iowa township possesses it will not be long until we wil hear from Iowa township as far as social activities are concerned.

PRES. HUNT TO ADDRESS GRANT

Mr. C. W. Hunt, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation, Des Moines, Iowa, will be the principal speaker at the Grant township farm bureau social which is to be held at the Grant No. 1 school on the evening of Thursday, April 21.

The program committee, of which Mrs. Harry Woodley is chairman, has arranged an interesting program consisting of recitations and dialogues by the pupils of the local school. Mr. E. W. Campbell, chairman for the Lake township farm bureau, will also give a short talk at this program.

Mr. C. L. Hall and Mrs. Myrle Peck township chairmen for Grant, urge every farmer and his family to turn out to this program for April 21.

HOW ABOUT THAT TWINE ORDER?

Order blanks were sent from the farm bureau office to each farm bureau member and most of the orders have been signed and returned to the county agent, while a few have not returned their order blanks as yet.

Those who have not placed their orders either with the elevator managers or dealers who have order blanks, or with the county agent, should do so at once because no orders will be accpted after April 23, for the reason that all orders must be in the hands of the company with which the entire order is being placed before April 25.

WRIGHT COUNTY SPECIALISTS

Miss Margaret Baker, food specialist from Ames will be in Wright county, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, April 20, 21, 22, and will lecture in the townships which have arranged for her in their program of work. Miss Baker is thoroly familia with all food and nutrition problems and will surely have a message for all the ladies who can arrange to hear her lecture.

Miss Marion Tucker, clothing specialist from Ames, will also be in the county Thursday and Friday, April 28 and 29, and will lecture and give demonstrations in townships which have included her in their program of work for the year.

DODGING THE FARM

Efforts on the part of the state of Minnesota to give away some good farming land to incoming aliens, in an effort to get use of some cut over lands up there, have been unavailing.

Efforts to get aliens to take up farm lands in the reclaimed sections of swamps in southern Illinois have brought no better results. Of course, many immigrants cannot buy land. A batch that was checked up on arrival the other day had an average of less than five cents apiece of American money, and then, besides, they did not want to become farmers. They had heard of America and knew it as the land of the free, so they felt free to come over, free from any incumbrance of cash, to settle down in some city and live, free of entanglements, off some of their relatives already arrived.

In this way, quoting Immigration Commissioner Wallis, "they hope to learn th ropes." For this reason—this inclination to learn the ropes in a city—they do not want to go out to the farms.

But their coming over, and their inclination to loaf in the cities, or work for next to nothing for awhile, only serves to drive a lot of former farm folks back to the country, or will serve to do so, if this period of depression continues.

But why should we blame aliens for not wanting to go to the farms of the country when our young Americans, bred and born, are beating a retreat fro mthe farm, or will not leave the overcrowded cities to take up good hard, honest to goodness work on the land?

It is laziness on the part of immigrants that keeps many of them in the city, and it is laziness that is driving many people off thefarms They go to the city and the first thing they know they are running a one-horse boarding house, while the boys in the family are loafing around pool halls and the girls are struggling thru some business college trying to get a start for themselves and a chance to get something better than the boarding house home that their parents have made for them in lieu of being able to get by in the city. To the credit of the female of the country transplanted to the city it must be said that she will work, while one-half of the males taken off the farm and put in the city, sink to the lower levels, because they are inherently lazy.

It is an indisputable fact that the most of the people on the farm are there because they are not afraid to work. The lazy ones leave the farm, among others, and they become lazier in the city. The city affords them so many chances for laziness. Most any man is ashamed of being seen loafing, but in the city one can loaf along in the throng, or stand watching a steam shovel excavate for a building, or gaze up at steel workers by the hour and not be noticed. And how blissful laziness is in the city!

Between lazy, poverty stricken immigrants, and the lazy, shiftless element that is migrating from the farm to the cities, the cities are in a bad way. We talk of moral reform, but how can it be accomplished when people are too lazy to work? and get in the way of lawlessness because of unwillingness to work? Laziness and crime and vice and immorality go hand in hand. The man or woman who is busy at some useful task very seldom, if ever, turns to vice or crime. Those that will not work have to turn to crime and viciousness to secure a living.—Exchange.

SIXTY PER CENT OF FRUIT ESTIMATED RUINED

Sixty per cent of the fruit of the mid-west was estimated as being ruined by the freeze of last week, according to estimates made last week Monday by representatives of fruit growers at that city. They had received reports from all over the fruit growing belt telling of the immense damage done.

The damage caused will run into the millions of dollars, it is estimated.

Orchards in Iowa, Nebraska, western Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and in parts of Michigan were hard hit by the freezing weather.

The temperatures in these states hovered around freezing again on Friday and Saturday nights. Huge smudge fires were kept burning to protect orchards still untouched by the frost.

Cherry trees now in bloom suffered most. However, other early blooming fruit trees were also injured.

One large fruit dealer in Chicago declared that the crop this year would not be more than 40 per cent normal even if there is no futher damage.

TIMES THAT WERE HARD

It is not unusual to hear a group of men, often farmers, consoling each other over the present low prices and the shortage of money. No one can deny but trying conditions do exist and that many men rich in land with thousands of bushels of corn on hand are hard up for money. However, no real hardships exist. Feed is plentiful, no one suffers for lack of food, the country has an oversupply of everything except money. Many of the most prosperous farmers realize this. They have gone thru a period of genuine hard times. The pioneer of this country suffered hardships. Food was scare and money scarcer. One retired farmer tells how his father, a pioneer here, came to town during the cold winter after some corn meal for his family consisting of a wife and five or six children. He walked seven miles to Algona and was refused a half bushel of meal by one merchant because he had no money. Another merchant let him have it and he returned to his home where corn meal and molasses was the chief bill of fare. This is but one instance in perhaps thousands. It is only a few years ago, any voter can remember, when northern Iowa was covered with water. Farmers had great difficulty in putting in crops and often they were never harvested. Money was scarce, so was seed and food, and many merchants who had undertaken to carry their customers from one year to another failed, while a number of farmers were sold out of house and home by creditors. Those were the hard times and conditions are so much better now that it seems almost a sin to complain.—Upper Des Moines Republican.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whoop-

JUDGE WRIGHT LANDS ON ADMINISTRATORS

Judge R. M. Wright, in an open letter to the public, scores the dilatory tactics of administrators and executors in the handling of estates in the course of settlement. He says:

There is one matter of public interest and public welfare that is not brought by the press sufficiently before the public. It is this—the negligence of administrators, executors, trustees and guardians.

Negligence brings more woe upon the people than any other one thing that can be mentioned—railway accidents, automobile accidents, accidental (negligent) fires, etc. etc. It is, however, when we come to consider the management and settlement of real estates in which there is cestuique trust or when they are heirs, devisees, wards, or legatees, that negligence reaches its maximum. To get guardians, adminstrators, executors and trustees to make their reports to the courts at the times that the law requires is a Herculean task. To the judges and clerks, it is a veritabl nightmare. Some estates that ought to be closed at least as early as the end of the second year after adminstration begins, frequently run along, or rather drag along, for six, eight or even ten years. Yes, I have known of some estates that drifted along for fifteen years, and until many of the interested parties were dead; and then there came law suits to quiet title and the like.

The clerks sent out notices to delinquents—to some who it turns out have left the state, to some who, afterwards he finds out are dead, to some who pay no attention to the notices. Not infrequently the court has to threaten to cite delinquents to appear before him for contempt of court, and, in some instances, he has actually cited them to appear and show cause why they should not be adjudged in contempt of court. Now it is a well known fact that during the time an estate is unsettled, the property deteriorates and runs down in value more than it would if in the hands of its owner or owners The necessary repairs are not made at the time they should be made, the tenants are not as carefully selected nor as carefully looked after. Unnecessary costs are made in handling the estate by reason of prolonging the administration. The interest on the money belonging to the estate frequently is not collected as promptly as it would be by the owner as it should be. And worst of all, when matters are negligently allowed to drift along, the interested parties become dissatisfied, as they well may, and begin to grumble and find fault, and frequently members of families who had always heretofore lived in perfect harmony and good will towards each other, become alienated from each other, and bitterness takes the place of love and affection. To paraphrase the language of Coleridge afterward they stand aloof from each other, like cliffs that have been rent asunder, and between them forever thereafter there flows a dreary sea of hatred and ill will.

I know all about this; for, fourteen years while on the bench, I have seen this kind of negligence in operation. Clerks who are trying to do their duty send notice after notice to the delinquents, who ought to do their duty and conform to the requirements of the law without any notice whatever. Sometimes the clerks get respectful answers to their letters; sometimes and quite frequently, they get no answers at all, and occasionally they get saucy, belligerent and insulting answers. If a man can't or won't do the duty required of him by the law, let him refuse to take the job. If, however, he does take the job and is willing to take the fees, the court must, and will, insist that he shall perform the duties which the law imposes upon him.—Clipper.

BREAKS BACK IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Oswald Solsaa, the 19-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Solsaa, residing on a farm four miles north of Ventura, suffered a broken back early Wednesday night of last week when the car in which he was riding turned over, pinning him beneath the front seat. The accident occurred within 30 rods of the home.

His parents heard the crash of the upset and immediately rushed to their son's aid. He was taken to the house and two physicians from Clear Lake were summoned. He was taken Monday to a Mason City hospital but little hopes are held for his recovery.

The accident occorred at seven o'clock. He was traveling at a speedy rate, it is said. He was riding west, but the car, following the overturning, was facing east.—Garner Signal.

The readers of this paper will be very much interested in a wedding which took place at nLong Beach, California, on Easter morning at ten o'clock. Miss Anna May Bell and Mr. Edmund Preice Marble were united in marriage by Rev. L. L. Magee, puastor of the Zaferia M. E. church at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. John Herman, 1403 Redono Ave.

The bridal couple were attended by little Evelyn Herman, niece of the briide, as flower girl, and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Bell as best man and maid of honor. The bride was daintily attired in lavender organdie over pink satin. She wore a bridal veil and carried a beautiful bouquet of pink rosebuds tied with white tulle. The ceremony was performed in front of a bower of bridal wreaths and white snowbells.

Previous to the ceremony, Mr. Arnold des Plantes of Glendale, sang 'Because," by Guy d' Hardelot and was accompanied by Mrs. des Plantes who also played the wedding march, from Lohengrin. Heary congratulations were tendered Mr. and Mrs. Marble and also Mr. and Mrs. Glen Bell, who were married on March 26.

A wedding dinner was served by the bride's sister, oMrs. John Herman, to 24 of the deaest friends and relatives of the newly-weds. The young couple will be at home to their many friends after April 15, at Bunker Hill, Los Angeles.

Mr Marble was formerly from Waterloo, Iowa, finishing East high school there He had two years of college at Mt. Vernon and last fall completed a concert tour thru the southern states. Mrs. Marble and Glen Bell are well known at Alexander and are the daughter and son of Wm. Bell who was a former resident of this place.

ALEXANDER SCHOOL NOTES

Mrs. C. R. Clarke, Mrs. Henry Schulte and Mrs. Fred Green field were 4th grade visitors last Thursday afternoon.

Deacon Briggs and wife who have been visiting at Palsville and other nearby communities visited high school last Friday.

The following pupils of the 6th grade were neither absent nor tardy the past six weeks: Sylvia Arends, Hazel Arends, Dick Blau, Herbret Bohlen. Theodore Bohlen, Edith Edens, Johnnie Freerks, Harry Hall, Mildred Larsen and Elmer Kieslich.

The high school play given last Thursday night was wel attended, considering the inclement weather, and bad roads. Each participant performed his part well, thus showing that their coach, Miss Scheideman, had given them thoro drilling.

The 4th grade reports the following pupils perfect in attendance during the period just closed: Alyer Hagen, Verna Larsen, Henry Moddermann, Esther Muhlenbruck, and Helen Suntken.

Several pupils have already enrolled and more are expected to join the poultry club. A list containing the names of various breeders having eggs for sale, may be obtained from the superintendent's office or from county agent. Those pupils in first grade perfect in attendance during the past six weeks were Harold yyKerch, Leona Geitz, Amelia Yakel, Elsie Pals, Albert Ammerman, Johnnie Bergman and Henry Bergman.

HAMPTON ORGANIZES A VIGILANCE GUARD

Guard Composed Of Real Scrappers Armed With Real Guns To Do Real Work.

The vigilance guard of Hampton which was organized last year for the purpose of guarding the town against robbers and effecting their capture should they visit the town, has been rounded into shape and recently met at the sheriff's office for the purpose of looking over the past and future situation.

The county has been divided into eight districts, with seven men and a captain to each district. They are each sworn in as deputy sheriffs with power to and autherity to make any arrests they see fit. They are armed to the teeth with riot guns and heavy calibre revolvers. About half of the force are ex-service men who saw the real stuff overseas.

The guard has plans whereby, when or if a robbery occurs, the main roads leading into town are to be patrolled and the guard on the watch for the culprits, each armed and with power to make arrests if the chance arrives.

CLARION PLANNING ON COMMUNITY BUILDING

The American Legion of Clarion is backing a movement at that place to erect a Community House for the county seat town. The plan was endorsed at a recent meeting of the post at that city, and a committee appointed to meet with the commercial club there to work out the matter. Under a new law towns are permitted to bond themselves for such purposes and are allowed a tax of not more than five mills for the upkeep of the building. The proposed building at Clarion is estimated at a cost of around sixty thousand dollars.

CHURCH NOTES

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

The Ladies Aid society will hold a social afternoon in the parlors of the church on Thursday. All are invited to attend.

Last Sunday was another banner day but we hope to raise the standard a little higher next Sunday. Let us make it 125 strong next Sunday at 10:00. The morning worship at 11:00 and the evening services are at 8:00. The young peoples choir is giving us some fine music at the evening services. We would like to have a few more young men in the choir.

Spring has come and the roads are good and we hope to have the help of everyone in making our church count for more in the shaping of lives in the community.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.

Preaching services at 11:00 a. m. and 8:00 p. m.

Epworth League devotional meeting at 7:00 p. m.

Thursday evening of this week we have the second of our bi-weekly suppers and "get-togethers." Supper will be served at 6:30. Following the supper Dr. J. J. Bushnell, our district superintendent, will give a short devotional address, after which he will hold a metting of the Quarterly Conference. All official members of the church are urged to present and any others interested are welcome.

Give the church and things of God a place in your life.

The Mesdames Ramsay, Edge, Bailey and Snyder were among the ladies from here who attend the convention of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society at Clarion last week. Mrs. Ramsay is president of the society in this county.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Eaton drove to Mason City on Monday of last week on a business trip.

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. church has added an improvement to the parsonage, by remodeling the porch and several other improvements that add to the comfort of the place.

Miss Clyde Fuller and her sister came last week from Washington, D. C., for a visit with friends and relatives here. They were formerly residents of this place. They are visiting at the home of their unile, Mr. Timby.

The Kings Heralds met at the home of Helen Luick on Saturday of last week. Some twenty or twenty-five were present and a very enjoyable afternoon is reported.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Court convened Monday morning and adjourned that evening until Wednesday morning to permit the members of the bar to attend the funeral of Sheriff Fisher. On Monday a jury was empanelled in the H. Hodges vs. G. H. Jameson case. Three women are serving on this jury, Mrs. Corilla J. Beck of Clarion, Mrs. Leva Knutson of Eagle Grove, and Miss Mary Gealow of Belmond.

The case is a $20,000 damage suit. The petition states that on April 28, 1918, there was an unsettled partnership between the plaintiff and the defendant, and upon Mr. Jameson's request Mr. Hodges went to the former's office for the purpose of making settlement. Mr. Jameson had prepared two notes, one for $149 and the other for $250, which he demanded that the plaintiff sign.

Petition further states that while plaintiff was endeavoring to reach an amicable agreement, defendant locked the door of his office and assaulted the plaintiff, who was seated in a chair, choking him and said, "You must sign these notes or you'll never get out of here alive."

Mr. Hodges alleges that the reason of the assault, the imprisonment in the room, threatening words, he, under duress, executed the two notes and was later assisted from the office by a third person. As a result of this malicious act he has suffered greatly in body and mind, and by reason thereof has been damaged in the sum of $20,000. —Clipper.

(This case went to the jury late Thursday afternoon, and after four hours resulted in a verdict of acquittal for Jameson.)

Monitor: The grand jury will reconvene Thursday (last week) and take up unfinished business.

An appointment to fill vacancy will be made by the board of supervisors to the office of sheriff in the near future.

The Mexican arrested some time ago and held in jail on a charge of stealing several silk dresses from the Stark store, has been released for want of evidence to convict.

Chris Nelson, assessor for Boone township for 19 or 20 years, he does not remember which, brought his books to the court house yesterday to be turned over to Auditor Walker.

Thursday of last week was naturalization day in district court, and the following were admitted to citizenship:

Victor Earnest Pinkele, of Eagle Grove, a native of Germany.

John Patrick Whitty, of Clarion, a native of Ireland.

Jean Louis Scheppler of Woolstock a native of Germany.

Harold Theo. Halgerson of Goldfield, a native of Norway.

Edward Bates Kelling of Clarion, a native of England.

Application of George H. Vivian of Eagle Grove, Alfred Pehl of Clarion, Carl John Kalvig of Belmond and Anton Espeland of Eagle Grove were continued.

Mathia Ramer, a native of Austria, was denied citizenship, having used an assumed name.

Martin Nissen of Belmond, a native of Germany, was denied citizenship because witnesses were incompetent. Ole Tysdal of Rowan, a native of Denmark, was denied citizenship for the same reason.

Application of Hugo Cornelson of Goldfield, a native of Germany, was dismissed because of death of petitioner.

John Adoph Anderson of Clarion, a native of Swenden, was denied citizenship, his witnesses proving incompetent. Clipper.

TELEPHONE RATE REDUCTIONS

The number of telephone calls you make in a month multiplied by the average distance traveled by each message, gives you an idea of the value of telephone service; divide this into the monthly charge and the result is what you pay per message-mile for telephone service. This is the fairest unit of comparison that we have. Apply it and you will find that telephone service is now cheaper than ever before.

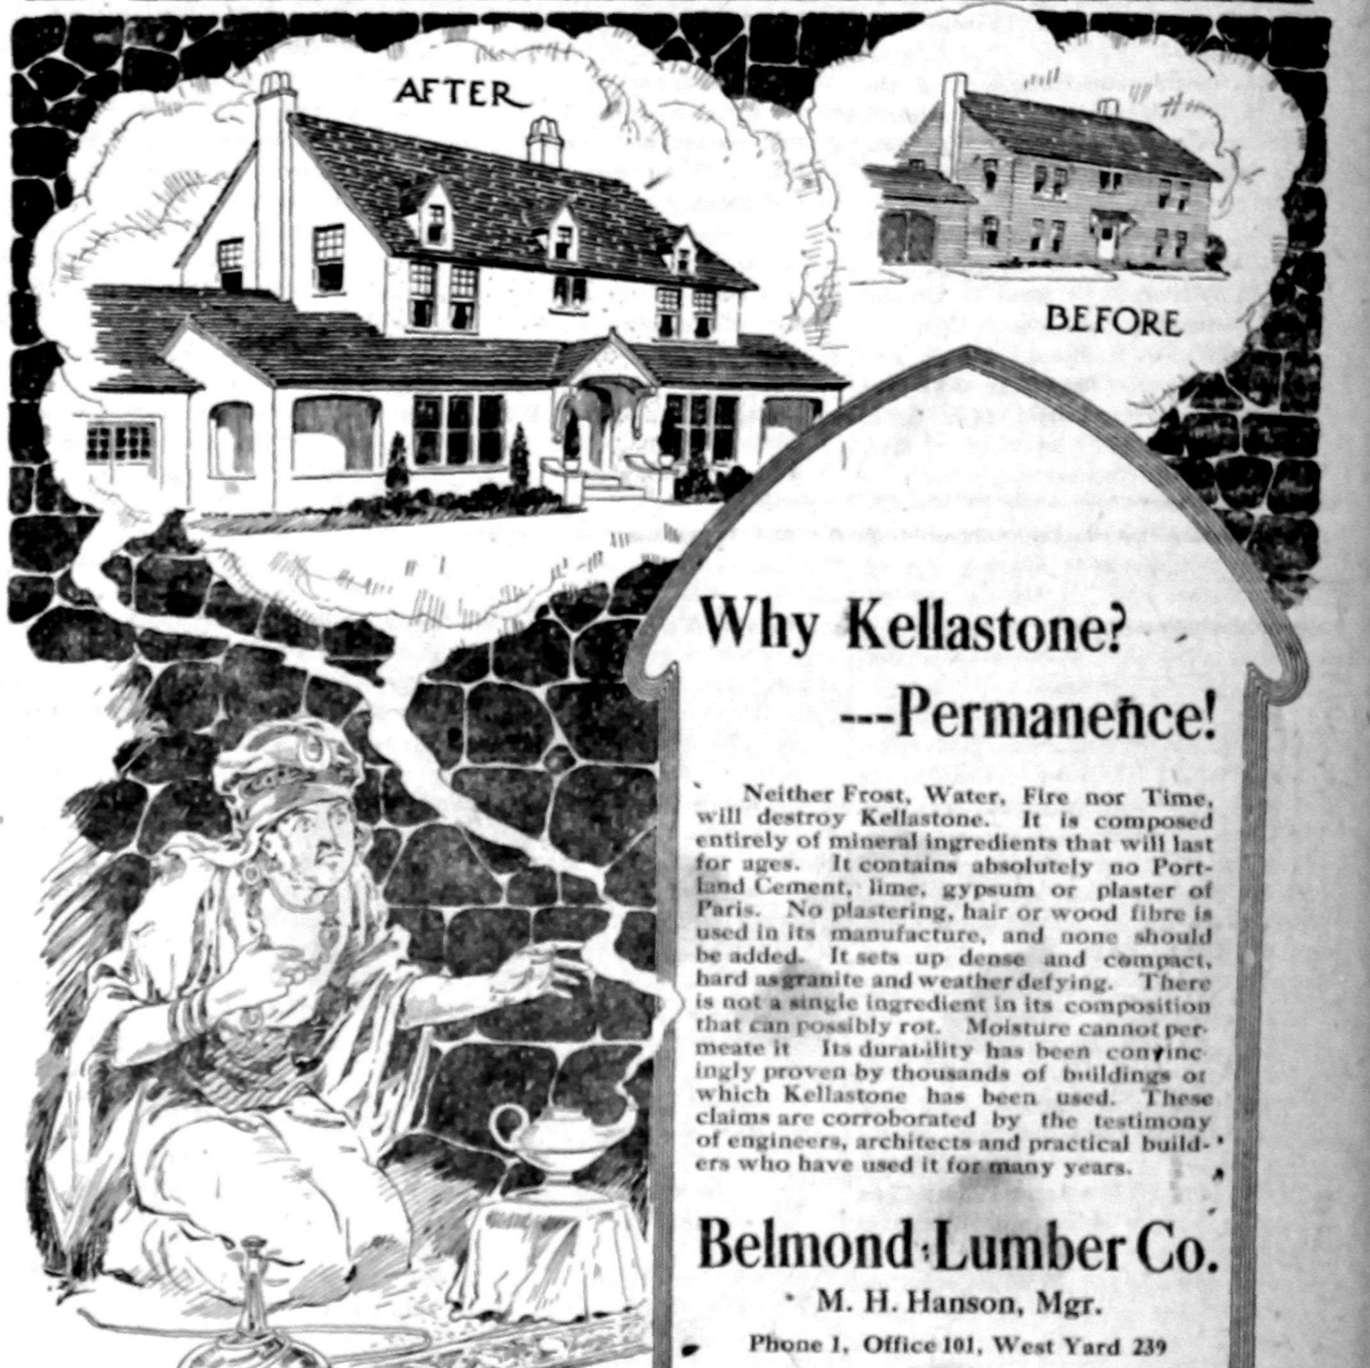
KELLASTONE
IMPERISHABLE STUCCO



Why Kellastone? ---Permanence!

Neither Frost, Water, Fire nor Time, will destroy Kellastone. It is composed entirely of mineral ingredients that will last for ages. It contains absolutely no Portland Cement, lime, gypsum or plaster of Paris. No plastering, hair or wood fibre is used in its manufacture, and none should be added. It sets up dense and compact, hard as granite and weather defying. There is not a single ingredient in its composition that can possibly rot. Moisture cannot permeate it. Its durability has been convincingly proven by thousands of buildings on which Kellastone has been used. These claims are corroborated by the testimony of engineers, architects and practical builders who have used it for many years.

"THE KID"
CHARLEY CHAPLIN

Charley is himself, but he has injected himself into a story of heart interest that has seldom been equalled. The synopsis of it sounds rather trite for it starts with the abandonment of her baby by the Woman who has been wronged. Charlie finds the baby and raises him to boyhood. The typical Chaplinesque methods of raising the Kid are responsible for a good part of the humor with which the piece abounds, while his pitable whimsical procedure to gain the child's love dampened many an eye. The dramatic climx of the film comes with Chaplin's losing fight, and the Kid's despair when the aw separates them, but this is followed by a bit of comedy which, perhaps, is the best of the piece that people laugh the lumps out of their throats.

If you love comedy you cannot afford to miss this one.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Healey came the first of the week from Long Beach, California, to attend the funeral of Mrs. Healey's father, G. H. Richardson. They report the sunshine state as being prosperous and as enjoyable as usual. Ray is at present engaged in erecting some apartment buildings.

They Appeal to Our Sympathies

The bilious and dyspeptic are constant sufferers and appeal to our sympathies. Many such, however, have been completely restored to health by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. These tablets strengthen the stomach, invigorate the liver and improve the digestion. They also cause a gentle movement of the boweus. When you have any trouble with your stomach, give them a trial.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

KLEMME MAN ONLY MISSES WINNING HALF AN EGG

Klemme Times: One evening last week two of the young men who are on the sewer gang got into an argument about eggs. "Hershy" claimed he could down two dozen, "Bill" bet him he couldn't. This little argument all started when the two were eating supper and Hershy had a real square meal to start on but he was game. Therefore they journeyed to Jim's Place and had him start frying eggs. Hershy began the task and kept Jim hopping around to fry them fast enough. The first dozen disappeared as if by magic under the young men's belt but here he began to slow up. A dozen and a half were tucked away cozily under the front side of his back at the northwest corner but then those eggs began to look big as scrambled foot balls. Hershy stuck to it and got away with 23 and a half fried cackleberries, but that last half refused to budge. A bee line for the door and the twenty-three and a half came up for air. Hershy lost but was a good sport.

HAMPTON SURGEON TAKES NEW BRIDE

Chronicle: Dr. C. F. Osborne, one of Hampton's prominent men, was united in marriage last Tuesday morn ing to Miss Anna Cronin, one of the well known young ladies of this city. The ceremony took place in Des Moines at the home of his sister.

Friends of the couple had expected the event to take place for several weeks, but few of them knew of the exact date. Dr. and Mrs. Osborne returned to Hampton last evening and will have quarters at the hotel until May 1, when Dr. Osborne expects to secure possession of his suburban home.

Nature

Medicines that aid nature are always most effectual. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy acts on this plan. It allays the cough, relleves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. Thousands have testified to its good qualities. Try it when you have a cough or cold.—For sale by Adams Pharmacy.

CLINIC TO BE HELD AT CLARION

All plans have been completed for the big tubercuosis clinic which is to held in Clarion. Dr. Peck of Des Moines, chest specialist, and Dr. McCoy, also of Des Moines, a throat specialist, will be here. This is the first clinic of its kind to be held here, and therefore is attracting attention of many physicians in the surrounding towns.

The tuberculosis clinic will be held all day Friday, April 21, from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. at the courthouse under the auspices of the Wright county Medical society, and all physicians in the vicinity are invited to be present.

Miss Kate Liddle, Red Cross public health nurse, has been doing work in the county preparatory to the clinic, working in co-operation with city and county physicians.

This gives all persons a splendid opportunity to present themselves for examination, if they have the slightest idea that they may become tuberculosis or any of its symptoms. There is no cost connected with this examination.

All those desiring to attend this clinic, either inform their physician, says the Clipper, or Miss Liddle, the county nurse, who is securing the cases suitable for this clinic.

Maurice and Henry Dillon made another haul in the wolve line the first of this week, when they got seven cubs from near Rowan. The cubs did not have their eyes open yet. The old wolf was seen and shot at, but she was too far away for good work with a shotgun. The bounty on cubs is four dollars each, so that the two men made a total of $28 by their day's work, which is pretty good wages, considering.

A talk with a number of the farmers about Belmond has developed the fact that the acreage being planted this year is practically the same as usual. As many acres of corn are being put in as ever, there being no, or at least a very small, reduction in corn acreage this year about Belmond. Small grain is running about the same acreage as usual. The talk of a reduced acrege, especially in corn, has evidently not affected this locality.

An Adventure Romance

By George Agnew Chamberlain

SYNOPSIS.

PART I.—Robert Hervey Randolph, young New York man-about-town, leaves the home of his sweetheart, Madge Van Tellier, chagrined because of her refusal of his proposal of marriage. His income, $10,000 a year, which he must surrender if a certain Miss Imogen Pamela Thornton (whom he has seen only as a small girl ten years before) is found, is not considered by the girl of his heart adequate to modern needs. In a "don't care" mood Randolph enters a taxi, unseen by the driver, and is driven to the stage door of a theater. A man he knows, Duke Beamer, induces a girl to enter the cab. Beamer, attempting to follow, is pushed back by Randolph and the cab moves on. His new acquaintance tells Randolph she is a chorus girl, and has lost her position. She is in distress, even hungry, and he takes her to his apartment. There, after lunch, a chance remark convinces him the girl is the missing Pamela Thornton. He does not tell her of her good fortune, but secures her promise to stay in the flat until the morning, and leaves her. In a whimsical mood, also realizing that the girl's reappearance has left him practically penniless, he bribes the taxi driver to let him take his job, and leaving word with the legal representative of the Thornton estate where he can find Pamela, takes up his new duties under the name of "Slim Hervey." He loves the girl, but his pride forbids him approaching her under their changed conditions.

"Silk underwear!" exclaimed Mr. Randolph, mystified and interested in spite of himself.

"Of course you couldn't understand that," she said, "not unless you had seen some poor girl bury her face in crepe de chine and lace, tremble to try them on, and then sob because she had to wear clothes over them."

"Look here," said Mr. Randolph, shuddering at the pity of it: "we'll pass on to the next, if you don't mind."

"Curiosity comes next," resumed the girl obediently. "A woman is weak until she knows everything. Then comes a funny one that you won't understand at all. It's called 'Because.' 'Because he had on a coat that reminded her of an old coat that a man she had loved used to wear.'"

"My dear girl—" protested Mr. Randolph.

"I said they weren't interesting," she reminded him dispassionately. Her eyes widened. "And now," she continued, "we go up and up—spite that stabs its own heart; the lonely soul; consuming fire, and, last and greatest reason of all, just love." Her eyes glowed to some distant focus. "If all myself, my honor, my past, and my future dissolve to the single drop of a present moment in the crystal cup of love, then let me give myself to a lover's lips for, once drained, nothing will be left upon which to hang the badge of shame—nothing remain in all the world but the spirit and—and the sacrifice."

"Girl," said Mr. Randolph, crushing her to him as though he snatched her back from just beyond his clasp, "where is your mind wandering? What have you been thinking? That I was asking you to—to give yourself to me?"

Her eyes came suddenly to his face.

"Yes," she said; "I thought that." He stared at her for a long silent moment, his lips wavering nervously between pity and severity. A flush swept over her face, and into her eyes crept a look of fear. "You don't want me?" she whispered; then, as he did not speak: "Kiss me. I wish you to kiss me."

There was something in her insistence that clutched at his heart and bent him forward. He drew her head up slowly to meet his lips and kissed her as lightly, as impersonally as brother ever saluted sister, but far more fearfully. Immediately her body went limp in his arms, turned to a dead weight of uninspired flesh.

"It is true," she murmured, desperately. "You don't really want me and I can never love you now."

Randolph awoke to that still cry. He shook her, seized her head in both his hands, and forced her eyes to meet the blaze in his.

"You generous, careless, adorable little fool!" he growled. "Why, you're the most desirable and precious bundle of lovable charm that robber man ever trembled to hold in sacrilegious arms!"

She stared at him amazed.

"Why don't you kiss the way you talk?" she demanded.

"Because there's no reason for your desperate barter, my dear Imogene Pamela Thornton."

In one lithe motion she was out of his arms, on her feet, back to the fire, head upthrown.

"How dare you—how dare you call me by that name?" She was transformed; her eyes flashed with such a light as made the blaze in his own a paltry thing. "Do you think she would lie in your arms?" She asked, gulping out the words. "Vivianne Vivierre"—her lips curled in distaste at the name—"ah, yes; poor despairing thing! But I—Pamela Thornton! Oh, who are you? Why did you?" She dropped her face in her hands and sobbed as though her heart had broken.

Randolph did not leap to comfort her this time; he did not even watch her. With his eyes on the edges of fire that peeped from between and round her ankles, he began to talk.

"I knew you; I knew Sport; I knew Maggie. Just once I met you all, and I've never forgotten. I couldn't." He smiled crookedly. "You and I sat down so hard together and you cried out, 'My, what a bump!' and laughed and laughed—just like tonight, back there at the stage-door of the Crocodile."

Pamela stopped crying.

"So you were that awfully nice boy," she said, disclosing tear-stained cheeks and looking him over as though she were inventorying a long list of points of deterioration.

Robert Hervey Randolph, six feet tall, freckled-nosed, open-faced, blue-eyed and broad-shouldered, looked up at her almost appealingly as if his whole sum and substance were crying out to be appraised at face value but no less.

"That's me," he said vapidly. "My name is Robert Hervey Randolph. Some people call me 'Bob,' some 'Herv,' and the sidey ones say 'Randy.'"

"And I shall call you 'Mr. Randolph,'" said Miss Thornton bravely, and then broke into: "After—after I've th—thanked you again and—and again from my heart. I'm going now."

"That's a wrong guess," said Robert, smiling happily—he didn't know exactly why. "I'm the one that's going, after you promise me that you'll stay here until ten o'clock tomorrow. But before we come to that, please don't thank me ever. It's selfish, but I'd simply love to have you remember me as Bob or Herv or, at the very worst, Randy. Won't you?"

She looked this way and that before she let her face ripple to its wondrous smile.

"I'll go as far as Randy," she conceded mischievously; then the smile went and the shadow came. "But I really can't stay here, you know."

Mr. Randolph leaped to his feet, reached her in a single stride and caught her by both wrists. "Look at me!" he said. "If you won't promise to stay here without a break till ten o'clock tomorrow and thereafter at your pleasure, I'll stay myself and hold you. Now, do you or don't you? One—two—"

"I do."

"Do what?" inquired Robert.

"I promise."

"Make yourself absolutely at home, then," he said, as he dropped her hands and turned toward the door.

"I feel like Christmas eve," said Miss Thornton meekly. "Won't you please tell me what's going to happen?"

"You've guessed it—Christmas," he answered enigmatically, tossed the latch-key on the table, and left her.

She can be excused for spying upon him from the curtained window. She saw him awake the cabman, and then watched the pantomime of a long colloquy.

"Oh!" she moaned. "No wonder! The awful, awful price of those horrid clock things! Why did I let him tell it to wait?"

Presently she was amazed to see both the driver and Mr. Randolph disappear into the dark recesses of the cab and close after them its door. For twenty breathless minutes she watched, tormented by the thought that they had retired to have it out where they wouldn't be disturbed by the police. But at last they issued—both of them. Mr. Randolph proceeded to crank the car and then, walking rather strangely, went off, headed west; the driver mounted his box, threw in the clutch, and scurried to the east as though he were off to meet the morning.

"Strange doings!" thought Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton, as she turned from the window to start on a privately conducted voyage of discovery.

Strange doings, indeed, and stranger still could Imogene Pamela have heard as well as seen. This is what really happened: Mr. Randolph awoke the cabman gently but thoroughly; then he said:

"Look here: I want to buy your wagon."

"Gowan, boss; wot d'yer take me for? Here I been freezin' most to det' fer two mortal hours an' a gent like you starts right in kickin' on the clock widout even readin' it."

"Shucks!" said Mr. Randolph. "What's biting you? Never mind the meter-reading; here's twenty for you to forget that. Now tell me: Who owns your buzz-wagon? You?"

"Naw; the Village Cab company," replied the saturnine cabman as he stuffed the twenty-dollar bill into his trousers pocket.

"Well," said Mr. Randolph, "you and I are about the same build and I've got a proposition for you. Change clothes, hand me over your cab, and take two hundred dollars to see yourself to another job."

The driver showed no surprise; he contemplated the offer with half-closed eyes and dubiously working lips.

"More than that," went on Randolph: "I'm not taking your job just for tonight; I'm going to hold it. The only thing I want you to promise is that you'll keep your trap closed if you see any ads in the personal columns looking for me."

"How do I know you won't lift the car and whoop it up fer New Haven?"

Randolph fixed him in the eye.

"You know I won't, because I say it."

"Sure—that's all right, boss," said the driver conciliatingly. "No bones broke. Now, there's just one thing more: have you figgered that it's five hours to the opening of second-hand Sixth avenue or the Bowery, an' I'd have to wear those clothes of yourn all that time?"

"What's the matter with these clothes?" asked Randolph, a little peeved. "Well, you've heard my offer. Take it or leave it."

"Sure I'll take it!" said the driver promptly. "If I wasn't a-goin' to have took it from the first, what would I 'a' been standin' here talkin' for?"

Whereupon they entered to the cramped privacy of the cab and exchanged garments. Randolph was ready in ten minutes, but it took him another ten to complete the appareling of the puzzled chauffeur. That worthy added to his investiture in Randolph's best evening suit a sickly grin.

"Say," he asked, "how do I look?"

Mr. Randolph surveyed him.

"Oh, you'll do, all right. You look about the way I would if I'd been on a bat. Better have a few drinks, if you can find them, and the world will fall for your clothes. What time do I turn the wagon in, and what time do I go on again? Do you bunk at the garage, by any chance?"

"Never you mind where I bunk," said the ex-cabman suspiciously. "D'you think I'm goin' to throw in a happy home for two hundred? You're on the night shift for this week. Read the rules and regulations when you get to the garage. Say good-by to the boys for me an' tell the manager to go to blazes."

They followed this remark out of the cab; the tough in fop's clothing cranked the car and turned westward, as previously chronicled, while Mr. Randolph, now substitute to Patrick O'Reilly as driver of the Village Cab company's No. 1898, hurled his chariot eastward, not to meet the morning, as it had appeared to the watching Miss Thornton, but in search of the residence of the head of the legal firm charged with the duty of carrying out the instructions of the defunct Mr Asa Thornton.

Mr. Randolph, vice O'Reilly, drew up at the familiar address in Madison avenue and laid his car cheek by jowl with the curb as though anchoring it for a long stay; then he descended from the driver's seat, entered the cab, exclaimed thanksgiving at finding a rug, wrapped himself in its warm folds, curled up on the seat and went to sleep.

In the cold early morning the strong arm of the Law reached in and dragged him back from the Elysian fields where he had been wandering hand in hand with a lovely person dressed in a little velvet toque and very cheap clothes.

"Here, you!" said the voice of the Law. "Don't you know you can't put up a hotel in this burg without a license? Wot the—"

"Morning, Officer," said Randolph, trying his best to be pleasant. "I'm waiting for my fare. Any regulation against that?"

"Don't pull that stuff on me," said the Law. "This ain't the Tenderloin."

"I know it isn't," remarked Mr. Randolph. "But I happen to be waiting for Mr. Borden Milyuns, of Milyuns, Branch & Milyuns. Ever heard of him?"

"Sure," said the cop, impressed but still suspicious. "He lives here all right, but I ain't seen him turning down his own cars for night-hawks lately."

"Well," said Mr. Randolph, "I could tease you along for some time and make you look like a nut, but I won't. The truth is, his prize bitch, Bride of Lammermoor, is pupping tonight, and I'm here to take the lady and her litter down to the dog-show in time to get 'em settled for the opening. Messy job, but the meter is charging for it."

"There ain't a man living that could think up a lie like that, not sudden," murmured the officer, and turned to resume his beat, while Mr. Randolph promptly hit the mat in the hope of catching up with Elysium. He slept: he slept too deep for dreams, and was beyond the reach of the call of any motorhorn when Mr. Milyuns' town car tried to shoo him along at eight-thirty of a bright morning.

Once more was Mr. Randolph dragged by main force to wakefulness.

"Good-morning, Thomas," he remarked. "Is the old man up?"

"Hully gee! Mr. Randolph! What 'ave you been up to now?"

"None of yours, Thomas," said Robert Hervey, in a kindly but firm voice. "Get me a bit of paper and a pencil."

The chauffeur discovered the required articles in Mr. Milyuns' car, handed them over, and curiously watched Mr. Randolph write his note to the effect that Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton would receive her legal representative at Mr. Randolph's rooms in Fifty-ninth street between nine and ten. It was added that the said rooms, upon which rent had been paid to the end of the quarter, and all they contained, including the man, Tomlinson, were at the perpetual disposition of the said Miss T.

"Now, Thomas," said Mr. Randolph, "you take this in to the old man himself and tell him a chauffeur with an empty cab brought it. If you say another word I'll have you up at the union for losing me my job, and I'll lick the stuffings out of you besides. Get me?"

"Sure thing, Mr. Randolph!" said Thomas. "Leave it to me to help you make trouble whenever you feel like it. It's a slow world except for the likes of you."

As soon as the man had entered the house, Mr. Randolph started his cab and made for a point of vantage in the park, from which, in due course, he beheld the arrival of the lawyer at Fifty-ninth street. He waited long enough to make sure that the legal gentleman had penetrated to Miss Thornton; then he threw up his flag and made for the garage.

He sought out the manager.

"Say," he plunged, "Pat O'Reilly lost his job to me last night shooting craps. My clock read twenty-eight dollars this morning; here's my slip."

The manager glanced at the slip, and took a long look at Mr. Randolph.

"You're on, kid," he decided. "Take any shift you like. What's your name?"

"Slim Hervey," said Mr. Randolph promptly.

"One of them earned names," commented the manager. "All right. Go to it."

PART II.

Flesh, Spirit and the Veiled God.

Mr. Randolph spent the day getting acquainted and proved himself a good mixer. By telling a few stories that had not yet sifted down from Clubland and by standing a few drinks he soon found himself made free of all the technical information he needed and some more that was so ultra-technical that it could beat the brains that invented the delicate mechanism of the taximeter. He also established part ownership in a comfortable room in a house very much on the wrong or west side of Broadway, in fact within smelling and almost spitting distance of the North river.

While he was still in funds he bought himself a woolen khaki overcoat with one of those enormous collars which look like an inverted bucket when they are up and surpass in efficiency the traditional black mask so beloved by illustrators of the weekly press. He also had a speaking slot cut in the glass of the cab window just behind his best ear and subsequently removed and lost the slide that had been fitted over it with considerable skill and trouble.

During the next few nights he proceeded to have the time of his life; so much so that he was constantly overwhelmed with wonder at his stupidity in not having become a taxi-driver years before! It should be remembered that Mr. Randolph was of New York Yorky; he knew everybody casually, from Mr. Milyuns and his daughter, Eileen, down to the latest addition to the pitiful ranks of the midinette. More than that, so broad was his acquaintanceship that as a sporting gent he had once or twice been tipped off as to the where and when of a proposed gun-play.

In addition to being by right of birth an integral part of all the social strata of Manhattan, he knew the surface of the island and of the adjacent commoner soil of the mainland considerably better than he knew the palm of his own hand. In fact, he could scarcely ever have been conscious that he had a palm, even as a map of personal fortune; for he who is completely satisfied with the present never worries about the future and Mr. Randolph had been born content.

With such an equipment, is it to be wondered at that he found the taxi field rich with unexpected and surprising blooms? Fair flowers, he had known heretofore to nod only over tea tables and solid silver appeared suddenly transplanted to his cab and ready to nod on a stalwart shoulder. Strong male tiger-lilies of the money market, grafted to the cushions of a taxi, became complacent pillars upon which some clinging ivy twined.

In six nights he learned the sound that a banker makes when slender fingers tickle him under the chin; the gasp of a girl, first-kissed; the cry of a young man upon discovering the absence of grandfather's gold watch, his since graduation day; the cluck of a top-hat fairly sat upon in the excitement of a moment that else would have been tragic, the exasperating tap, tap, tap, of a hen-pecking tongue that explained and condoned a murder mystery in the next morning's papers, and the sob of a ruined youngster who had played with borrowed money.

All these incidents took place with people whom Mr. Randolph knew or knew of and just to show what an extremely honest young man he was, let it be said that it did not once occur to him that he need never be poor while humanity, supposedly in good standing, continued to lay itself open to blackmail at the rate of a case a night. At the same time, he was not stupid and occasionally tapped out a missive loaded with dynamite on the garage typewriter when no one was around. Here is a sample.

"Mr. Poindexter MacGuler, Sir: As I was driving you and Miss B. B. larst night who was foster-mothered by an aunt of a frend of a frend of mine, I heerd you talkin to her and all I got to say is if I see you out with her again short of the bands of matrimony I'll get another frend of mine to get Mr. Robert Herv Randolph to tell what he knows about you cheaten at cards on Dec. 23 last."

Nights that gave birth in the morning to such illiterary tit-bits could scarcely be called dull, but it was not long before Mr. Randolph found himself threatened by an unexpected monotonous employment. Unfortunately for his entertainment, his reputation as the one par excellence St. Bernard lifesaver to the inebriate elite spread rapidly throughout the Force so that the telephone was constantly burdened during the wee hours with the following: "Say, is Slim Hervey on the job? Well, when he comes in tell 'im I got another tailor-model drunk here what has lost his home address from his mind."

With suspicious suddenness Mr. Randolph proceeded to forget half his school and clubmates and cold-bloodedly leave them to their fate and a night out, not without coming to grief on at least one occasion, however. "What are you comin' over me?" demanded the irate captain of the Nth precinct. "You ain't forgot that you was vally to R. H. Randolph for seven years, have ya? Has all his frens gone on the wagon?"

It looked like a loop-hole. "Sure," said Slim Hervey promptly. "His club's near busted what with water-drinkers and softs."

"Sounds kind-a phony to me," said the captain grimly, "considerin' you took this same gent home a week ago come Friday."

"Did I?" said Slim, and with feigned surprise managed finally to recognize the mess of evening clothes that was huddled on a near-by bench. "You're right, Captain. He's drunker than I ever saw him before and besides, he's wearin' a new set of shirt-studs. Kind of changed his looks."

Slim lingered. "Look here," he murmured to the captain confidentially. 'You're on to me, but just let me 'isper. I'm getting to be the delivery wagon for all the high-spot soaks in town. The first one of 'em that loses his jewelry between the curb and his own front door, just tell me where I get off, will you? I'm honest; I got a reputation, an' I tell you, Captain, I'm willin' to bill 'em through for you when you ask for the home port, but it's nix on me handlin' all the high-explosive freight north of Forty-second street. Get me?"

"Sure, Slim," said the captain, appreciatively. "I'll pass the word, lad."

Thus did Mr. Randolph make good his new front name and a little capital besides, working on the stalwart old motto: Every knock is a boost. Instead of becoming a mystery and consequently anathema to the Force, an impression was created that Slim was a hustler, but clean white goods ready to sacrifice a fare or two that he might sit high up alongside Caesar's wife. By stopping at two or three strategically placed police stations during the wind before the dawn to ticket such drunks as were of his acquaintance, he was able to give the glad hand of farewell to a job not to his taste.

"I'm Getting to Be the Delivery Wagon for All the High-Spot Soaks in Town."

About this time a series of coincidences befell the young and fevered Fair of the city of New York which would have given pause to the persons involved had they been able to get together and compare the dope. Take what happened to Miss Georgiette Hattoné. Her people had played in hard luck and died. Georgie had secured a job and was doing pretty well at it until young Doctor Bones met her and gradually persuaded her that she was threatened with galloping consumption. Once he had frightened her, the rest looked easy; he would take her out of bad ventilation into his run-about and the open-air—out of the goodness of his heart and the fullness of his purse, he would take care of her.

He began by leading her to a Netherlimb Show and supper afterward. They danced a little and for the first time in her life, but under medical advice, she took something in the way of stimulant after the initial pretty cocktail. They issued from supper and it was when Mr. Chauffeur Slim Hervey heard the whispered address that the game became a threesome.

Counting upon the abstraction, or rather, the concentration of his fares on interior fittings, Driver Hervey soon switched his cab from the chartered route and made for down-town through silent back streets. In just ten minutes he drew up at an old-fashioned house in a very quiet square, shut off his engine to the idle and waited. Not for long. Out of the cab came a blasphemous exclamation in medical tones and with it a cry of awakening from Georgie. Through one window she looked upon the home of her childhood; through the other upon that happy railed garden-square, which was the umbrageous garner-close of all her dearest, purest and dreamiest memories.

"Oh!" she gasped. "No, you mustn't scold him. This is just where I want to get out and walk. It's—it's extraordinary." Then from the curb. "I may be going to die of consumption, doctor, but, after all, I'd rather—rather die that way."

Twist things around a little and you'll get what happened to Miss Terry de Guest with the difference that that beautiful and hungry young woman who had all but turned her back on Settlement work and her face to the Great White Way, suddenly awoke not in the moonlit embrace of Clairmonte, but before the accusing face of a House in Henry street.

Nor was Mr. Slim Hervey partial to sex in salvation. There was the instance of young Bertram Blossome who shame-facedly hurried into his cab a painted, wan-faced waif of the street with self-accusing eyes. No case this of hunted and hunter—rather two strayed bits of weak humanity driven before the unleashed dogs of poverty and lust. How readily and unquestioningly the boy slipped from the cab at his home address, miraculously confused almost as by the meddling finger of God with one very different! How gratefully the girl took the possible fare and "something over," and how her tears brimmed when ten minutes later the blue-eyed chauffeur, a wage-earner like herself, said: "Nothing doing, Sister. The ride is on me," and promptly whirled away!

While all these incidents were engaging, each in its own way, and showed a reasonable profit to all concerned, Mr. Randolph looked upon them more or less as a means of getting in his hand during a period of initiation. Once he felt sure of himself and of his new chauffeuring point of view and attitude toward the gay world from the under side, he began to haunt the neighborhood of East Ninth street at the hour when dinners are plenty and taxis scarce.

Twice he saw Miss Madge Van Tellier carried off in Somebody's private car, but he was not discouraged, for he recognized in the very fact of that public privacy the badge of preliminary outings. In due course his night and hour came. He was hailed by the arriving Mr. Beacher Tremont and ordered to stand by; twenty minutes later he was listening to that gentleman explaining to Miss Van T. that a cylinder had gone wrong on his own car at the last moment.

Miss Madge Van Tellier, upon whom Mr. Randolph had not laid eyes since the very definite parting of their ways on the rock of ready cash, was more beautiful tonight than at any other time since the evening of her coming-out party. The reason was one and the same. Tonight, as upon that other, she stood within a threshold and peered out on Life with a big L. A flame was in her cheeks and in her eyes; her lips were half-parted and thirsty, her bosom agitated. She was divinely dressed.

They were very silent on their way to dinner at the Knickerbocker, but they exuded an aura of tense expectancy that made nothing of the glass barrier between them and the car pilot, who soon felt himself lifted and carried on its wave. Something was cooking beyond a doubt and he then and there determined to stick a fist through the crust of the pie just before the smell of burning.

There is nothing more stereotyped than a night run before the fever hounds of New York. It is invariably a four-act play that starts with a single cocktail and a tasty dinner, goes on to a show peppered with double meanings, thickens at the cabaret in the close harmony of booze and dance music and finally bursts "somewhere in the country."

The first act was easy for Randolph; he went on with the villain and the leading lady, but once the revolving door of the hotel had clucked on their backs he had to withdraw to the wings and dope out a means of evolving from a super into a star of the first magnitude. He decided that it didn't much matter who wafted the couple from dinner to the show, but that the next entr'act would hold the crux of the night's entertainment, for the cab that secured the freight for the cabaret would stand a good chance of nailing it after the ball.

Consequently he was content to pick up a gutter-snipe and then trail his prey to the theater. "Them is the two," he said to his ally, suborned with the promise of two bits, cash on delivery, "the John with the high hat and the dream-dame in smoke-colored chiffon."

FREE COUNTY CLINIC TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

A free county tuberculosis clinic is to be held under the auspices of the Wright County Medical Society on Friday, April 29 from 9:00 to 5:00 p. m. at the county court house in Clarion.

Two noted specialists will be the examining physicians, Dr. Peck and McCoy of Des Moines.

Similar clinics are being held thruout the states. It affords an opportunity for any one wishing to be examined. It frequently happens that a person is suffering with some complaint which he does not think sufficiently important to take to a physician and he discovers thru this general examination that it is more serious than he suspected.

The advice that the examining physician gives at the time serves as a warning which enables the patient to correct their condition in such a way as to avoid some such disease as tuberculosis. Inactive cases may at any time be transferred to active cases by weakened physical condition, such as overwork, on-hanging colds, influenza, pneumonia, measles, pleurisy—in fact, any disease that materially weakens the system.

The noted Dr. Louis C. Boiseiniere says: "It is generally recognized that most adult persons are infected with tuberculosis in childhood or early youth. Anyone may potentially become actively tuberculosis. The infecion remains latent and is not dangerous in the great majority of cases.

Influenza, however, not only lowers our general resistance to disease but directly attacks the safe-guards that nature has provided against tuberculosis. It is a most potent factor in the production of active tuberculosis. It is analagous to measles in children, as both frequently eat to tuberculosis.

"In view of these facts, it is well to bear in mind that every case of influenza not followed by complete restoration to previous health within a rasonably short time should be suspected of having active tuberculosis unless it can be proven otherwise."

Miss Kate Liddle, Red Cross county nurse, will conduct the preliminary work for the clinic.

Anyone wishing to make an appointment or desiring further information can phone 14 on the Clarion exchange.

BELMOND INDEPENDENT

VOL. 2 — BELMOND, IOWA, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1921 — NO. 23

COMMITTEE TO SOLICIT FOR BAND THIS WEEK

School Operetta To Be Given On May 4th

Grade Program With Seventy Pupils In Cast To Be Given Next Week Wednesday Night.

FIRST BALL GAME , TODAY

Base ball Wednesday—if the weather man permits. Belmond high will cross bats with Hampton high on the local diamond at 4 o'clock. This will be the first game for the B. H. S. boys but they can play ball and will undoubtedly make Hampton play real ball. Rain prevented Belmond from playing Dows and Corwith last week. Other dates for the above games will be arranged for if possible.

Arrangements are being made for a Triangular track meet to be held at Garner the fore part of May with Garner, Clear Lake and Belmond contesting.

We also have made arrangements for a Dual Track Meet with Clarion and have accepted the invitation to a competative track meet at Clarion the last of May, in which six or eight of the larger schools of this district will compete. It is hoped that more boys will turn out for track.

Don't forget the operetta to be given by the grade pupils Wednesday night, May 4. Seats on sale at Schultz Drug store Monday morning, May 2. School children 6th grade and below, 25c, general admission 35c.

The operetta, "On Midsummer Day," will be given by the grade children under the direction of Miss Rowland. It promises to be a real treat. Seventy-two children are in the cast and with that number one must realize the problem to be met in managing, training and costuming them. The synopsis and program of the operetta will be given next week.

Is it possible to tell the absolute truth—even for 24 hours? It is—at least Bob Bennett, the hero of "Nothing But the Truth," accomplished the feat. The bet he made with his business partners, and the trouble he got into with his partners, his friends and his fiancee—this is the subject of the Senior class play. "Nothing But the Truth" can be whole-heartedly recommended as one of the most sprightly, amusing and popular comedies that the country can boost.

Olive Butts, Leona Smith and Luella Hauge were awarded the first Honor Medal given for efficiency in typewriting by the Remington Typewriting company.

BELMOND'S FIRST LADY JURORS

Two young Belmond ladies, the Misses Maye Tracy and Mary Gealow, have the distinction of being the first ladies from Belmond and from Pleasant township to serve on the jury of the district court. They were called to duty on the first list given out for the April term, and have had the novel experience—to them—of deciding the fate of several cases at court. The duties of citizenship as well as the pleasures of the ballot. Miss Tracy was thru with her duties last week, Miss Gealow being drawn on the final case of the April term being held this week, that of a young Clarion man alleged to have illegaly appropriated some alcohol.

COMMUNITY CLUB MEETING

The Community Welfare Club meets at the library basement on Friday afternoon, April 29. The program will be on civic improvement for Belmond. The leader is Mrs. E. W. Luick.

There will be a reading by Carol Tyrrell, one by Eloise Brooks, and a piano solo by Marjorie Williams.

Serving Committee: Mesdames W. R. Ramsay, T. Hake. Holt, J. M. Jensen, J. Pletch, H. B. Johnson, H. J. Bohning, Bullard, L. R. Parsons, A. E. Martin.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Moniotr: The grand jury returned two indictments against John Berg, formerly cashier of the State Bank of Belmond. Both charged him with embezzlement, one count being in the sum of $49,000 in round numbers and the other for $31,650. Judge Thompson fixed his bail bonds at $15,000 in each case. Sheriff Lang went to Belmond on Saturday and placed Mr. Berg under arrest, but as his physician, Dr. Steele, stated that he was suffering from a severe cold and nervous breakdown it would be unwise to bring him to Clarion. The sheriff deputized the doctor and turned the accused over to him. Late Monday afternoon Mr. Berg came to Clarion, accompanied by a number of his Belmond friends. He appeared in court and his attorneys entered a plea of not guilty.

At the same time his counsel asked that his bonds be reduced from $30,000 to $15,000, stating that the former sum was excessive in comparison with bonds required for even greater crimes such as murder, where bail had been fixed at $10,000 in this district. It was further stated that Mr. Berg had turned over his entire fortune, estimated at $240,000 to $250,000, to a trustee for the benefit of his creditor's; that he had mortgaged his home, which was exempt, and turned in his automobile and diamond ring in order to make restitution and save his friends from loss. County Attorney Rogers objected to a reduction in the amount of bonds for the reason that the defendant had deeded away his property and was therefore without financial responsibility. Afterward Judge Thompson reduced the bonds to $10,000 each and they were immediately furnished by eight of his Belmond friends. Those who signed Mr. Berg's bond are: Pink Trees, J. D. Baker, James Kenefick, Henry Slining, Chas. McGuire, H. L. Schultz, J. N. Johnson, and S. A. Bohning.

The Clarion Clipper has the following account of the defalcations:

The history of Berg's defalcations begins with an examination of the bank by F. F. Potter, state bank examiner. On August 2, 1920, Potter examined the State Bank of Belmond and discovered that it was carrying paper of Berg's totalling $41,500. As $10,000 is the legal limit which the bank could loan any one person, he reported the fact to the bank officials and also to the state superintendent of banking. The directors of the bank at that time took up the excess loan carried by Mr. Berg.

"I found no shortage at that time," says Mr. Potter's affidavit.

Mr. Potter made further examinations of the bank, and one of these, November 23, 1920, he discovered that an account in the name of escrow had been closed, showing no balance. He took the matter up with Mr. Berg, who explained that this "escrow" account represented an account of $10-000 deposited by E. W. Hood, to retire a farm loan maturing later on. Later, in a meeting with the directors of the bank Berg admitted that he had used the $10,000 represented by the escrow account for his own use. November 24, 1920, two deposits, one for $4,500 and one for $5,500 were made in favor of the escrow account. About this time Mr. Potter discovered that Berg had appropriated to his personal use Liberty Loan bonds totalling $31,650.

In the meantime, he learned that Berg had used funds deposited by the city of Belmond, totalling around $4,000, and $18,000 of funds deposited by the Iowa Valley Sugar company. The Carrie Brandies estate account was also short $4,405.59. Reminded of these descrepancies, Berg is said to have admitted using the money for his personal use but declared that with the Liberty Loan bonds, was all that was wrong. He credited the accounts on August 20 and gave his personal check for $188.76 to balance the day's business.

Mr. Potter's affidavit states that on November 24, 1920, he was present at a meeting of the directors of the bank, Berg appearing and signing a statement under oath admitting that he had appropriated $41,500 of the bank's funds. This statement was signed voluntarily, and so far as Potter knew, was made without any promises and without any threats of any kind being made. Later he learned that Berg was using funds of the bank in excess of the $41,500 by about $50,000.

H. H. Crist, a patron of the bank, in an affidavit filed with the grand jury, states that he left $14,650 in Liberty Loan bonds with the bank for safe keeping. Later he learned they had been disposed of. He had not authorized a disposition of the bonds. He received a note from the bank in settlement.

Jas. F. Berry had $2,700 in bonds and found that $2,200 of them had been disposed of without any authorization on his part. The bank protected him. Perry C. Loomis has $2,200 of bonds in the bank and $1,500 of them were sold without authorization on his part. He was protected by the bank.

E. W. Hood, a Hancock county farmer, who deposited $10,000 with the bank in escrow, swore that the money was used without his knowledge, but admitted he had told the bank it would be alright to use it if they needed it, provided it was ready for him when he wanted to pay of a loan maturing this spring. "I did not know John Berg or any one else used this money," he testified.

U. B. Tracy, of Clarion, testified he was at the meeting and that the report was there was an $85,000 shortage. "I extended sympathy to Mr. Berg at this meeting," he testified, "but Berg said, 'No! No! don't do that; I am not worthy; I did it myself.'"

W. C. Tyrrell, Jr., president of the bank, testified that Berg had used this money without any authorization of the bank officials.

Berg, after the trouble, turned over his equities in his properties to the bank's agent. He is said to have even mortgaged his home and sold his personal belongings in an effort to make

American Legion Starting Campaign Of Activities

Organize Five-Piece Orchestra, Ball Team, Secure Club Room, And Plan Biig Supper.

TO START THINGS GOING SOON

The local post of the American Legion held a very interesting and affective meeting last week, at which they made a number of active moves to stir things up.

The Legion has rented a room for the present over the C. B. Johnson store, which they will fit up temporarily for a club room, until they can locate in permanent quarters. This room will be fixed up with all the comforts that appeal to the young man.

Another of the plans of the Post here is the organizing of a five-piece orchestra. The Post contains a wide variety of musical talent, and the boys plan to make use of it for their own entertainment.

The Legion is also going to organize a base ball team, to play other Legion teams in the towns around, and a big two-day tournament between neighboring Legion teams figures in the plans made. The best material in the town for a ball team is among the members of the Legion, and they should put forth a real article in that line. As at present planned, Obrecht and Fulton would be the battery, old players as far back as high school, and a deadly combination to run up against.

Sometime during the month of May it is planned to have a big supper probably in the library basement, for the members of the Post and those ex-service men who are not members but who are eligible for membership in the organization. The supper is to be free and is just for the members and ex-service men.

The local Post appears to have started on a campaign of activities during the coming months, and they are to be congratulated on their iniative. The Post has the best wishes of all Belmond people for a good time and useful service.

GEORGE H. RICHARDSON

Hon. George H. Richardson was born at Waterloo, Canada, East, February 7, 1844, and died at Los Angeles, California, on May 12, 1921, in the 77th year of his age.

Together with his parents, he returned to the United States, settling in Illinois in 1852. He was a direct lineal descendent of Samuel Richardson, who emigrated from England in 1836.

Mr. Richardson completed his schooling in the public schools of Foreston, Ill; and all subsequent education was acquired thru his own individual efforts.

During the years of 1863 to 1865 he was deputy Post Master at Foreston, Ill. In 1867 he formed a copartnership with his brother-in-law, A. A. Robertson, which partnership was continued for a period of eleven years. In 1873 they came to Belmond, and engaged in business with the Iowa Pacific Railroad, then being graded, but owing to the opposition of the Granger movement was never completed, following which they returned to Alden, Iowa, where they were engaged in dealing in grain, live stock and lumber until 1878, when said firm by mutual consent was dissolved. In 1880 he caused to be constructed two elevators, one at Dows and one at Clarion, Iowa; when in 1881, following the completion of the Iowa Central Railroad from Hampton to Belmond, when he moved to Belmond and erected a large elevator on the Central right of way, also organizing concurrent therewith, the Iowa Valley Bank, which bank Mr. Richardson operated as a private bank, until 1892, when it was made a State bank with a paid up capital of $50,000, and Mr. Richardson was made its' president, which position he held for many years, or up to his practical retirement from further activity along the lines of strenuous business engagement. July 15, 1896, Mr. Richardson was nominated as a Presidential Elector of the Third Congressional district, at the time said district was represented by the late David B. Henderson. At the fall election he received better than 10,-000 majority in the district and 60,-000 in the state; and in politics, was always and ever an unflinching Republican. He was a member of the Republican League of the United States, and treasurer of the Third Republican Congressional District. He was a member of the A. F. and A. M. and of K. of P. also of the Sons of the American Revolution, serving as its president during the year 1898, making the presentation of the flag to the regiment then leaving Des Moines for the Spanish-American war. He was also a member of the Society of Colonial Sons. During his residence in Belmond, he was very much interested in the furtherance of an education, and for many years served as president of the school board, as well as being mayor of Belmond.

It can be truthfuly said of the deceased, while a resident of this city, that he had an advanced interest in Belmond, also in his county and state, and during the long tenure of his residence he at all times done his full duty unflinchingly, as a progressive and public spirited citizen.

He was married to Charlotte Jeanette Thompson at Freeport, Illinois, September 22, 1863, she being a daughter of the Rev. Seymour Thompson and Betsy McKee Thompson. Six children were born to this union: Lorena R; Grace R; Gabrielle R. Charles A; Carlotta Florence, and Cecilia G., and of these children, Cecilia G., wife of Raymond W. Healey, survives.

Mrs. Richardson's demise occurred January 25, 1900.

He was united in a second marriage with Mrs. Eudora Kline, February 26, 1903.

The deceased having retired from all active business, other than looking after his own interests, and owing to his greatly impaired health, moved to Los Angeles in 1920.

Tuesday afternoon, April 19, he was buried from the Congregational church, Rev. Northrup officiating together with the beautiful Masonic Service, and laid to rest in our beautiful Franklin Grove cemetery, beside the loved ones gone before.

He leaves to mourn his loss, his beloved wife Eudora, and his only sister, Mrs. Charlotte Robinson, now residing at Urbana, Ill. together with his surviving daughter, Cecilia Healy, now residing at Long Beach, California, and the following grandchildren: George Pond, Brayton Pond, Seymour, Pond, Clare Richardson, Robert Richardson, Richardson J. Thompson, Jeanette Thompson Blake, and Catherine Thompson.

So endeth an active career, rounded out in old age and silenced thru the immutable decree of nature, only to be succeeded by another or others who in like manner will sooner or later be called before the Throne of their Great Master.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank most sincerely all those who so kindly assisted and comforted us during the illness and death of our belove husband and father, the clubs and societies and the many friends for the beautiful floral tributes, and the Masonic lodge of Belmond for their kindness and assistance in the services.

Mrs. Eudora T. Richardson
Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Healey
Grandchildren.

DEFINITE PLANS FOR BAND ARE NOW COMPLETED

Band Boys Hold Meeting And Complete Final Arrangements For Band This Summer.

$1,750 SUM TO BE RAISED NOW

Leader Of Ackley Band Secured—Chamber of Commerce Committee To Solicit Funds.

The band boys held their meeting this week and on Tuesday met with a committee from the Chamber of Commerce to complete the final arrangements for a band.

Th boys have made arrangements to secure the leader of the band at Ackley, as reported in the Independent last week, who will come two days a week. The financial end of the band calls for a total of $1,750 for the summer's concerts, and the Chamber of Cemmerce committee is to make a call on the various business establishments this week to secure the funds.

The assessments this year will be slightly more than they were last year, but the amount extra will not greatly inconvenience anyone. Unless the amount named is raised, there can be no band, and the town cannot afford to let the band go for the few extra dollars. They will be more than made up by theextra trade that is brought to town.

So be on the watch for the committee and prepare to do your part towards keeping Belmond on the map.

THE FARM HAND SITUATION

The Independent's efforts to place farm hands among the farmers in this vicinity appears to be meeting with both demand and supply, but with poor results so far. The main trouble seems to be that the men who are willing to work on the farm want more money than the farmers are willing or able to pay. There have been some eight or ten men applied at this office for the jobs on the list, but when they came to the matter of wages the engine wouldn't run. Farmers this year cannot afford to pay the wages that were the standard last year; $75 a month, and room and board, is more than any farmer feels he should pay at the prices he is now getting for his products.

There are one or two cases cited locally where a farm hand is receiving $75 a month, but they are the exception; the average wage appears to run from $40 to $50. There is plenty of idle labor; the hoboes are commencing to drift into town in numbers; but they seem to have the idea that their services are as much in demand as last year or the year before. The Independent will continued to use its best efforts to make supply and demand meet, and hopes be able to bring some of the two together.

FREE AIR!

There was a fellow told us a funny thing the other day. He said he heard a man make the remark that Hizzoner had the newspapers at his beck and call, and they'd print anything he wanted 'em to.

No, he hadn't been on the list.

It is to laugh. A newspaper isn't at the beck and call, ready to print anything, of anybody; leastwise, this one isn't. Why, there are a heap of things that even the publisher doesn't get printed that he would like to.

It's a funny world, ain't it?

Of course, everybody isn't going to agree; what a heck of a time we'd have if everybody agreed: no arguments, no politics, no police courts, no laws, no family rows, no nothin'.

Doesn't it give you the shivers just to think about it?

It would be a great life—for the ministers. As it is, the parsons have a hard row of stumps to blast their way thru. Hey, Reverend?

Cho-Cho the Health Clown will be here the 6th of May to show the kids both little and big how to chew-chew their chow-chow. Cho-Cho is reported to be an excentric fellow, with no time for anybody but children. That covers a wide range of years, however.

It shouldn't be long before the city treasury contains sufficient in funds to have the pavements cleaned up. Not, at any rate, if business keeps up at the rate it has for the past week.

Matt ought to have one of those signs which are becoming so popular and which are coming into great demand. Right over the door of the city hall he ought to hang it, that he who runs may read:

"ALL BUSINESS STRICTLY CASH"

We have 'em for sale, at twobits per.

We'd like to sell a few, and leave the account open so in case it was necessary we wouldn't have to go to the bank.

Remember how the greeting, "Good morning, have you used ———'s soap?" used to be on every tongue?

Styles change, however; the new form of greeting is:

"Good morning, have you been pulled yet?"

Must be the spring fever, or something.

Even the little tots are getting the fever. Couple of little three- or four-year-old tots went by our office the other day, arguing fiercely, and one says to the other:

"Well, Matt Barry says ——"

"Out of the mouth of babes—"

But at that, you've got to give Hizzoner credit.

Wonder if the Wild West was as bad!

The annual crop of lies about the "big one that got away" is about due to be harvested: the fishing law is out in about two weeks.

A lot of poor fish, both in and out of the water, are on the way. When we were a kid, we remember one that we almost got one day, that was anyway as big as ———

The season isn't open yet.

THE COUNTY ROADS

A recent artcle in the Jewel, Iowa, paper, on the Wilson Highway, gives some interesting information on the state of the roads along that highway, and incidently mentions that the highway thru Wright county, with the exception of the road south from Belmond to Solsburg, is the worst of any county thru which the Wilson Highway runs. It remarks on the finely graveled road south of this town to the turn east just south of Solsburg, saying that this is one of the best stretches on the route. The road to Clarion from Solsburg is being graveled now, and ultimately will be a fine piece of road, but right now it is a nightmare of the blackest color. All travel from Belmond to the county seat for the next month or so should be by the way of Cornelia, as that is said to be the best road; the other is beyond even a Ford.

Next week Monday and Tuesday at the Lyric theatre will be shown the big 9-reel special, "Sowing the Wind" with Anita Stewart as the star and it is reported some picture.

Noon Closing

On account of the numerous daylight hold-ups during the noon hour, and wishing to eliminate as much of the risk as possible, the Banks of Belmond will close until further notice from 12:00 Noon to 1:00 p. m., commencing Monday, May 2nd., 1921.

FARM BUREAU NEWS ITEMS

KEEPING THEIR APPOINTMENT

In order to keep an engagement in two farm bureau centers across the mountains, the county agent and home demonstration agent in Shasia county, California, set out by automobile from the county seat. After traveling as far as possible by that method they transferred at the edge of the mountains to a horse and wagon, and when the snow became too deep for this to be used, finally started on foot thru three to five feet of snow for 16 miles. They arrived at the farm bureau meetings on time and found two large audiences of people awaiting them in isolated valleys over the mountain range. On the return trip they made the same 16 miles on foot thru the snow, making a total of 32 miles in all which they had walked in order to keep a previous engagement. The daily papers report the fact that the home demonstration agent completed the trip as successfully and in as good humor as did the county agent.

Miss Baker who was in Wright county last week lecturing on foods for nutrition has had an experience to relate which is almost equal to the one above except that Miss Baker walked thru mud instead of snow. Miss Baker and Mr. Edwards had started for a Lake township meeting and had reached a point within two miles of the meeting when they found themselves stuck in the mud. Rather than miss her appointment, Miss Baker walked the other two miles while the county agent stayed with the "tin Liz" to see that it did not run away.

MISS BAKER ADDRESSES FARM BUREAU LADIES

Miss Margaret Baker, specialist in foods fro mthe Agricultural Extension department, has been lecturing to the ladies of Wright county on the subject "Foods for Nutrition" and judging from all reports Miss Baker's meetings have been well attended.

Because of bad weather and poor roads Miss Baker did not succeed in filling all appointments which were scheduled for her three days stay in the county. Both Miss Baker and the county agent were very much disappointed not to be able to fill the appointments as scheduled, but of course the weather is the controlling factor in holding these meetings.

Miss Baker gave some valuable points of information regarding foods for nutrition of both old and young. She placed special emphasis upon the proper feeding of the growing children and suggested foods which should be given the child during his growing years. In speaking of food for family use Miss Baker urged the more general use of milk and told what a place of importance this product holds in the list of human foods. In speaking of foods in general Miss Baker made the statement that a very high per cent of the human ailments are brought on by the use of improper diets and urged the housewives to be more thoughtful in the preparation of the food for the family to see that it contains the elements necessary for a well balanced food.

GRANT HEARS THE STATE SECRETARY

Mr. J. F. Coupe, assistant secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation with headquarters at Des Moines, addressed the farm bureau members and visitors in school district No. 1 Grant township on the evening of Thursday, April 21.

About 200 farmers, their wives and children, were in attendance at this meeting and enjoyed the interesting program which consisted of recitations and dialogues by school district No. 1 and of a splendid address by Mr. Coupe. Miss Ruth Brooks, the teacher of Grant No. 1, should be congratulated upon the entertainment furnished by her pupils at this community meeting. The way her pupils carried thru their parts indicated a thoro preparation for the program.

Mr. Coupe began his interesting address by giving a brief history of the county agent work and explained it from the time of its inception at Binghamton, N. Y., to the present time. This is the place the farm bureau movement had its inception and the commercial club of the city conceived the idea that in order to have the various departments of the chamber of commerce complete it would be necessary for them to employ an agent to study the farmer's problems in their rural districts surrounding the city. These men realized that in order to have a successful community that agricultural interests would have to be developed in the same degree as other activities and with this in mind they established a farm bureau and employed a county agent by the name of Barrett, whose duty it was to study farm conditions in the vicinity of that city. He carried the history from ths point to the war period when our national government saw a need for increased production to feed our armies across the sea and established war emergency farm bureaus in all parts of the United States, practically all of which have become permanent organizations which make up one of the strongest and most active organizatians known in the history of our country.

Mr. Coupe spoke at length regarding the service departments of the State Farm Bureau federation and placed special emphasis upon the legislative matters which the federation has succeeded in putting across during the past few months. He stated that out of the 23 legislative bills which were presented to our legislature for passage 18 of them were passed upon favorably and became laws. Mr. Coupe explained also the legislative committee, a branch of the National Farm Bureau Federation which sits at Washington to guard the interests of the farmers in our national halls of legislature. He made a special plea to members and non-members, in fact to all farmers, to give their loyal support to this organization which is accomplishing so much for the good of all farmers.

WOLLSTOCK PUT ON A LIVE SOCIAL

Officers and co-operators and particularly the program committee of the Woolstock farm bureau are congratulating themselves upon the successful community program which they staged at the Woolstock Center school on the evening of April 22. Miss Gertrude Schutt, the teacher, at this particular school and who is also lady chairman of the township farm bureau, presided at this meeting. Her pupils furnished an interesting part of the evening's entertainment by giving several recitations and musical numbers. A. S. Chapman who is chairman of the men's department of the farm bureau gave an interesting talk on the outlook of the farm bureau and spoke especially of some of the accomplishments of our local farm bureau during the past year. Mr. Chapman spoke very encouragingy of the farm bureau and urged the farmers of this township to give whole-hearted support to this organization which is bending every effort to solve our problems. Several musical numbers were given consisting of a duet by Mrs. Archie Hockman and Mrs. Geo. Crovisier, a duet by Viola and Nell Nelson, a song by Virginia and Eva Shillington and a solo by the county agent.

One of the most interesting numbers of the evening was a reading by Miss Verla Bernard. The manner in which Miss Bernard rendered this reading indicated a thoro preparation and her audience was held spellbound thruout the entire reading of her number. The feature of the evening was the interesting and practical address given by R. E. Lee Aldrich, one of the substantial farmers of Iowa township who lectured to the people an hour on the agricultural problems of today. Mr. Aldrich began by giving a brief history of the county during his boyhood days and drew a comparison between the conditions at that time and the present day conditions and in so doing brought out the point that the city has too many attractions for the young people of the rural districts in order to keep them contented on the farm.

In speaking of farm bureau activities he spoke quite at length about the necessity of co-operation among farmers in order to effect an organization which is for the good of the farmers in a community. He used several clean-cut illustrations in making the different points in his talk. Mr. Aldrich is a fluent speaker and a man who has had many years of experience as a school teacher and with his native ability as a farmer and his training as a teacher he succeeded in delivering an address which proved to be instructive, interesting and to the point. Mr. Aldrich is one of the men of the county who is being drawn on for addresses in the township meetings in various parts of the county.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Aids

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade, says he has often heard druggists ask acus tomer who wished to buy a cough medicine, whether it was for child or an adult and if for a child they almost invariably recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it and for colds, croup and whoop-

There Is One Way To Spell
..BUSINESS..
It Must Have A "U" and An "I" In It

For over twenty-five years we have borne this in mind. It has been, and is, the policy of this store to consider the interest of our patrons first. Because unless there is a "YOU" as well as an "I" in its business transactions no house can endure.

We have builded a business with a character. A patron who comes into this store and purchases a pair of shoes, goes out with a knowledge that for every dollar spent, he has received fair value.

If you are not already acquainted with "WOODRUFF" shoes and "WOODRUFF" methods, it will be a delight to have you come in.

ROWAN NEWS

Help fill a page with Rowan news. Phone your news items to 62.

Will the friends of Rowan kindly keep Friday, May 6, open, as this is the day when the Epworth League of the M. E. church are holding their sale and supper. There will be three stalls at the sale, one for candy, a second for fancy articles and a third for general things. The girls have charge of the candy sale, the women of the fancy goods, and the men of the novelties—the latter is by no means the least. The supper will be a real old fashioned affair with plenty of good eats, and the men are to wait on the tables. The men promise to refund all monies if the people are not satisfied.

Please plan your affairs so that you can be present and have a real and rollicking good time. We are only charging 25 cents for the supper—there's no profiteering among the Leaguers.

The W. C. T. U. meeting was held at the parsonage last week and was in charge of Mrs. Roy Ryder who made a splendid leader.

The Rev. Harold Tomkinson and a number of others plan to be present at the big Centenary Rally at Algona next Thursday and Friday, when Bishop Stuntz and Dr. Clay Cissel of Omaha are to be the leading speakers.

Post-Nuptial Shower

Friday night at the D. W. Whitten home, the Mesdames Gay Fletcher, Tom Ross, Myrtel Myers, D. W. Whitten, and the Misses Izetta Fletcher and LaVonne Ballou were hostesses at a post-nuptial shower given in honor of Mrs. Clifford Snow. About 45 friends were present. The color scheme of orange and white was carried out in a very pretty idea. Over the dining room table was an orange and white umbrella from which orange and white streamers were run to the table. On this table was a beautiful collection of gifts, for which the bride thanked her friends with an original poem. The evening was spent in interesting amusements and games. When it came time for the refreshments to be served every one had to play the part of "Little Tom Tucker," and sing for their supper. Four guests were given the name of the same song, so as to form a quartette, this quartette to make a company for supper. One quartette proved to be a solo so only one tray was served—at first. The guests departed at a late hour voting a splendid time and wishing Mrs. Snow much happiness all thru the years to come.

ALEXANDER SCHOOL NOTES

Miss Lillie Cornwell enjoyed the hospitality of the J. C. Arends home Saturay.

We are sorry to report two accidents within the past ten days. One was when Elmer Larsen fell into Jack Stouts mouth and received a scalp wound, the other was when Willie Muheenbruch attempted to lift a large load into bus No. 8 and received a badly wrenched arm and strained back.

Herbert Mallory severed relations with an adjunct of our school in order to accept a position as baggageman in the local M. & St. L.depot.

The agriculture class planted potatoes in the school plat on Tuesday. The treating of seed, ground, preparation and planting was all done according to Hoyle.

In order to increase our enrollment a "Bring in One" campaign was instituted. As a result Jerry Beenen, Art Peters and Cornelius Stoffer are becoming quite interested. We trust that they will soon be under the tutelage of our competent teachers.

Several of the lady teachers are wearing a new form of head-gear, the loose woven five-cent hat of prewar days. At present we are undecided as to whether it is a sign that spring is here or a hint to the school board for an increase in pay.

The various grades and deppartments are planning a school exhibit for the last week of school. We regret to announce that the pedestal upon which Joe Pals has been working since Autumn of 1920 will not be completed. Joe expects to have it ready to exhibit in the spring of 1922. When completed this pedestal, considering the price of labor, will be the most costly in northern Iowa.

Miss Jessie Bell substituted in the 3rd grade last Monday, as Miss Alvena Johnson was not able to attend to school duties on account of sickness.

Quite a number of visitors attended our impromptu program given last Friday afternoon. The program was patriotic in its nature and in honor of the lamented Theodore Roosevelt. Each room now has upon its walls, a large picture of Roosevelt, presented to us by the American Defense Society.

NOTICE OF PROOF OF WILL

To All Whom It May Concern:

In the estate of David L. Cuppett, deceased:

You are hereby notified that on the 13th day of April, 1921, there was filed with and opened by the undersigned Clerk of the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright County, a written instrument purporting to be the LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT of David L. Cuppett, late of said county, deceased.

And you are further notified that by order of Court the 27th day of April at 1:30 p. m. 1921 has been set as the day for the final hearing and proof of said Will, (the same being during the term of said District Court) at which time any person interested can appear and show cause why the same should not be admitted to probate.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said Court at my office in Clarion, in said County, this 13th day of April A. D. 1921.

R. V. GOSLIN,
Clerk District Court.

MEASURE LEFT OVER CORN

Iowa farmers who have hay and grain on hand and want to estimate the quantity on hand can do so, using these rules prepared by the extension department of Iowa State College:

To find the number of bushels of grain or shelled corn in a bin: multiply the length by the width by the depth (all in feet) and divide by 1 1-4.

To find the number of bushels of ear corn in a crib: multiply the length by the average depth by the width (all in feet) and divide by 2 1-2 If the crib is round, multiply the distance around the crib by the diameter by the depth of the corn (all in feet) and divide by 10.

To find the number of tons of hay in a mow: multiply the length by the width by the height (all in feet) and divide by 400 to 500 depending on the kind of hay and how long it has been in the mow.

To find the number of tons of hay in a stack, multiply the overthrow (the distance from the ground on one side over the stack to the ground on the other side) by the length by the width (all in feet); multiply by 3; divide by ten and then divide by 400 o 500.—Better Iowa Magazine.

A famous tractor—the Fordson

THE Fordson tractor has attracted the attention of every civilized country. It is used by thousands in Europe today. It has shown the way to make farms produce more—in every country—and of every size.

Built right — simple, durable, economical, easy to operate—easy to care for; the Fordson fulfills every requirement. It will make your farm a more profitable investment—will take worries off your shoulders.

Burns kerosene—all gears are enclosed. The Fordson is built especially to meet the need for a tractor which must be cared for by the operator himself.

Use it with the Oliver No. 7 Plow

Good plowing—every acre exactly as you want it—that's the result of using the Oliver No. 7 Plow especially designed for the Fordson tractor. Trash and weeds are buried at the bottom of the furrow; the stop device maintains an even depth of furrow. It's the plow that works to the best advantage with this tractor.

Come in and let us show you the Fordson tractor and Oliver plow.

An Adventure Romance

By

GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

COPYRIGHT THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

PART I.—Robert Hervey Randolph, young New York man-about-town, leaves the home of his sweetheart, Madge Van Tellier, chagrined because of her refusal of his proposal of marriage. His income, $10,000 a year, which he must surrender if a certain Miss Imogen Pamela Thornton (whom he has seen only as a small girl ten years before) is found, is not considered by the girl of his heart adequate to modern needs. In a "don't care" mood Randolph enters a taxi, unseen by the driver, and is driven to the stage door of a theater. A man he knows, Duke Beamer, induces a girl to enter the cab. Beamer, attempting to follow, is pushed back by Randolph and the cab moves on. His new acquaintance tells Randolph she is a chorus girl, and has lost her position. She is in distress, even hungry, and he takes her to his apartment. There, after lunch, a chance remark convinces him the girl is the missing Pamela Thornton. He does not tell her of her good fortune, but secures her promise to stay in the flat until the morning, and leaves her. In a whimsical mood, also realizing that the girl's reappearance has left him practically penniless, he bribes the taxi driver to let him take his job, and leaving word with the legal representative of the Thornton estate where he can find Pamela, takes up his new duties under the name of "Slim Hervey." He loves the girl, but his pride forbids him approaching her under their changed conditions.

PART II.—One evening he is engaged by Beacher Tremont, notorious profligate, to drive him and Madge Van Tellier to a hostelry known as "Greenwood." Aware of the evil nature of the place, Randolph drives the pair to Greenwood cemetery. Infuriated, Beacher gets out of the cab and Randolph leaves him there, taking the girl (who has awakened to a realization of her folly) to her home. Madge recognizes him.

"That's some name for a skirt, Cap," said the extreme youth admiringly, "an' some skirt, believe me. Nor! I won't forget 'em."

And he didn't. No sooner had Mr. Beacher Tremont, bearing a thistle-down burden on his arm, swelled out from the theater with the anxious look on his face of a man with three cars in the garage at home and no call number in his left hand waistcoat pocket, than the imp was at his side. "Say, mister, wanter taxi? Got one at the head of the line that I'd give up just to youse for a dime."

"Lead me to it," said Mr. Tremont.

"Say," said the snipe to Randolph as the car jumped, "I've took the boss inside on fer a friend. You watch yeself."

It was a short run to the lair of the Midnight Rolic, but Mr. Randolph was not surprised at the double wage he received nor at the murmured conversation that accompanied it. "Fill up your gas tank and wait for me at the Seventh avenue northeast corner. Get me?"

"Wait for Me at the Seventh Avenue Northeast Corner. Get Me?"

"Sure," grunted Mr. Randolph. "Where to, mister?"

"Greenwood hostelry," breathed the villain.

"I'm on," said Mr. Randolph, ran his car to the comfortably quiet nook designated, dug out a road map of Manhattan and vicinity, scrutinized it carelessly and settled down to meditate.

To a select and once affluent few the name of the G. hostelry above mentioned will bring certain vivid recollections and will also place the chronology of this yarn, for the said abode of reveiry was too good to last very long; it choked to death on its own popularity and consequent publicity. From the outside, even in its hey-day, it presented a most innocuous appearance, just a renovated farmhouse standing under a clump of veiling sugar-maples on the top of a hill whence the nearest neighbor was out of sight.

But once within its modest portal, its habitues found themselves in the cleverest fake atmosphere of a pleasure-loving decade. An organizing genius, sensitive to all those cheap adjuncts which usually grate on the soul hovering at the edge of the decline to Avernus, had pandered effectively to an ignoble end and made of each small room an isle of forgetfulness; price, twenty-five bucks in advance, supper and drinks extra.

For the benefit of those who do not remember the epoch of the Greenwood hostelry and are consequently reading on and on in mortal dread of the paragraph that will introduce the War, let it be said at once, Forget it. Stake out the beginning of the international mix-up, hurl another boundary mark into November of 1918, and the time left outside of those limits will be found entirely sufficient to the needs of this chronicle. Let it further be noted that it is inconceivable that a single drop of the kind of blood which flowed in the veins of Mr. Robert Hervey Randolph could ever answer to the name of slacker, proof positive in itself that the events herein set forth happened when the War didn't.

Mr. Slim Hervey, chauffeur, was still plunged in reverie when his senses were assailed by a whiff of lilac, a mere nuance of perfume, that proclaimed the approach of Miss Madge Van Tellier. He jumped out just in time to throw open the door of his cab for the couple and take the murmured order of Mr. Beacher Tremont. "All right. Hit it up for Greenwood."

Luckily for the cabman's entertainment, his engine was working in silent perfection that night. The late hour gave him almost undisputed right of way so that driving became an automatic adjustment of his course in line with the curb and released his attention to gorge itself at leisure with eaves-dropping. By squirming his shoulders he managed to cock one ear over the top of his high overcoat collar; it was the ear next to the open speaking-slot.

"What a dream of a night," said the clear voice of Miss Van Tellier. "Shall I be a traitor to my sex and betray one of its secrets to you?"

"Please do," murmured Mr. Tremont. From the very tone of his voice one could divine that he had slipped an arm around her and was holding her close.

"Well, it's this," she continued. "Women are not conquered by man alone, but by man and atmosphere. We never rush at the precipice; we flutter toward it with many stops and pauses. The silliest breezes of impulse may carry us on or a puff of unkind aid hold us back. It all really depends on the man imposing his atmosphere so steadily that the drifting soul of woman forgets its inborn title to vagrancy and sleepily assumes its enemy's goal."

"Madge," said Mr. Tremont almost earnestly, "you frighten me. I never knew you could talk like that. You frighten me because I have a terror of analyzed personal relations."

Randolph could hear a faint rustling of her robe as though she had nestled closer to her escort. "I never meant to startle you, Beacher," her voice continued, not quite so clear. Into its tone had crept, hesitatingly, a trace of unaccustomed emotion. "I was only warning you. Every man can make a world of his arms for one woman; not all can hold the illusion to beyond possession."

"I can, if you will only help me," whispered Tremont, and paused as though his own earnestness were taking him by surprise.

"I wonder," said Miss Van Tellier. "You have played the right game. You have never said a vulgar thing to me or stooped to the usual hypocrisies; those are compliments by inference that have flattered the best that is in me. You have set the play in a high plane that winning, wins all of me; but—"

"But what?" asked Tremont.

"But there is danger in the high flight," finished Miss Van Tellier. "An air-pocket in your atmosphere and, pouf! all is lost—the good in me that you will have missed as well as the bad that you could have won by a baser effort."

"What do you mean?" asked Tremont, no longer making the slightest effort to hide his awakened interest.

"I was thinking," said Miss Van Tellier, dreamily, "that every woman is a group of three individuals. Shall I tell you their names?"

"Yes," said Tremont.

"The first," continued the girl, her voice floating from her as though carried on the bosom of her dream, "is called Flesh; the second, Spirit, and the third—the third I shall name the Veiled God."

"Madge!" cried Tremont, and Randolph, listening with all his ears, could almost feel the clutch on his own arms with which the man had seized the girl's, as though to drag her back from her mind's far distance.

"People wonder," she continued, her mood unbroken, "at the wreck of apparently perfect marriages and yet it's so simple to any woman that it's amazing that I should be the first to display our open secret. Only the complete lover can be secure of his beloved, Beacher. He who wins her flesh alone leaves her spirit to betray him, and he who wins the spirit alone is in mortal danger of the woman of the flesh."

"The explanation," said Tremont, whimsically, "is so feminine that it confuses. If you had said that each woman is a trinity and must be thrice won before a man's honor can feel secure, understanding would be a simple matter. Did you leave out the Veiled God purposely or just to be different and avoid the obvious?"

"To avoid the obvious is an instinct of breeding," said Miss Van Tellier, "and I would never blush for doing it; but where would your thoughts be now if I had said just what you expected, if I had treated the Veiled God as a matter of fact! Oh, no! One can clip with words the wings of flesh and spirit, but not of the Veiled God in woman, for its very essence is a deferred possession."

She paused, but as Tremont clung to the silence, she presently continued. "The complete lover is the man who having conquered all the heights of flesh and spirit in his mistress, dwells consciously in the presence of an undiscovered god and gazes out upon a broad land eternally promised, never materially seized. Few are the men—few are the men—" Her voice trailed off as though her thoughts had run ahead of words and reached finality without the use of the spoken phrase.

"Few are the men who attain to that serene security," Tremont finished for her, only half conscious of what he was saying.

Randolph could her the rustle of her turning to her companion. "How wonderful," she said. "That is what I thought, but didn't say."

"Madge," said Tremont, "what have you done? It's true that I have never stooped to hypocrisies with you and that I have never while with you spoken a vulgar word. Did you think that I have been knowingly wise? Well, I haven't. I didn't know until this moment why I chose a rare and high atmosphere to reach you. Now I know. It was because you were there. I chose only to come to you rather than drag you down to the drab of the usual. What you have done is to carry me higher than I ever meant to go. You have taken me off the beaten path and showed me an unexpected treasure. I'm no longer myself. I am cold and afraid."

Randolph could feel that the speaker was drawing away from the girl and a moment later his senses were to surpass themselves in additional divination. "You are afraid of that woman in me?" asked Miss Van Tellier softly. "What about this one?" And then it was that Randolph's deductive antennae quivered under their burden of intelligence. He knew as certainly as though he had faced about that an adorable Madge, tender and wide-eyed, had slipped her bare arms around Beacher Tremont's neck and kissed him on the mouth.

There was a long silence; then came Tremont's voice, thick and strange to the ear. "A moment ago," it said, "I was afraid for you; now I'm afraid for myself. I am like a man who has carelessly dropped a lighted match and finds himself within the ring of a prairie fire. I can only wonder at my stupidity in thinking of you in connection with a casual possession and not as a consuming flame. You see? Already you have burned through the thin crust of lies that guards man from definite seizure by woman—any woman."

"Kiss me, Beacher," murmured the girl's voice as though his words had swirled around and by her, leaving her purpose untouched. "Take me and hold me carefully where no unkind air can drive me from you. Take all the women in me—one by one if you must."

At that moment Mr. Robert H. Randolph, in the person of Slim Hervey, chauffeur, very nearly wrecked his four-cylinder argosy with its burden of three fates, still individually and collectively indispensable to the continuity of this yarn. He missed the ditch by a hair's breath, caught his own with a gasp, returned to the middle of the broad highway and fixed his attention on a certain very definite matter with which it had been more or less constantly concerned ever since he had been directed to hit it up for Greenwood.

The road to that well-known hostelry was usefully devious and fares were seldom worried as to how any particular driver set out to find this choicest of needles in the hay-stack of the country inns that dot the landscape of Westchester and adjacent counties as long as he brought the search to a successful end somewhere this side of the pangs of hunger.

Nevertheless, had not Mr. Tremont, himself a motorist of no mean experience, been completely absorbed by the sudden discovery that he had his right arm around an entirely new world, he would have been struck inevitably by two things. First, that this was certainly not any one of the climbing roads to the Greenwood hostelry; second, that the man at the wheel knew more about losing his way in the vicinity of Manhattan and finding it again than did the combined roadmaps of the United States and its allies—supposing it to have had

Grade Operetta To Be Given At School Tonight

Operetta With Over Seventy Pupils In Cast To Be Given At School House Tonight.

A PLEASING FAIRY TALE

A synopsis of the operetta, "On Midsummer Day," is as follows:

"The child, who professes to love her flowers dearly, has nevertheless shamefully neglected their care. The Fairy Queen discovers their sorry plight and sends them off to Fairyland while she searches the world for the careless little gardener that she may rebuke her. The child, broken hearted at the loss of her flowers, seeks comfort from the Fairy Queen. The queen recites the story of her cruel neglect, and with the aid of the Overall Boys and Sunbonnet Babies gives her a lesson in gardening. Upon her promise to be better, her beloved flowers are restored to her garden."

Saturday at 2:30 at Clarion, Belmond high school will meet Clarion in a dual track meet. If you have time, plan to attend, that is, if you enjoy good foot racing, jumping vault ing and like sports.

If weather permits this meet another date will be set later.

Friday at 4:20 Belmond high school will play their second game of base ball on the local diamond. Dows will be here at that time. Our boys played real ball the first five innings against Hampton and will undoubtedly do better next Friday. The boys need backers if they are to play real ball. Be a booster and come to the game Friday afternoon, 4:20.

Cho-Cho the Health Clown will be at the high school auditorium Friday at 4:00 to give his program to children between the ages of 6 and 12, especially. We extend invitations to all the rural schools to close school a little early and make arrangements with some of the parents to bring your school to see Cho-Cho

Practice on the Senior class play, "Nothing But the Truth," is going on steadily: May 20 has been set for the date, so plan to attend. "Nothing But the Truth" is considered one of the cleverest farces that has been released for ameteur production in late years.

The last program of the literary was given last Friday.

NEW BLACKSMITH SHOP OPENS

W. A. Dittmer is the new proprietor of the blacksmith shop of Peter Stacy, which he has taken over and is now conducting. Mr. Dittmer was a master mechanic at tht sugar factory last year, and has had some 16 years experience in his trade. He is fully capable and will no doubt receive a good patronage.

Mr. Stacy, who has been in the blacksmith business here for some 45 years, has been on the sick list for some time past. His many old friends in and around Belmond will be sorry to have him leave the shop, wehre for so many years he has betn a familiar figure.

ASCENSION DAY SERVICES

Ascension Day will be observed by the Immanuel Reformed church on Thursday forenoon of this week. The services will commence at 10:30 o'clock.

The pastor also desires to announce regular preaching services in the evening of each Lord's day, and herewith invites all residing in this immediate community to worship with us. The services commence at 8:00 o'clock and are conducted in the American language. We preach Christ and Him crucified, the Saviour of the world.

A. H. Waalkes, Pastor.

NEW NAME FOR SPRUCE STREET NOT YET CHOSEN

o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o

The new name for Spruce street has not yet been chosen by the city council. A meeting was held on Monday of this week, and the list of new names which have been submitted, examined, but as the council is not quite ready for the change yet no definite action was taken.

The council expects to make its selection in the near future however—possibly this week or next—so those who have not yet submitted their suggestions should get it in at once.

Among the names so far on the list are the following:

Main Street
Commerce Street
Central Avenue
Crist Avenue
Ramsay Boulevard
Broadway

The council expects to have the entire affair settled and in radiness for the ordnace at the next meeting.

Cho-Cho the Health Clown at Auditorium Friday

Famous Health Clown To Give His Lecture To Children At Four O'Clock P. M.

IS VERY ECCENTRIC FELLOW

Cho-Cho's manager at Ames has asked us to put forth every effort to make his entertainment a success. It is not every day that Belmond entertains so famous nor so peculiar a person. While Cho-Cho loves children he does not like to have babies at his performances. His manager says, "He wants no grown ups or babies mixed in with the children. He performs chiefly for the children from 6 to 12 and wishes others to be in the rear. His performance is very good, but he is surely queer whimsical and eccentric. He loves to be praised and to have his picture taken." So we are asking all the babies to wait until their fifth birthday is passed to be at his performance, and the grown upsto go up into the gallery leaving the main floor for the children.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o

Judge Thompson dismissed the case of H. N. Nettles vs. F. B. Sheldon, cashier of the Rowan Savings bank. Suit was a complicated affair between Landlord Aldrich, the tenant and the bank.

Marriage licenses for the past week: L. P. Claude and Nettie Bedient, Frank Walter Bowman and Edith I. Northrop, Elmer Thompson and Selma Larson, Alfred Berkland andO'Vera Geneva Jenson.

The case against John Berg, the Belmond ex-bank cashier, has been continued until the October term of court. His attorneys wanted more time in which to prepare the case and his doctor stated that the defendant's health would not permit of the case going to trial at this term.

The case of the Nordschow Motor Co. vs. Hal Smith, being an action to collect commission on sale of an auomobile, also garage account, was taken from the jury by Judge Thompson, when it became known that the plaintiff had not delivered the auto in question or even attempted to do so.

Divorces have been granted to the following couples: L. E. Goslin vs. Beulah Goslin of Clarion, Ben Cain vs. Argola Cain of Clarion, Planche Jennings vs. Claude Jennings of Rowan, O'Ressa Holly vs. Leo M. Holly. The case of Dexter vs. Dexter is yet to be disposed of.

Sheriff Lang went to Eagle Grove last week and returned with a man and his wife by the name of Knuter, who had previously plead guilty to stealing an auto truck belonging to Claude Middleton. They drove it to Gilmore City where they abandoned the machine. They are confined in the county jail awaiting court action.

The Rock Island railroad company has withdrawn its suit against the board of supervisors over the establishing of the storm sewer project in Clarion. Birdsall & Archerd received notice to that effect last week from the company's attorneys. The above action removes the last obstacle in the matter of establishing the proposed storm sewer.

The jury in the case of the state vs. Dan Lorraine found him not guilty, returning a verdict Tuesday afternoon. Defendant was charged with stealing a quantity of alcohol from a small building in the east part of town, where it had been stored the day previous to its disappearance. Defendant assisted with the removing of the liquor in question. Delmar Curtis, who says he was with Loraine, plead guilty as charged and was sentenced to 20 days in the county jail and fined $100.—Monitor.

COMMUNITY CLUB HOLDS FINE MEETING

Large Attendance At Meeting Last Friday And Many Interesting Improvements Planned.

Tht Community Welfare club held an interesting meeting last Friday afternoon. Mrs. A. E. Martin, chairman of the memorial tree committee, reported that some of the trees planted in memory of the boys who died in the world war were dead, and would be replaced this week. She also reported that the committee thought it would be unsatisfactory to bring in a boulder from the country to place the bronze tablet on. It would be too difficult to have it planed and the tablet fitted on solidly. She reported that the Chamber of Commerce would pay half the price if the club wished to purchase a boulder for that purpose. Mrs. Martin stated it would cost about $100. The club voted to purchase such a boulder.

Mrs. Ramsay, chairman of the shrubrey committee, reported that the shrubs and vines had all been placed on the city hall grounds, making it a very attractive place.

The bill of $10 for the shrubs and expense of placing them was allowed.

Mrs. E. W. Luick was leader of the program which was on civic improvements for Belmond. After an interesting talk Mrs. Luick turned the meeting over to the members for a general discussion on things that would improve and benefit the community.

A reading by Eloise Brooks and a piano solo by Marjorie Williams were enjoyed by all present.

Cinnamon rolls and coffee were served by the Mesdames W. R. Ramsay, J. M. Jensen, H. J. Bohning, L. R. Parsons, A. E. Martin, Glenn Baker, Delaney, A. Andrews, and Miss Blanche Baker.

AMERICAN LEGION ON NEIGHBORHOOD TOUR

Last week Thursday the American Legion post here went on a neighborhood tour with the purpose of advertising the activities of the post and making themselves known to the surrounding towns. About half a dozen auto loads went on the trip, and a small Legion band was one of the attraction-drawing stunts. They drove to Rowan thence to the Lee Aldrich farm where a sale was in progress, from there to Alexander, on to Meservey, Goodell and Kanawha, then home. They met with very nic reception at all stops and a very successful trip is reported.

MUCH IDLE LABOR NOW

The idle labor in Belmond is increasing each day, from the strangers who drift in looking for a job. The fact that the factory has closed for the season evidently has not reached very far out in a general way as yet, for many of the men have made inquiries at this office regarding employment there. Most of the men appear willing to work on the farm, but they all want more money than the farmer can afford to pay. They do not seem to have sensed the fact yet that there are more men than there are jobs right now, and while they are willing to work for some less than they have been, they still have some pretty big ideas.

FORMER SCHOOL SUPT. GETS ADVANCEMENT

The following from the Storm Lake paper concerns a former well known superintendent of school here, S. T. Neveln, who will be remembered by many local people:

Storm Lake friends of S. T. Neveln, for five years superintendent of the Storm Lake schools and for the past seven years superintendent at LeMars has been elected superintendent of the schools at Austin, Minn. A fine new $350,000 high school building is just being completed there and the list of applicants for the position was a long one. School men like to work in Minnesota as it is said that the state does more for its schools than here in Iowa and Mr. Nevelo's many friends in Storm Lake will extend their congratulations.

REQUIRED SUMS FOR CONCERTS NOW IN SIGHT

Belmond Assurred Of Good Home Band For This Summer With Old Players In It.

FIRST CONCERT NEXT MONTH

Leader Is Secured, First Rehersal To Be This Week, Band Is Told To Go Ahead.

Belmond is now assured of a band for this summer. The committee of the Chamber of Commerce, which solicited the business houses and others last week, reports that they have raised all but a few dollars of the required amount, $1,750, and they still have a number to see whom they know will bring the required sum within reach.

The band boys have been told to go ahead with their arrangements in securing the leader, and it is understood they have done this and that the first rehersal of the band will be held this week.

The band will necessarily have to hold several rehersals before giving the first concert, and the first number of the summer's concerts will not be held until about the first Saturday night in June therefore. Mr. Shennet of Ackley, leader of the band at that place and at Hampton, has been secured to lead the band here for the summer.

The band will be composed principally of the old players, altho a few new ones will be among the members.

THERE IS NO CIRCUS COMING

There is no circus coming to town. But Friday, May 6, the biggest part of the circus is to be here from Clarion. Cho-Cho, the famous health clown, formerly belonging to the Barnum-Bailey circus, is to be here bringing with him many a laugh for those who attend his performance. Look for a big automobile at 4:00 o'clock from the west, and you will see him. His performance is especially for the children and he goes thru the whole line of clown antics and capers to please them. He even makes vegetables talk. Yet thru it all runs a serious note, that of impressing on the children's minds, the need of proper food, exercise, and cleanliness. He has a big game to teach, called the health game. We want every child in the vicinity of Belmond to be there to learn this game.

BALL GAME POSTPONED; TO BE PLAYED SUNDAY

On Account Of Rain Game With The Mason City Independents Was Postponed Until Sunday.

The first game of base ball for the season, scheduled for last week Sunday, was postponed until this week Sunday, May 8 at the local diamond. The same team, Mason City Independents, will play the town team, and Pillmer, the try-out pitcher, will be on the mound for the home team. He is rated real high class, and the Independents are conceded to be the best of their kind in northern Iowa, so the fans should see a real game next Sunday. If Pillmer proves he is the goods, the probabilities are that the local manager will keep him with the team.

HIGH SCHOOL LOSES 12 TO 0

The high school base ball team met Hampton in the first game of the season on the local diamond on last Wednesday afternoon. The boys put up a fine game for five or six innings, when they blew up and the final reckoning was 12 to 0 in favor of the Hampton team. The latter aggregation were mostly all larger and more experienced players than the local boys, and were a fast and hard-hitting bunch.

FREE AIR!

o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o

The Air is in receipt of a letter, by some reader of the column, and the writer thereof disagress—strangely—with certain of our viewpoints.

They want us to print the same, whether with or without comment they say not. Howsomever, they ask that we invite comment both pro and con on the question at issue—mostly con, we think.

The scribe forgot one thing, however; a mere trifle, but one which we are just ornery enough about to make them do: They forgot to sign said epistle.

If the writer thereof will just send in their name to the aforesaid document, we will oblige them by placing their brainchild, or storm, in cold print. Without the name, we hardly feel like doing it. We won't print the name, but we have to know who is responsible: We can't be for more than our own efforts, and that's all the job we care to handle.

It looks like any opinion that was homeless, you might say, or at least wandering 'round without any visible parentage or means of support or something, was a sort of pitiful object or object of pity, whatever the difference. Opinions hadn't ought, as the high school students say, be allowed to wander around in public without a guardian. Anyway that's what we think, and as we won't be responsible for the kid, it'll have go to the orphanage until claimed.

Somebody suggested that we change the name of this colyum to Hot Air. At that they came pretty close to winning the prize. The reason we don't is because we want to make the Air different, and there's so much hot air floating 'round. Free air draws the attention immediately, because its free. And if folks don't like it, they can't demand heir money back, because being free it didn't cost 'em anything.

Ain't people funny? We don't mean comical in appearance, tho you run across them every day—and they probably think the same thing of you; we mean in the way, or different ways, they look at things. Nothing in particular, just things in general. We were arguing with one of the ministers the other day, and he said the majority of people didn't think things out enough. We claimed they thought enough, but they didn't reason their thoughts out to a definite conclusion.

What do you think?

Not that we aim to say we do any more thinking than the rest of the folks, tho we sure do a pile of it, or any more reasoning either, for that matter. We were just remarking about it.

CITY COURT FINDINGS

Mayor Barry reports the following cases for the past week:

Alfred Swenson, speeding and driving with cut out open, $5 and costs.

W. T. Gfeller, illegal parking, $5 and costs.

E. L. Chapman, speeding, $5 and costs.

Robert Markel, driving without the required lights and inadequate brakes, $5 and costs.

Cyril McGuire, speeding, $5 and costs.

Joe Anderson, disturbing the peace, $5 and costs.

CLARION ROAD CLOSED

The road leading from Solsburg west to Clarion has been closed to traffic by order of the highway commission, as the road is being graded and graveled and is not in fit shape to be traveled over. The traffic is being diverted on the road at the Snarl street section, two miles this side of Solsburg, for Clarion and all points west.

RUHL GETS $100 AND COSTS

Report from the district court yesterday reports that George Rurl, recently arrested here on the charge of bootlegging, pleaded guilty to the court and was assessed a fine of $100 and costs. The other Ruhl, arrested on a similar charge, will go before the grand jury to have his case looked into.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE WAR-LIKE PEOPLE

The first group of sympathizers with the anti-Japanese agitators are the Legionaires. The Americans who were dispatched to France during the war but who did not take a sufficient share in actual fighting are still bloodthirsty. The most warlike people now in the world are the American Legionaires.—Yorodzu, Tokyo.

The foregoing expression of Japanese love will shed a white light to many Americans, some hundred million of them, who have been thinking that the members of the American Legion were peaceful citizens, who had had plenty of scrapping and were ready to enjoy a spell of the quiet life.

The item quoted illustrates very nicely the idea that most foreign countries have of the American temperament. And it also illustrates how they regard the part we played in the recent unpleasantness across the pond. Notice the remark about our men not taking an active part in the mess. That seems to be the general idea over there, that we stood back and claimed the glory while they accomplished the dirty work.

How many Japs fought at Chatteau Thierry, Soissons, St. Meheil and the Argonne? Just where did the wonderful Japs do any fighting? They took on a few closed-in Germans at a port in China, took all summer to bomb them out, and then spent the balance of the war in making as much money as they could, which was a considerable amount, for Japan came out of the fuss with more gain on the average than any one else.

As for the Legionaires being the most warlike people, it is to laugh. If there's anp more peaceful lot of folks in the world today than the American Legion, then the said folks are sure of certain and immediate demise, for they are too good to live.

Japan is riding to a fall. Since their little fuss with the drunken, browbeaten, misled Russian army the Japs have acquired the idea that all they have to do is to look fierce and they can lick the world. Some of these days they are going to run up against some real fighters, and when they do they are going to realize that licking a bunch of disorganized and misled troops is an entirely different proposition than doing the same thing to troops that are thoroly organized and led, such as the most warlike people for instance. A regiment of roughnecks might prove an entirely different affair than a regiment of whiskers; they'd be harder to shave.

But the Jap can well look out for the Legionaires. They display good judgement there, and if they will remember that there are some three million or more of the said Legionaires, they will be doing themselves a big favor.

Warlike is right when the occasion demands.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST EPISCOPAL
J. H. Edge, Pastor.

Next Sunday is Mother's Day and appropriate services will be held both morning and evening. At 11:00 a. m. the pastor will preach a sermon in keeping with the occasion. At 8:00 p. m. the young people will give a Mother's Day service in song and reading. Parents have a very special invitation to the morning service and the evening service will have a special message for young people.

Sunday school at 10:00 a. m. and Epworth League devotional meeting at 7:00 p. m.

CONGREGATIONAL
Rev. S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

Boost, boost, boost, we will have to boost to make up for last Sunday The rain brought our average for the quarter way below our mark but with a good strong effort for a Sunday or two we will be above our mark once more. Be on hand next Sunday with someone who does not go to Sunday school.

The services for next Sunday are the Bible school at 10:00 and the morning worship at 11:00 at which time the pastor will speak on the subject of "The Old Fashioned Mother.' This is Mother's Day and it would be very appropriate for you to wear some flower that was or is a favorite with your mother. In the evening the young people's choir will render some special selections and Miss Sydow will favor us with a solo or two. The sermon will be upon the subject of a mother's influence. Come and help make this a great day in your life and the lives of others.

ROBINSON

WE RECOMEND

That every citizen adopt as his creed the words of the immortal Lincoln:

"Let every American, every lover of Liberty; every well-wisher of his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution not to violate in the least particular the laws of the land, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own and his children's Liberty. Let reverence for the law be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap. Let it be taught in schools, in seminaries and in colleges. Let it be written in primers, spelling books and almanacs. Let it be preached from pulpits, proclaimed from legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the Nation.

shamelessly looked at herself in a ... length mirror of such pure reflecting qualities as had not crossed her path since England was a pup. After that, a long, entrancing item, called "drying her hair."

Did you blame her, three lines back, in your heart for her frequent inspections of self in the mirror? If you did, look at her now! Mr. Randolph's bathrobe is billowed at her waist and tied tight to keep it from trailing on the floor; for almost a like reason, its sleeves are rolled up above her elbows. It is open in a V at the neck, showing the adolescent curve of a virginal but much excited bosom.

With a woolly towel in both hands, she plants herself before the staid old looking-glass and gives it such a treat as it has never before savored in its sixty-two years of service to the Randolph family. Rub, rub, rub with the towel. Her cheeks grow pink and pinker, her eyes round and rounder. They twinkle and smile, and once, when she made a little face at herself, they laughed out loud. DOWS GIRLS HURT IN JOY RIDE

Two Dows girls, Misses Cleo Wesenberg and Nita Hemingway, out for an auto spin in Des Moines last Saturday night, were badly injured in an auto smash when the car in which they were riding crashed into an interurban car when they were entering the city. Harry Long, one of the occupants of the car, was killed in the accident, and Miss Hemingway was quite seriously injured, so much so that for a time her recovery was considered doubtful. Eugene Long, driver of the car, escaped with only slight injuries.

The girls had gone to Ames for a visit, and there met the Long boys, with whom they were acquainted, and the boys invited them to take an auto trip to Des Moines which invitation the girls accepted. One of the Long boys, it is said, had been attending college at Ames, and his brother was over from Blairsburg for a visit with him.

The body of Harry Long was removed to Webster City for interment, accompanied by the dead boy's father, mother, and his brother, Eugene, who was driving the machine at the time of the fatality.

According to Eugene Long, the accident occurred while driving east on Euclid avenue in Des Moines and he did not see the approaching train until a few yards away from the tracks, when, after a fruitless effort to stop his machine, it crashed into the train, the force of the impact sending the car spinning for more than 50 yards.—Hampton Chronicle.

BY YOUR COAL NOW

About the best investment the householder can make at present is in his winter's coal supply, says Amedee Casey, editor of the American Coal Journal.

With the reductions made in the prices of hard coal the first of this month and with prices of bituminous coal down below the cost of production in many instances, it is perfectly safe to figure that at no time during the remainder of the year will it be possible to buy coal at prices lower than those prevailing at present. Aside from that, there is postive danger that those who delay buying will have difficulty in obtaining coal at any price when the actual need for it comes.

The situation is simply one of supply and demand, with the complication of transportation difficulties thrown in. There has been very little demand for coal for quite a long period. Consequently the bituminous mines are not running to more than 40 per cent of capacity. Soft coal cannot be stored in any quantity at the mines; it takes up more room than is available and the extra handling naturally adds to the cost.

Anyway, reserve stocks at the mines would not be the answer to the problem. This country uses a great deal of coal and when coal is moving actively into consumption, the biggest reserve stock that could be piled up at the mines and in dealer's yards is merely a drop in the bucket. The country's largest coal storage plant is the consumer's bins.

Another most important point is that of getting the coal from the mines to where it is needed. Every ton of coal that moves into consumption in this country has to be moved by the railroads and they are not equal to the task of transporting it all at once. This was demonstrated last season.

Just now the railroads are begging for business. There are hundreds of thousands of empty cars standing idle along sidings and freight crews have been reduced to a minimum. Coal could be easily moved and promptly and the consumer, taking advantage of the present low prces, would be assured of a full winter's supply at reasonable cost.

In a few weeks the idle freight cars are going to be put in service [illegible]rrying materials for road building [illegible] industria use; still later there [illegible]l be the crop movement which uses [illegible]y available car and, even under [illegible] most favorable transportation [illegible]itions, which do not exist at pres[illegible] [illegible]auses bad congestion on the rail[illegible] [illegible] By the time that is finished, [illegible]ld weather is usually with us [illegible]re are the problems of frozen [illegible]ozen switches and storm de[illegible] [illegible] overcome.

[illegible]rs have the experience of [illegible]n to warn them of the re[illegible] delayed buying. Nobody [illegible] repitition of such a market, [illegible]of all the coal men. But such a [illegible]tion will undoubtedly result if [illegible] present stagnation continues very [illegible]uch longer.

MORE IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE WILSON HIGWHAY

The following is fom the Stanhope [illegible]per:

[illegible]nouncement was made in this paper a couple of weeks ago that the State Highway commission has prepared the specifications, upon application of the board of supervisors of Hamilton county, and the contracts will be let about May 1 for the grading, draining, and graveling this season of the Wilson Highway from the corner one mile south of Jewel to the Story county line.

Last Friday the writer was in Ames in conference with Parley Sheldon, president of the Wilson Highway and the announcement was made that the highway commission and the Story county board of supervisors had completed plans for further improvement of the Wilson Highway this year in Story county. The road from the Story county line south to Ames will be put to grade and drained this year, gravel surfacing of that stretch of the Wilson Highway going over to the following year. The highway is already improved from Ames to Des Moines and from Jewell north to Blairsburg, so that with the two projects now arranged for in Hamilton and Story counties an unbroken stretch of good road is assurred from Blairsburg to Des Moines —unbroken, that is, except for the streets inside the corporation of the town of Jewell.

And in other counties in the state of Iowa, traversed by the Wilson Highway, the road is in line for good improvements.

In Winnebago county contracts are already let for draining and graveling the Wilson highway from Forest City north and east hru Lake Mills to the Minnesota state line.

Paving of the Wilson highway entirely across Hancock county has already been voted, and much of the grading and draining has already been done. A portion of the paving is now defitnitely listed for 1922 construction, including the road from the Winnebago line to the intersection with the North Iowa Pike at Garner. The remaning part of that paving may be done the following year.

The situation of the Wilson highway appears to be the poorest in Wright county of any county in the state. The north half of the good is now in fairly good shape, particularly from Belmond south for six or eight miles which now has a finely graveled road. From Galt to the Hamilton county line the highway is bad and no improvement of it is listed for this year. That part of the highway has, however, been put in the primary system of Wright county and improvement of t may be hoped for within a year or so, work in Wright county being appartntly confined to east and west primary roads. The five miles in Hamilton county from Blairsburg to the Wright county line has also been recently been put in the primary system and improvement work is expected next year but nothing definite is yet arranged.

WHO READ ADS AND HOW TO MAKE THEM PAY

The reason why people read a local newspaper is to get the local news—not the general telegraphic reports.

Above 95 per cent of newspaper readers read the advertisements. So far as the truth of statements is concerned, they differentiate very little as between the news and the advertising columns.

Advertising that carries the personal touch and that adheres strictly to the truth brings the best results.

The reliability of a firm and the courtsey it gives its customers comes ahead of price consideration in building up trade.

These were the high spots in the message brought to the retail merchants bureau at the Chamber of Commerce, Wednesday night, by C. A. Baumgart, advertising specialist with Successful Farming, Des Moines, says the Webster City Journal. Mr. Baumgart spoke for over an hour, during all of which time he was given the very closest attention. His address pertained to the things that make for success in mercantile business and is built upon a survey made at Washington, Iowa, which thru questionnaires and an analysis of the answers, many interesting and valuable facts were learned as to what percentage of people read advertisements, why they read them, whether or not they believed them, why they trade at one store in preference to another and many similar questions of vital importance to the live merchant on the trail of a new customer.

The survey upon which Mr. Baumgart's address is built was made last August. The figures are all of them aproximately applicable here because Washington is just about the size of Webster City. Washington, however, has had an advertising club for more than three years and thru its efforts the community had been pretty thoroly "sold" on the proposition of reading and believing advertisements. The survey there was made by the Washington Journal, in conjunction with the advertising club and Mr. Baumgart.

The figures showed that the most popular departments of the Washington Journal are the society column and the personal notes. The people take the paper, which is a daily, to get the news of their own community. They want to know what the people with whom they are acquainted are doing.

The most successful advertisements are those which carry some element of human interest or which are linked up with local news and suggestions. And among the various kinds of advertising, the want ads are read by most people. Upwards of 97 per cent of newspaper readers read the want ads. Nearly every one has bought or sold something thru the want ads.

The personal touch, human interest and the straightforward business story are the elements of success in an advertisement. Mr. Baumgart told of a Sac City merchant who, on an advertising appropriation of 1 1-2 per cent, increased his business from $10,000 to $25,000 annually.

Mr. Baumgart laid great stress upon truth in advertising. He also showed by figures that the matter of price alone is seldom the leading consideration that brings a customer into a store. Quality of the goods, courtesy of clerks, and reliability of the firm usually come ahead of price. He analyzed the questionnaires as to each line of business, but for the most part, the same general facts were found to be true. People know dishonest advertisers, they know inferior goods, they seldom go back to trade at a store where they have been "stung," they have definite reasons for trading where they do and they appreciate most of all quality, "store service," courtesy and accomodation.

BLANKETY—BLANK VERSE

Within our burg there lives a dame, (I would not dare to tell her name) whose constant and supreme delight is spreading gossip day and night. As carrion-crow loves rotten flesh, so she loves scandal stale and fresh; as cat watches the hole for mouse, so she eyes every neighbor's house; no matter who goes out or in, she makes of it a heinous sin. She scarce dare go to sleep at night lest something rich escape her sight. Her sense of smell for things unclean by use has grown exceeding keen, her tongue become so long, by heck, she has to twist it round her neck. She goes by day from place to place and tells with horror-stricken face about her neighbor's awful sins, but in her heart she really grins with satisfaction born of hell that she has such a tale to tell. She smashes friendships by the score and breaks up happy homes galore, but to her mind this matters not; she still keeps peddling her rot. And when at last she's run her race and gone to her appointed place, she'll entertain the devil there with tales of scandal rich and rare.—Exchange.

An Adventure Romance

BY GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

COPYRIGHT THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

PART I.—Robert Hervey Randolph, young New York man-about-town, leaves the home of his sweetheart, Madge Van Tellier, chagrined because of her refusal of his proposal of marriage. His income, $10,000 a year, which he must surrender if a certain Miss Imogen Pamela Thornton (whom he has seen only as a small girl ten years before) is found, is not considered by the girl of his heart adequate to modern needs. In a "don't care" mood Randolph enters a taxi, unseen by the driver, and is driven to the stage door of a theater. A man he knows, Duke Beamer, induces a girl to enter the cab. Beamer, attempting to follow, is pushed back by Randolph and the cab moves on. His new acquaintance tells Randolph she is a chorus girl, and has lost her position. She is in distress, even hungry, and he takes her to his apartment. There, after lunch, a chance remark convinces him the girl is the missing Pamela Thornton. He does not tell her of her good fortune, but secures her promise to stay in the flat until the morning, and leaves her. In a whimsical mood, also realizing that the girl's reappearance has left him practically penniless, he bribes the taxi driver to let him take his job, and leaving word with the legal representative of the Thornton estate where he can find Pamela, takes up his new duties under the name of "Slim Hervey." He loves the girl, but his pride forbids him approaching her under their changed conditions.

PART II.—One evening he is engaged by Beacher Tremont, notorious profligate, to drive him and Madge Van Tellier to a hostelry known as "Greenwood." Aware of the evil nature of the place, Randolph drives the pair to Greenwood cemetery. Infuriated, Beacher gets out of the cab and Randolph leaves him there, taking the girl (who has awakened to a realization of her folly) to her home. Madge recognizes him.

allies at the time. However, Mr. Tremont's absorption was not only absolute but continuous so that it held him in its inexorable grip right up to the moment of ghastly awakening and even over the edge. He was just saying, "My darling, never fear. I'm taking you to a place so quiet and so guarded that this dream which you have dressed in an unexpected glory can flow on unbroken as long as we are true to it and to ourselves," when the cab drew up at a solemn and impressive portal.

Without leaving his seat, the cabman reached back, unlatched the door and threw it open. "Greenwood cemetery, sir," he barked.

The girl was first to grasp the words, the time and the place. "Oh!" she gasped, and in the sound of her cry Mr. Randolph could divine her whole body suddenly stiffening to a tense awakening and to the stabbing memory of the last time she had come to this still place, her heart bursting with its long farewell to all that was left of her mother.

Then came Mr. Beacher Tremont's voice in oldtime familiar tones. "Greenwood cemetery! Why, you triplicate blockhead, I said Greenwood hostelry. Of all the d—n fools! What the devil— What the h—ll— What the— What—"

"Greenwood Cemetery, Sir," He Barked

He choked himself into a gulping inarticulate silence as he climbed from the cab to look in the face the sum total of all human stupidity. No sooner had he alighted than Miss Van Tellier found herself in voice again. "Oh! oh!" she moaned, pressing her hands to her eyes, achingly open, "take me away from here."

"Sure, miss," said Mr. Randolph promptly, threw in his clutch and was off.

"Hi, you! D—n you! Hey! You! Driver! Confound your d—d impertinence! Hey! How am I going to get home?" The first of these cries was very plainly, the last very faintly heard by Mr. Randolph. After them came down the wind something that sounded very much like the ghost of a wail of despair, but the driver paid no heed. His attention was absorbed by something quite different; the dry sobs of a little heap of smoke-colored chiffon.

Detours, subterfuges and the finesse of the road-faker were swept from Randolph's mind; he made straight for the bridge and home, but long before they reached the river all sound had ceased to issue from the cab and in its stead reigned a purposeful, almost menacing silence. What was she thinking in there? What could she think? Why didn't she go right on crying and keep her mind fully occupied with that?

As they swept down the incline from the bridge into City Hall park he suddenly realized that he had been on the verge of giving himself away. He half turned his head and shouted through the speaking-slot, "What address, miss?"

Her voice came back to him from very close as though her face had been pressed to the glass in an effort to make him out. "At the corner of the Avenue and East Ninth street."

Ten minutes later he drew up his cab at the appointed spot and reached back to throw open the door, but kept his foot on the clutch release, leaving the gears in mesh, first speed ahead.

All his precautions were in vain. As he opened the cab door his coat sleeve was seized in a very determined grip and drawn inward, catching his elbow in a jiu-jutsu leverage that left him the Hobson's choice of either getting out and facing his captor or listening to his arm break. He chose to get down from his seat quickly.

"Well, Bobby," murmured Miss Van T.

Mr. Randolph attempted no evasion; he handed the lady to the curb and guided her gently toward her own door and up the high steps. "Madge," he said, "you fought a great fight tonight and when you had won you felt sorry for Tremont and surrendered. You were swept too high on the wave of the best that is in you. Promise me that you won't forget that you have won. Promise me that you will wait and take Tremont, all of him, with honor."

"What do you mean? What did you hear?" cried Miss Van T. angrily, her pale face suddenly flushing.

"From the start of the ride to the finish I heard every word," declared Mr. Randolph frankly, "and more."

"And more!" repeated the hard-pressed girl. "What do you mean by more?" She still tried to browbeat him, but remembering one incredibly long kiss, her eyes fell in the unequal battle with Bobby's and attempted to create diversion by staring at his gaitered legs and heavily booted feet.

"Look up, Madge. Look at me," said Mr. Randolph and waited patiently until first her long lashes fluttered and then her lovely eyes swept slowly up to his face. "That's it," he continued as their looks met and locked. "Let's hold that so we can't lie."

"Why should I lie if you really heard everything?" asked Miss Van T., and suddenly smiled.

"Madge, you little devil," said Mr. Randolph, suppressing an impulse to shake her, "can you think of what you've been doing and laugh?"

"Yes, I can, just now," said Miss Van T., in little gasping phrases that to a man, especially one of Mr. Randolph's limpid nature, carried only their face value in words, but which to any woman would have read as plainly as the red-weather signal, "Look out for showers of tears followed by storm."

"Well," said Mr. Randolph solemnly, "if you really don't realize just where you have been, let me tell you. First you flew high into clean air and you took Tremont with you. You were possessed of a vision and you made him see it, too, a mirage of those lifted places that are the altar of the mind before love. Just a mirage, an illusion of perfect happiness, which cold reason tells us we can't ever turn into reinforced concrete and plant in the yard, but which we must either forever hold as a vision or admit that love is a sordid and wingless thing."

Miss Van Tellier's eyes fell from his frank gaze. Something seemed to crumple within her; she put her arms around Mr. Randolph's neck, clung to him, dropped her face against his shoulder and sobbed, not noisily, but as one who weeps to rest.

He held her close to him and went on, his face set as though to a duty. "Then what did you do? Because he hesitated, merely hesitated at the high door of adoration, you promptly slammed it and dropped plumb straight down like that traitor archangel Johnny out of heaven into the arms of hell."

"Bobby!" cried Miss Van T., throwing back her head and struggling to release herself. "How dare you say a thing like that? How dare you be here, anyway? I hate you. I don't know how I ever could have thought I loved you. I fell, but it was into Beacher's arms, and I wish I was there right now." More sobs, convulsive ones, that shook the slim body in Mr. Randolph's embrace from twitching shoulder to tired feet.

Lest the reader be startled by what's coming next it will do well to remind him that this poignant scene was staged at three o'clock in the morning on the high stoop of the Van Tellier residence in East Ninth street and never left the perimeter of the door-mat which in itself presented an almost feminine contradiction, in that it bore, done in red on its face, the word "Welcome," but was nevertheless padlocked and chained to the iron railing.

Even as Miss Van Tellier was sobbing her heart out and Mr. Randolph was standing in the bewilderment of one who knows he has not only taken the wrong turning but placed both his feet in a beartrap, a thick, heavy, unsympathetic voice arose from the foot of the steps.

"Here! Youse! Break away an' come along of me."

Memories of a mischievous boyhood swarmed to Mr. Randolph's mind, recollections of those days when, as chief of the Madison Square gang, his ears had tingled to the cry of "Cheese it, de cop! We'se pinched, fellers!" A cold sweat came out upon his brow; he slowly relaxed his grip on Miss Van T.'s person and whispered tremulously to her to keep her nerve but hand him her latchkey.

Over his shoulder he said with forced calm, "On what charge, officer?"

"Same old dope," replied the policeman phlegmatically; "drunken, disorderly. Come along, now, er d'yer want me to climb them steps so's we c'n all roll down together?"

During that speech Mr. Randolph made a lucky shot at the keyhole, stealthily turned the lock and opened the door. "The way's clear, Madge," he whispered. "Beat it."

"Oh, is it, Bobby, you dear," rattled Miss Van T. in a stage whisper that could be heard across the street. "I didn't mean it, really, what I said about hating you. But I do love Beacher, Bobby, and I'll—I'll—"

"For heaven's sake, Madge," groaned Mr. Randolph, hearing sounds as of a bear starting to swarm a tree, "keep all that till New Year's."

"I was just going to say," continued Miss Van T. breathlessly but with a [illegible] fixed on the cumbrous shadow coming up the steps, "that I'll owe it to you, Bobby. I'll owe it to you. D'you understand?"

"Sure," lied Mr. Randolph as he pushed her firmly through the door, then caught its knob, slammed it shut and turned to meet Nemesis. "Hello, Flahaharty!"

The huge policeman stopped his ponderous but sure progression and stared long and suspiciously into Mr. Randolph's face. Finally he gave a grunt of recognition. "Slim," he said to himself aloud as though somewhere within his vast bulk there were a separate monitor that had to be tipped off to the situation, "Slim Hervey."

"Sure," said Mr. Randolph, leading the way toward his wagon. "Who else did you think it was at this time o' night?"

"How did I know," demanded Mr. Flahaharty gruffly but not unpleasantly for him, "as you had taken on deliveries o' fancy dress-goods on top o' your regular line?"

He breathed heavily and allowed his eyes to protrude farther than usual in search of a thought which he sensed in the near distance. "I tell you, Slim," he finally continued, "I don' know what this burg is a-comin' to. Why, even the street kind used to have a man to take 'em home, but this here was a bit o' high-flyin' fluff—me, I could see that—an' they had to give it to a cab!"

"Forget it," said Bobby nervously.

"All I says," continued Mr. Flahaharty, "is thank God both o' my golls is married to hairy men that can an' does lick the stuffin's outen 'em."

"Well, here we are," said Mr. Randolph as he stooped to turn her over. From his seat behind the wheel he began to breathe more easily and leaned out to study the face of his friend, the officer, to make sure that therein was no guile.

"Cheer up, Jim," he said not quite reassured. "Forget it."

"I'll try," said Mr. Flahaharty dubiously, "but it'll come hard, bein' the first time I ever seen a thing like that. She sure give you a tussle, Slim!"

PART III.

Maid's Adventure.

Take a young girl of about twenty who, in her childhood, was pampered of fortune in money, position, good breeding, and pets, turn her loose on the world at the age of ten with no prop but a faithful, sickly and destitute old nurse, kill off the nurse a couple of years later, let the girl fend for herself as scullery-maid and what not through the uninteresting stage that precedes the sudden bloom of unexpected beauty, give her a long succession of jobs secured "on her looks" and lost because she wouldn't, lead her up to the crowded portal of despair and the long-drawn-out surrender; then snatch her suddenly back from destruction, feed her, give her the sole freedom for a night of Mr. Robert Hervey Randolph's comfortable apartment and—what will she do? The answer is easy. She will find the bath and turn on the hot water.

That was the very first thing that Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton did after she had finished spying from the window on the movements of what she supposed was Mr. Randolph and what, in reality, was Mr. Patrick O'Reilly in Mr. Randolph's best top-hat, best suit of evening clothes and overcoat, best gray silk muffler, price twenty-two dollars, and best patent-leather shoes—the last a very tight fit which made the revamped gentleman's gait a cross between that of a chicken on a hot stove and a drunk on his reluctant way home.

Even the unsuspecting Miss Thornton was puzzled by that halting locomotion in connection with what she knew of Mr. Randolph, but she added it, two and two, with the mysterious twenty minutes spent by that gentleman and the driver in the recesses of the cab, apparently to settle a difference in ideas as to the value of a waiting taxi, and decided that poor Mr. Randolph must have issued from the interview in a semi-crippled state.

She herself was too excited to let pity altogether absorb her. Without waiting for either the tortured wayfarer or the taxi to get quite out of sight, she dropped the window curtain and turned to possess herself of her world of comfort for a night. A starved instinct led her straight to the luxuriously appointed bathroom. As previously intimated, she turned on the hot water and clasped her hands ecstatically as she watched its crystalline surge and imagined she could smell the opalescent steam.

But not for long was she inactive. Having surrendered to circumstance to the extent of promising to stay in the flat until ten the following morning, she decided to do the job wholeheartedly, for Imogene Pamela was one of those lucky and fated young women who can never give themselves by halves. If happiness so much as showed its nose, it was her nature to tackle blindly for its waist and go to the mat for the immediate present.

Consequently, let not her modesty be misjudged when it is related that, in the short time it took to fill the bath, she accomplished the following: Rooted out Mr. Randolph's best silk pajamas, found his softest bathrobe, filled a hot-water bottle and slipped it far down between the too cold linen sheets of his big bed. Continuing at this rate of achievement, it may be imagined that in ten minutes more the young lady, having bathed, was curled up and sound asleep. Not on your life!

Item: It took her twenty-one minutes by the clock to scrub out the memory of the scabby zinc bathtubs of many years. Item: Twenty more minutes to wash her hair. Item: Half an hour more to scrub her underwear and stockings. Assorted items: Various pauses during which she shamelessly looked at herself in a full-length mirror of such pure reflecting qualities as had not crossed her path since England was a pup. After that, a long, entrancing item, called "drying her hair."

Did you blame her, three lines back, in your heart for her frequent inspections of self in the mirror? If you did, look at her now! Mr. Randolph's bathrobe is billowed at her waist and tied tight to keep it from trailing on the floor; for almost a like reason, its sleeves are rolled up above her elbows. It is open in a V at the neck, showing the adolescent curve of a virginal but much excited bosom.

With a woolly towel in both hands, she plants herself before the staid old looking-glass and gives it such a treat as it has never before savored in its sixty-two years of service to the Randolph family. Rub, rub, rub with the towel. Her cheeks grow pink and pinker, her eyes round and rounder. They twinkle and smile, and once, when she made a little face at herself, they laughed out loud. Her hair slowly wakes from its stringy dampness until it, too, bursts into a sort of light and curly merriment. Pamela puffs out her cheeks and blows at its reflection.

When all the rubbing is done, even to the last rite where they divide the fragrant flood into two waves falling over the bosom and mercilessly knead the damp ends between folds of the dryest bit of the towel, she drops that implement and runs into the big room where the dying open fire blinks its red eye as though it had been waiting up for her.

The writer—who is privileged, for the benefit of a large and growing public, to see her in his mind's eye as her pink bare feet pad up and down the room, racing every time they come to the home-stretch between the unpeopled grandstand of the couch and the fire, and then doubling suddenly, so that her wide eyes may catch her hair still on the wing, for all the world like a kitten chasing its tail—does herein affirm, by the collective manhood of the earth, that she was altogether lovable and beyond the reach of sullying thought. Now let her curl up in the bed and sleep.

Slumber meant nothing in Pamela's life. That statement should be taken not in the sense of the common slang of the vulgar, but at its literal face value. What is meant is that when this young lady slept, it was like taking a chunk bodily out of life and putting it in warm storage. As a consequence, when the old-fashioned clock on the mantel burred a warning that it was thinking of striking the hour of nine in about two minutes, she opened her eyes and wondered through what magic night had been suddenly replaced by broad and smiling day.

Not for long did that life-long and accustomed miracle hold her attention, for scarcely had it occurred, through force of habit, to her awakening thought than her start'ed eyes fell upon the tall, stooped, gray-headed figure of a man, clad in livery, and standing unstably poised in the doorway of the room. His eyes, naturally deep-set, actually protruded from his face as though they were determined to come half-way to meet Pamela's wondering orbs. He looked like a solemn raven which has carelessly alighted on a live wire.

"He-hello," Stammered the Young Lady.

"He-hello!" stammered the young lady.

"Good-morning, miss," said Tomlinson, in sepulchral and censorious tones. "Where is Master Robert?"

"You mean Mr. Randolph?" asked Pamela, a little breathlessly.

The old man steadied himself by seizing the door-jamb and bowed confirmation of her supposition.

"I don't know where he is," said Pamela, more calmly. "The last time I saw him he was limping west." A twinkle came into her eyes. "Why do you ask?"

"Why do I ask?" he exclaimed. "Miss, do you mind telling me who you are and what you are doing in Mr. Randolph's apartment at nine o'clock on a Friday morning?"

"In November," supplemented Pamela, as though she were supplying a very important addition to the facts in the case. "I am Miss Thornton," she added, with as much dignity as a maiden, tumbled of hair, flushed of cheek, and cuddled in a young man's big bed, could summon.

The effect of her words on Tomlinson was electrical.

"Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton?" he asked, as he suddenly straightened and let go of his supports.

"Yes," said Pamela, gazing at him in undisguised surprise. "How did you know?"

"Why, miss," said the old man, "I'm Tomlinson. Excuse me for saying so," he added, a pale flush in his withered cheeks, "but many a time in the old days Maggie let me take you on my knee. A mort of worry you have given us, miss."

Quick tears rose to Pamela's eyes.

"Oh!" she cried. "You knew Maggie?"

"In a manner of speaking, I did," stated Tomlinson sonorously. "Kissed her; but she never let me get as far as hugging, poor girl! She said she knew she wasn't here for long enough."

Laughter bubbled into Pamela's eyes alongside of the tears, but, in spite of it, the next moment she was crying softly.

"P-poor M-Maggie!" she sobbed.

Tomlinson bobbed his head up and down in formal sympathy, too old to worry much over woman's weeping.

"I understand that she must 'ave went," he said. "Else you wouldn't be alone, miss. Will you have your breakfast in bed?"

"Oh, could I?" sniffed Pamela, and then her eyes fell on the clock. "No I can't," she decided for herself. "You see, Tomlinson, I only pro-promised to stay until ten."

"I'll be getting your bath ready, then, miss," said Tomlinson, and withdrew.

Half an hour later Pamela was enjoying a lonely "tray"-breakfast, placed at her command before the couch, which faced the friendly fire in the big living-room. Without being a mind-reader, it is possible to surmise that she ate very slowly, in the vain hope that Mr. Randolph would pop in, with or without Father Christmas, and joining her in the meal, banish a baby Mr. Gloom that was hanging round.

While she was still toying with her food she heard the bell ring and Tomlinson's voice saying, in deep, respectful tones: "Miss Thornton will see you, sir. She is in the sitting-room."

Pamela dropped her egg-spoon and stood up, back to the fire, just in time to face a neatly dressed, pink-cheeked, bright-eyed, bald-headed little gentleman, who stood, poised but alert, in the open doorway, like a bird about to peck at her to see if she were the real thing.

"Miss Thornton?" he asked, in a peculiarly liquid voice.

Pamela nodded her head twice.

"I am Mr. Borden Milyuns," continued the molten voice, and the bright eyes studied her face expectantly.

Pamela puckered her brows in an effort to meet that expectancy halfway, but failed.
